MOVING PICTURES TO SELL AUTOS.

Studebaker Sales Manager Will Give Prospective Purchasers a "Reel" Demonstration.

THE moving picture camera was introduced into the local automobile and film industry in a new phase last week by Paul G. Hoffman, sales manager of the Studebaker Company, on Grand avenue. And now the motion picture promises to return much of the good which the motor car has done for the film.

It is hard to bring a mile-long, 40 per cent. hill to the salesroom. But Hoffman, like a modern Mohammed, brought the mountain to him—in pictures. And this, Hoffman explains, is why he did it.

"Selling automobiles in 1916 is going to be a battle royal for records that demonstrate power. The days when a man would be satisfied to see a car climb over Grand avenue hill, Los Angeles, are past.

"Every city has its hill—Chicago, its famous 'Algonquin;' Wilkesbarre, Pa., its 'Giant's Despair;' Seattle, its 'East Aloha.'"

The advent of the new Studebaker Six made it necessary for the sales department to find something new. Universal City is the notorious "Big U" mountain, made famous in motion pictures, over which no motor vehicle has ever made a track—and this was chosen.

It is natural that a new thriller, suggested by an automobile sales manager, should be greeted with interest and enthusiasm by the entire population of Universal City. So it was noised abroad that the new car would buck "Big U" mountain, and many officials gathered.

The throttle was opened and the rocks and gravel began to fly. Half way up the car started sliding backwards until the spinning rear wheels could dig down to solid footing and start it up again. At this point all four doors were opened to permit of hasty exit in event of disaster, but the "six" plowed two furrows clear up the face of "Big U" and amid the cheers of an entire film city brought up triumphantly at the summit.

The descent was made in safety until the driver, responding to the cheers below, forgot for a moment and waved his hand, at which the car started sliding sideways with both wheels locked. At this moment the director, who had been beside the camera, shouted to the operator: "Keep a-shootin'; they're going to turn over in spite of everything." "Rotten luck," said the cameraman as the automobile reached the bottom right side up, but from the passengers came: "Thank heaven! Never again!"

And this film is now used as a part of the regular demonstration of this car.

SCREEN CLUB REORGANIZES.

Officers Elected and Plans for New Organization Under Way.

Wednesday evening a number of photoplayers gathered at the Hoffman cafe to discuss the idea of bringing to life the long-deceased Photoplayers' Club, under a new name. Many actors, and in fact everyone connected with the industry, would be delighted if the old club could once more climb to the top of the social ladder.

Over fifty prominent screen actors were present. After the dinner the open meeting started. It was unanimously decided that Fred Mace should act as chairman of the meeting, and he was later proposed for president, to which office he was elected. Del Henderson was made vice-president. Upon suggestion of Mr. Mace, it was decided to select a secretary who was not actually facing the camera and yet who would be well acquainted with every photoplayer on the coast. The name of Clarke Irvine was suggested and accepted. Al W. Filson was made treasurer, and before the evening closed took in nearly $150 in membership fees. Gene Pallette was selected chairman of the advisory committee. Membership committee: Charles Murray, chairman; Fred Kley, Gene Pallette, Billy Wolbert, Charles Ray, Jack Pickford, Joe De Grasse. Committee to select suitable location was named. They are Fred Kley, chairman; Clarke Irvine, J. C. Jessen, T. W. Haas.

It is the idea of the new organization to give a large ball to raise funds with which to buy the bonds from those who hold them, raise money with which to rent a suite of rooms, and open the club again under a new and stronger name with a representative membership from the many studios in and about this city.

MILLER'S THEATER PACKED.

Fox's "The Soul of Broadway" Given a Pre-View at the Main Street House, Which Is to Be Enlarged.

Last Tuesday evening the Fox production, "The Soul of Broadway," written and produced by Herbert Brenon for William Fox, was given a pre-view in Miller's theater, on Main street. Manager Fred A. Miller was present, and Harry Leonhardt, who is the special western representative of the Fox Film Corporation, and who is now in Los Angeles, was the host.

Valeska Suratt, the star who is different, was the feature of the big picture.

Miss Suratt had never seen the picture complete and it was enjoyable to sit near her and listen to her humorous remarks as the picture progressed.

There were present about five hundred prominent persons, including press people, players, theater men, and friends of the Fox Company.

After the pre-view Mr. Miller spoke well of his services, saying that "the Fox program surely is a lifesaver." Mr. Miller is at present improving his theater by remodeling and enlarging it considerably. The seating capacity is now seven hundred and fourteen, but probably three hundred more chairs will be added. A strip of ground forty feet wide has been acquired, and the house will be enlarged. The stage will be moved back, allowing space for additional seats. Rest and smoking rooms are to be added, and the whole house put into shape for much larger business.

At present, Mr. Miller is showing "A Little Gypsy," and next week will run "The Soul of Broadway," followed by the Fox "Carmen."

Miss Suratt has just finished a strenuous tour of the Orpheum circuit and will remain in Los Angeles to appear in pictures for the Lasky Company. She has already removed her thirty-five trunks, which contain her mystifying wardrobe to the studio in Hollywood.

BROOKS OPENS OLD MOZART THEATER.

In Los Angeles we are having some changes. The old Mozart theater, on Grand avenue, has been reopened with Fox films as the drawing card, and Manager Brooks has been packing them in to see "The Two Orphans," featuring Theda Bara. The house is modern and up-to-date and ought to pay well with Fox's Features.

REALISTIC BILLIARD GAME IN PICTURE.

The other day at the Vitagraph studio, when Billy Wolbert was putting on "When Lin Came Home," he had a billiard table in the background and assigned two men to play a tentative game. Unknown to Mr. Wolbert, he had selected two rival "billiard sharks"—and the game they started during the first rehearsal continued through the taking of the scene and a long time after.

When the action of the scene was done satisfactorily, the extras were all dismissed—but still the game continued. So Mr. Wolbert, investigating, found himself interested—and many others followed his example. An absorbed circle soon surrounded the players and the victory of the local favorite was the cause for much rejoicing. George Holt was the victor. George is a regular pool and billiard "shark" and can play a fast game, but nowadays he is mostly playing "blocks" and "trains" with George, Jr.

VEBER UND FIELTS AT KEYSTONE.

That the well-known and popular team of Weber and Fields intend staying some time in Los Angeles was shown this week when the two funny men purchased an immense touring car which they use to carry them to and from the Sennett Playground. The two Dutchmen are seen trying to vivisect the car, and when Lew shorted the magneto it killed the engine. His partner quickly tickled the carburetor and restored the car to life. Everywhere the pair go in the big machine they create a scene which causes many laughs.

GLENDALE MAY HAVE ANOTHER STUDIO.

Plans have been completed, according to an authentic report from the Glendale Chamber of Commerce, whereby a large new studio will be built in that city, the present home of the Kalem Company.

The plant will have a weekly payroll of at least $20,000, according to statistics furnished Chamber of Commerce officials, and will employ hundreds of men and women.

Arrangements for the plant were probably made in less time than any like deal ever completed. A representative of the moving picture company told them he wished to obtain a site within the city limits. He was later told that a plot of eight acres had been obtained and now the contract is being drawn up.

The name of the new concern is being withheld until company officials wish to make it public.

Glendale Day at the Mission play was set for October 28. Automobile and railroad parties are being formed.

John S. McGroarty, author of the famous play, delivered a farewell address to the Chamber of Commerce, announcing his intention to take the Mission play on a world tour soon.

BILLIE BURKE LEAVES INCEVILLE.

A cloud hangs over the studio of Thomas H. Ince, veteran producer who makes big films for the Triangle. Reason: Billie Burke, the charming little star, has gone away, but she will be long remembered for her many cunning actions.

Thomas H. Ince and Billie Burke Rehearsing a Scene.

Principal among the events in which Miss Burke figured conspicuously during her last week at Inceville was another deed similar to that performed by her when she drove a racing automobile through a fusillade of mud and stones. In her role of the American hoyden who goes to Scotland and becomes embroiled in a controversy with the sedate natives, she was compelled to submit to a complete immersion in a deep pool of water. The scene depicts her cleaning herself of the mud thrown at her by the enraged Scots who had resented her pranks. Instead of having to obtain permission for the use of one of the beautiful fountains that adorn most of the private estates in Pasadena, Ince built a massive fountain at the plant.

A great crowd gathered to watch Miss Burke "go through the ducking," but for the most part it was made up of those who had been appearing in her support, so she didn't seem uneasy. When Ince was ready to take the scenes he ordered the water turned on, and immediately the fountain became active. Great volumes of water rose into the air and fell gracefully into the pool at its base.

Suddenly, Ince instructed Miss Burke to wade in. And while four cameras recorded her actions, the beautiful star, still garbed in boy's clothing, stepped over the edge of the pool and splashed into the water. She disported awhile, and then climbed out. Untidy as she looked, she smiled at her plight and quizzically surveyed Ince with an air of solicitation as to his future plans. Learning that "that will be all today," Miss Burke hurried to her dressing rooms and soon reappeared, looking none the worse for her experience.

THOMAS DIXON SETTLES IN HOLLYWOOD.

Thomas Dixon, former Baptist minister and widely known as the author of "The Clansman" and nine other novels, is another addition to the rapidly-growing literary colony of Hollywood. Mr. Dixon has taken a year's lease on a house at 7018 Hawthorne avenue.

Furthermore, Mr. Dixon expects to establish another studio in Hollywood in the near future where he will make a picture of his latest novel, "The Fall of a Nation."

Mr. Dixon is director general of the National Drama Corporation, which has the motion picture rights to most of the novels that he has produced and to all his literary output for the next five years.

According to reports, Mr. Dixon expects to make 200,000 feet of film. An enormous expense will be involved, as it is estimated that the cost of the picture will exceed that of the "Clansman" by a great percentage. Mrs. Dixon and their son will soon join the author in Hollywood.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Terribly scratched and clawed by an infuriated leopard was the painful experience of Mark Scanlon, an animal trainer employed at the Selig Zoo this week. Scanlon entered the cage to feed the spotted performers, and one of the lithe cats made a leap for the man's throat. Scanlon was painfully but not seriously injured.

For the production of the old play "Rosemary," at the Quality studios, Director General Fred J. Balshofer is spending considerable time and money in securing the proper settings for the play. Even the furniture is a feature of the story, some very rare antique pieces having been used. They are from the personal collection of a prominent Los Angeles artist, Mrs. Jeanette G. Donovan. The collection was a regular "discovery" for the film men, and they were lucky in securing the furniture for the feature film.

Billy Garwood is now at work once more on the coast. He is playing in "The Journal of Lord John," at the Universal, with Stella Razeto opposite. Ed. J. Le Saint is directing.

Hal Roach, director of the "Phunphilms," made by the Rolin Film Company, has gone to New York on business. He will be away several weeks. The company is enjoying a vacation, but will resume production when he returns.

M. H. Lewis, branch manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Company in Los Angeles, has taken three new office rooms to enlarge the present quarters of the Paramount. He has, as his guest this week, Carl H. Pierce, of New York, who is the special representative for the Morosco Company and Pallas Pictures. Mr. Pierce has not previously been here for some time, and is delighted with the city and the film industry.

Universal City has been named as one of the points of interest to be visited by the delegation of Japanese newspapermen who recently left the land of Nippon for a tour of the United States. The journalists are coming at the request of the Japanese of California that they may learn for themselves the attitude of Americans towards their countrymen. After a stay of several days in San Francisco, the party is to travel south and on their way to the San Diego exposition spend one day at the picture city as guests of Director General Henry McRae, who is always on deck to meet prominent people, in addition to looking over the great city which he controls.

The power of the picture is certainly being recognized when film plays and ideas creep into the song writer's bonnet. Now comes a new ditty which will be one of the popular pieces of dance music this fall. It is "Neal of the Navy March," named for the patriotic photoplay serial which Balboa filmed for Pathe. It was composed by Douglas Bronston, who adapted the scenario from W. H. Osborn's story, "Neal of the Navy." The music has a good swing and has caught the public favor, like its pictureplay namesake.

Eddie Foy, Mrs. Foy, Mary Foy, Madeline Foy, Irving Foy, Charles Foy, Bryan Foy, Dick Foy and Eddie Foy, Jr., members of the little family of Foys, forming Foylets, Foyettes, and Foyers, were hosts and hostesses at a box party at the beach at Ocean Park this week, entertaining a number of their film friends at dancing. All had a good time. Supper was served after the dance at the Foy Inn on the strand.

"Rotund" Roscoe, Fatty Arbuckle has been directing a two-reel comedy in which most of the scenes are laid on the beach, in the surf and in the bath houses of Ocean Park. One of the thrilling incidents of the story is the leap of an automobile and an electric beach chair from a thirty-foot pier into the ocean. Minta Durfee, who was the occupant of the chair, narrowly escaped drowning as the heavy battery caused it to gradually settle into the water after the drop. The prompt action of Arbuckle, who freed himself from the wrecked automobile and went to her aid averted what for a time looked like a disaster.

Picture Theater Jottings.

The Auditorium theater, of Brea, has changed hands, J. E. Searl, formerly of Hemet, having purchased the show house from Messrs. Van Hoorebeke and Peterkin. Mr. Searl and his wife take charge of the business.

Mr. and Mrs. Searl are exhibitors of extensive experience. They have conducted successful houses at San Jacinto and Hemet, only recently disposing of their interests there.

The new proprietors have put a new Power's 6-A machine in the Auditorium. They have arranged for the newest and best pictures obtainable. They are to have a five-reel show at 5 and 10 cents, giving a three-reel feature and two single comedies. Thursday night will be their big feature night, and for these shows they have arranged to get new "Metro" pictures.

In relinquishing the ownership of the Auditorium, Messrs. Van Hoorebeke and Peterkin do so with the record of having made the picture show business in Brea a very remunerative venture after many others had failed. Among the elements of their success might be considered a better house, later equipment, stronger pictures, thoughtful and courteous consideration for their patrons, and last, but not least, a liberal use of printer's ink, which is absolutely necessary to success in all lines of business, again proving that "Advertising DOES Pay."

Riverside, one of the busiest of cities within a radius of one hundred miles of our city, is undergoing a regular moving picture over-hauling. The Loring theater, one of the oldest playhouses on the coast, is to be remodeled and improved. The proposed reconstruction will cost over $11,000. This is the result of the lease being cancelled by C. L. Nye. The opera house will be opened and run as a large feature theater, with all modern equipment for the exhibition of the best films. The man who intends opening the house will put $9,000 into the equipping of the place, making a total improvement of over $20,000.

It is said that a company is being formed to build a first-class house in this city to show big pictures. G. A. Dundas is said to be one of the promoters.

Culver City, where Thomas H. Ince is erecting a new studio, has opened a playhouse. E. C. Stowell, of Los Angeles, is the manager, and will run a large program of current releases. The little city is only fifteen miles from the heart of the big city, and is midway between it and the several beach resorts.

* * *

W. H. Clune, the California picture magnate, has reopened his Santa Ana theater, the Auditorium. The house has been thoroughly remodeled and improved, including tinting, new box office and many other things necessary to the prefect presentation of the latest moving picture plays. The house is under the management of Sam O. Wesley.

E. F. Mohler, of Florence, has started a new theater in his city at Sixty-fourth street and Compton avenue.

"Amusu" is the name of a new house in Phoenix that an exhibitor advises us was opened. The theater is run by Messrs. Mauck and Rickards, of that city. The new amusement place has just been remodeled and improved. It embraces the old Star and Regale theaters.

H. L. Manahan, manager of the Brawley theater, in this city, bearing the same name, has purchased the Gilbo theater and will continue running it in conjunction with his other house.

The Pastime theater, in Eureka, is about to be sold by the firm of Pettingill & Pettingill to Charles W. Ebelling, of Santa Rosa, who will take over the house and run it as heretofore. Mr. Ebelling is a veteran exhibitor.

Harry Johnson has purchased the interest of Harvey Hill in the Yuma theater, at Yuma, and intends running the house as it has been run in the past.

M. H. Granholt has opened a small house in the City Hall Block in Willowbrook. Mr. Granholt is from Long Beach and will devote a part of his time to the new showhouse.

At Downev, close to Los Angeles, A. S. Gray has opened a new picture house. The theater is in a building that was formerly used for stores. The house is modern in every way and shows a big program.

The Men in the Mirror

New Producing Company Puts Forward Captains of Industry.

THAT business men of large affairs are taking a greater interest in the manufacture of the motion picture and its possibilities than they have ever taken before is indicated by the news which comes from the offices of the Mirror Films, Incorporated, at 16 East 42d street, that several of the business and professional men who are officers and members of its board of directors are to go on the executive committee which has been formed with a view to taking a very large part in the doings of the concern in all its branches.

This announcement was made by Clifford B. Harmon, president of the corporation, who will head the executive committee. The committee, Mr. Harmon said, would be in the nature of an advisory board for which men with artistic ability and a sense of dramatic values had been chosen.

The executive committee will be made up, in addition to Mr. Harmon, of Captain Lambart, who will be director of all productions; Frank S. Hastings, who is treasurer of the company and whose love of music has been one of the chief supports of good music in the city; Andres de Segurola, one of the principal artists of the Metropolitan Opera Company, a lawyer and a man of literary attainments in his native language; William J. Hoggson, president of Hoggson Bros., Inc., a vice-president of the company, and a man whose artistic ideas have made beautiful the outlines and general appointments of many banking houses; and Rich. G. Hollaman, known to the amusement business of the country as one of the most successful men who ever conducted a permanent enterprise in the field.

ARTHUR LESLIE CHARGES CONSPIRACY.

It is announced that Arthur Leslie has been granted by the Supreme Court an order to show cause why the officers and governors of the Screen Club should not be enjoined from placing him on trial on October 26th. Summonses and complaints have been served on King Baggot, Paul Scardon, James Kirkwood, Jules Burnstein, George F. Blaisdell, Frank Powell, Ben F. Wilson, William Barry, James Gordon, Jacob H. Gerhardt, William Quirk and David B. Wall, individually and as the Board of Governors of the Screen Club.

Mr. Leslie, in his affidivit, charges conspiracy to place him on trial for his aggressive campaign methods at the recent Screen Club election. He asserts that at the last regular meeting of the Board of Officers, held on Oct. 11th, at which he was not present, a resolution was rushed through to place him on trial before the newly elected officers, who are friendly to him, took office.

HERE'S $10,000 FOR AN IDEA.

How would you like to have $10,000? It is easy to get. All that is necessary is to write the best suggestion for a sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" and the money is yours. And in writing the sequel suggestion, one should consider well these points:

What becomes of the "Diamond"?
What becomes of the child?
What is the fate of Blair Stanley?
What happens to Vivian Marston?

It is unnecessary for one who tries for this fortune to possess any literary genius as the judges who will make decision will pay no attention to style, phraseology or vocabulary. All they will be interested in will be the central idea and if the idea is a practical one replete with picture possibilities and suited to be a sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," then the writer of it will come into $10,000.

The scenario for this big picturized novel won for its author, Roy L. McCardell, $10,000, and any motion picture fan anywhere has opportunity to duplicate the good fortune of Mr. McCardell and annex the $10,000 now being offered for a suitable suggestion for a sequel.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

KNICKERBOCKER THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

An Old-Time But Substantial Market Place Is Converted into Photoplay House.

FOUR substantial walls, a weather-tight roof sufficiently elevated, a populous locality and an enterprising imagination can produce an exceedingly successful motion picture theater, if the experience of the Knickerbocker Theater Company of Louisville, Ky., means what it seems to. The story of how a small group of Louisville men converted an old public market house, on its last legs in that capacity, into a picture theater which made good from the start, contains numerous suggestions which should be helpful to exhibitors in other cities of the country.

From Civil War times until the end of the summer of 1914, the old Boone Market House, at 18th and Market streets, one of several similar public markets, had sheltered the stalls of butchers, green grocers and other vendors of foodstuffs. In the early days it was a bustling corner. In recent years, however, the delivery wagons of the neighborhood grocers, the convenient telephones and the credit systems in vogue crippled the old Boone Market. It is a barn-like structure, 50 feet front and 150 feet deep. The walls, which rise to about 20 feet, are of brick, with pilasters at intervals on the outer surfaces, the interior being finished plain. Aside from the front entrance there is a rear door which opens into a yard, while on the long 18th street side, four doors open immediately onto the street. The walls on each side are provided with four windows. When Mr. Tapp and his associates first inspected the property it was not a very promising-looking place, but Mr. Tapp saw in it a 50x120-foot auditorium already built and waiting for him. And it could be leased for ten years at $100 a month.

Knickerbocker Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The lease was signed up and in September of 1914 the Knickerbocker Theater Company took possession. In thirty days the alterations which had been undertaken were completed and the first pictures were thrown on the screen to a full house. These alterations were not in the least elaborate. Principally they consisted of clearing out the interior, removal of the old floor and construction of a 9 by 15-foot concrete operating room. The wide Market street entrance readily became the opening to the entrance lobby, which was set back fifteen feet from the front line. The roof rafters were covered with tongued and grooved flooring, which was neatly fitted around the big rafters. These were left exposed and painted white, as is the rest of the interior woodwork. The interior wall surfaces were smoothed up and painted in a soft tone and the window glass darkened. Light tight doors opening onto 18th street were installed, and when a wooden floor, sloping slightly toward the screen, had been laid and seats provided, the new theater was ready for business. There was not the slightest cutting into the old walls. Altogether, the remodeling operations which preceded the opening cost less than $5,000. In order to undertake the enterprise, the Knickerbocker Company was organized at the time the building was discovered. The company has an authorized capital stock of $5,000, and the officers of the company are: President, Dr. C. W. Barnes; vice-president, C. Smith; secretary-treasurer, W. T. Milton and general manager, William Tapp.

No expense was spared in equipping the operating room, Mr. Tapp, who is an experienced operator himself, being convinced that this is probably the all-important feature of a successful theater. Two 6A Power's machines, a Fort Wayne motor generator and all the latest and most approved equipment are provided here. What was the hardest "nut" of all to crack was the problem of heating and ventilation. The latter feature was taken care of adequately by ventilators placed in the roof; but it was found that too much cost would be involved in excavating a basement, so two large coal stoves were put into use the first winter. These seemed to answer the purpose satisfactorily, although this winter a third stove near the entrance will be put in service to check the draft from the entrance doors. With seats provided, this was the Knickerbocker theater as it was passed on readily and favorably by the building inspectors and opened to the public a year ago. It is a five-cent house. The theater was constructed without the necessity of going into debt, and dividends have been regular and satisfactory. Further testimony as to the statement that this is one of the successful small theaters in Louisville is given in the option the operators have taken on a space of 65 feet at the rear of the present building. Next spring the two small buildings now on this site will be replaced by an addition to the theater which will increase the seating capacity in connection with the rearrangement of existing seats from 500 to 750.

The General twenty-day program is used at the Knickerbocker, Mr. Tapp believing that it meets the wants of the theater's patrons in a sufficient way. Sunday afternoon programs constitute the only matinee runs of the week, the nightly runs beginning at 6:30 o'clock and concluding at 10 o'clock, except when there is something special to require longer runs. Saturday and Sunday nights, as might be expected, are the best from the box office angle, and the theater has shown to as many as 3,000 persons during the Sunday runs, when the offerings included extra good, well-balanced bills. Mr. Tapp maintains that an evenly-balanced program, pictures projected as they ought to be and at a price which the prospective theatergoers can afford to pay are essentials to a successful motion picture business. He has found that the class of picture fans the Knickerbocker theater caters to prefers two-reel or single-reel subjects to those which are more extended, and the Knickerbocker makes a practice of never showing a film of more than three reels. Vaudeville, "amateur nights," give-away inducements have no place in the plan of operations of this company. The general manager of the Knickerbocker gives careful attention to his job. Every program gets a thorough inspection before it is announced. All films which Mr. Tapp considers over-colored and all those which contain hints of suggestiveness are rigorously eliminated. Comedy subjects generally take very well.

All the stock of the company is in the hands of the four officers, who find no difficulty in operating with thorough harmony. Mr. Tapp, who has been in the "game" for twelve years, came to Louisville in 1908, when the Majestic Amusement Company built its first theater. At the instance of L. J. Dittmar, Mr. Tapp came to take charge of the projecting department of the theater, having previously been engaged at Indianapolis. At that time the Majestic showed from behind the screen, with a thirty-foot throw, a system that Mr. Tapp still prefers, although property values in the cities make the system impracticable in many cases. Mr. Tapp continues as chief operator of the Majestic and works on a swing watch, which enables him to give his attention to the Knickerbocker every other night.

The Knickerbocker force consists of August Ainsbach, the operator; Norbert Kriel, his assistant, who also officiates at times as usher; Dr. C. W. Barnes, the ticket-seller and assistant to Mr. Tapp; a second usher, and Mr. Tapp himself. With all of these men attending strictly to business, and all working for the best interests of the theater, it will be seen that the expense is held to a minimum.

British Notes

AT THE moment of writing, circulars and prospectuses of new or recently floated kinematograph enterprises are unusually fruitful, and America is not without its representatives in the Lombard street area. Possibly the governmental restraint over the investment of capital necessitating the Treasury's sanction to all new share issues and new company incorporations has indirectly some bearing upon it. It is a delicate task to get a new company registered under the limited liability acts nowadays and only the other week one new venture which was turned down at Somerset House adopted the expedient of becoming incorporated under American law and commenced its business forthwith. Of the new American concerns now in the London money market for support the most notable is the Triangle Film Corporation, the outcome of the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett compact. A Wall street syndicate has—so its circulars assert—the writing up of the entire stock of the Triangle Corporation, something like $5,000,000, and is already assiduously at work circularizing investors on this side.

To facilitate the working of the new policy recently adopted by the Essanay Company in Great Britain for renting their films direct a new subsidiary company, named the Essanay Film Service, Limited, has come into being. The capital of the company is £2,000, of which all but one share is held by Mr. H. A. Spoor.

The all-conquering kinema does not appear to have overcome entirely the petty prejudices of some of our public officials against it. Unfortunately it is not uncommon to find those in high office forcing their personal bias, sometimes obnoxiously, upon the public. Sir Forrest Fulton, addressing the grand jury at the Old Bailey in the hearing of a manslaughter charge against Montague Pyke, ex-managing director of a large circuit of moving picture theaters, and his engineer, took full advantage of the opportunity to foist a few absurd observations on kinemas. The charge against Pyke and his engineer arose from a workman being burnt to death while soldering up film storage tins in one of Pyke's theaters. The grand jury, however, obviously impressed by Sir Forrest Fulton's irrelevancies, unceremoniously threw out the charge against both.

The Hepworth Company is offering to the public in conjunction with a new advertising campaign inaugurated in daily newspapers one or two novel prizes to the public. For the best criticism of a Hepworth picture a cash prize is offered or as an alternative "the privilege of appearing in a Hepworth picture with all expenses paid." Nothing is said about salary. The second is also a cash prize with the alternative "prize" of "having your own picture play produced with your own name upon it." Apparently the Walton firm does not overrate the creative intellect of their contestants. If the last clause (quoted as given) is a legally binding one, the Hepworth Company might find themselves in an awkward predicament. One young wag with a demi-monde scenario that would pale "Sapho" into utter insignificance means to win that second prize.

Paul Kimberley, on behalf of Thanhouser Films, Limited, is extending the tentacles of the London organization to the provinces, obviously with the desire to cater on a more extensive plan for exhibitors preferring open market and single-reel features. The first move to be made is at Cardiff, the commercial capital of South Wales, where premises at 17 Castle street were opened a fortnight ago. Probably Manchester will be the next extension. The Trans-Atlantic Company has for some time been in contemplation of opening out in the latter city, but so far this likely development has not eventuated.

Lupino Lane is a stage comedian by descent but a moving picture comedian by persuasion. He is as well known in the States as here and he is the most recent star of the legitimate constellation to succumb to the spell of kinemacraft. His is the fourth generation of a family of pantomime comedians and so close do the traditions of his predecessors cling that Lupino is booked up for pantomime engagements nearly a decade ahead of time. Davison's Film Sales Agency will deal exclusively with Lupino Lane's screen appearances, and the first release is anxiously awaited.

I recently saw a novel and original reconstruction of the electric piano, called the Kinelectric Piano, and one that promises to be quite a boon to the exhibitor whom necessity compels to run his show on a small staff. The piano, in tone and appearance like the ordinary electric instrument, may be placed in any part of the auditorium and connected up with a switchboard fixed in the operating chamber. The special point of the invention is its absolute control of musical measure, for by two distinct mechanical appliances embodied in the frame the operator can, at will, press the Tempo Furioso button and accompany the battle picture on the screen. Instantaneously he can cut it out and turn on the Andante or Allegro for the dying dastardly villain. If he forgets to change—well, the imagination has to do the accompanying. Unfortunately, experience indicates no compromise between certain operators' notions of musical time and projecting speed. If one has to keep up with the other there are prospects of a slump on the scrap metal market.

The mystical status of the "Queer Stories" in "Truth" is known the length and breadth of the country. The inspiration of some of the most noted works of modern mystery fiction has been directly tracked to this source. Consequently, a little discreet advertisement emanating from the Motion Picture Sales Company, the agents here for the enterprising American Biograph Company, who have secured film rights of the tabloid tales, has been more than sufficient to set a thrill-loving public on the tip-toe of expectancy. At the time of writing, no public advertisement nor announcement has been issued by the agents. A good film of a good story needs little or no beating of the big drum, and the American Biograph's queer pictures from "Truth" are getting all the advertisement they need in the literary clubs.

"The Seats of the Mighty," a drama of intrigue in French courtier days, by Sir Gilbert Parker, and visualized by the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, first saw the light of the lantern at the West End Cinema, London, last week. John D. Walker has received an encouraging and congratulatory letter from Hall Caine, the author of "The Eternal City," the filmed version of the Famous Players Company, having been exhibited in London the other day. "A severe cold," writes the eminent fictionist, "will compel me at the last moment to deprive myself the pleasure of being present at the first public exhibition of the film. * * * It would not become me to express any opinion of the story of the film, but I think I can quite properly say that when I saw the private view of it I was very deeply impressed by the skill with which the incidents had been told in pictures without the help of words. I was also much moved by the beauty and pathos of the Roman setting and can truly say that never before to my knowledge has modern Rome been so faithfully, so vividly and so dramatically presented. I do not doubt that this aspect of the "Eternal City" film will appeal profoundly not only to the great world of Catholics * * * but also to the large public whose eyes are now turned towards Italy in her great struggle of the present conflict. I wish you every success with your wonderful film and feel honored that a work of mine should be associated with it."

A curious censorship anomaly has been precipitated by the film "Five Nights," a visualization of the notorious novel of that name by Victoria Cross. When the makers, the Barker Company of London, submitted it to the British Board of Film Censors, it passed unquestioned in the A class for exhibition (preferably) to adult audiences. The chief constable of Preston, the legislative capital of Lancashire, however, held his own opinion, a different one, and incontinently banned the film within a few hours of its arrival. Mr. G. A. Redford, the president of the Shaftesbury avenue tribunal immediately publicly expressed his annoyance at the action of the interfering official and in unmistakable phrase we see in grotesque incongruity the unofficial censor remonstrating at the official objector. The principle of censorship was designed to suppress unsuitable productions but if one effect of a cure that is already worse than the complaint is to intoxicate every chief constable in the kingdom into the belief that he, and he alone, is the chosen film arbiter of the Almighty, our home manufacturers will have only themselves to thank for the chaotic conditions that will inevitably ensue. The unhappy position of exhibitors in certain States of the Union through censorship misapplication might yet arouse an incentive over here to nip the trouble in the bud.

By general concession a single-reel film recently taken in France by the Gaumont Company in collaboration with the official cameramen of the French government is admitted to be the most successful war picture yet brought across the Channel. It centers entirely around Lord Kitchener's recent visit to the firing lines and portrays among other celebrities General Joffre and M. Millerand.

Metropolitan Briefs.

The advance of the autumn with its more settled prospect for the small exhibitor is, as usual, bringing its pre-season's flutter into the Gerrard street dovecotes. The universal demand through the winter will, of course, be for features, and the bigger the better. On the other hand, there is a more marked and growing demand for split-reel or short pictures. Even in the center of London there are one or two shows which constitute their programs with no single subject over one thousand feet in length. The continued exploitation of the very long film has made some people turn to the other side of the scale. If there is any philosophy in the law of opposites, the manufacturer who keeps his eye on the strong short plot will not be disappointed the way it will sell over here.

With the new Pathe serial, "Exploits of Elaine," just about to start its career in this country, the full force of the extraordinary advertising effort and genius which accompanied the exhibition of the film in America seems to have blown into the Metropolis in one blast. To the ordinary public one day last month it was unknown. The next it was a perfect obsession. Every bus between Piccadilly and the Bank heralded the mysterious Elaine. Close up to 50,000 double crown, three, six and twelve-sheet posters announced their pictorial message from almost every station, tube lift, passenger vehicle and boarding in the district, while mysterious hieroglyphs on women's hats in the streets commanded fickle Dame Fashion to the aid of the advertiser. As a publicity campaign it will soon pass and be forgotten, but as a masterpiece of organization it will long be remembered.

The Importance to the Film of Interior Details

By Edwin Jay Herts, Decorator.

HOW often a good film has been marred by the lack of attention paid to the detail of interiors is the too familiar cry of the film-going public, and how to apply an immediate remedy to this grievous fault should be the most vital concern of the producer. With a director given full rein to spend money in the production of a feature film and with, we might say, unlimited cash at his command towards the accomplishment of the result, why, when it is necessary to provide the proper inside sets for his scenario does he utterly fall down? Is it because the property room has so little stock and because that which it has is of one kind that he is compelled to resort to make-shift scenes as a frame for his pictures? Or is it because the director is not sufficiently conversant with details to know the importance of accuracy?

I can safely assert that seven-tenths of the interiors of living rooms or drawing rooms that I have seen screened employ a suite of Jacobean furniture. I have seen this same set used in three successive releases by a well known film company and by changing the pieces around, try to convey an entirely different effect. I say "try" because, to my mind, the persons who regularly attend the picture houses are wide awake enough and enlightened to the extent of being able to recognize, no matter in what position they are placed, the same three-back settee and the same high back chairs with turned legs.

I have noticed scenes that called for a French interior have this identical furniture thrust into them. I have seen modern furniture, such as the product of the craftsman's art, used in a production, the scenes of which were laid during the reign of Louis XV. of France. I have witnessed the introduction of furniture of the Victorian age in a film masterpiece of the Napoleonic period. I have observed these flagrant errors in the selection of furniture time and time again, and feel that, without an emphatic protest from those whose interest in the films is sincere, the same inconsistencies will continue.

Just as the stage has, for the last ten years, gradually departed from the imitation in stage setting, so surely do the film producers realize that the time has come when they can no longer foist upon an intelligent assemblage such horrors as painted back drops and papier mache balconies. So surely will the knowing film goers be able to distinguish between the company who considers the application of accuracy in detail a mere trifle and the company who is putting the best of everything obtainable into their productions.

I noticed in a recently released film a pleasing diversion from the usual glaring incongruities so manifold in the average picture. The president of the company who produced this film is the owner of a magnificently furnished and richly apportioned house, and, with a view of obtaining the best possible results in the scenes that called for interiors, he placed his house and contents at the disposal of the director, who was clever enough to take advantage of an unusual opportunity and obtain results in effects rarely, if ever, seen. It was indeed a privilege to be brought so close to the intimate surroundings of a man whose pride in his home was exemplified by the careful selection of the contents. Is there not sufficient satisfaction for this true artist of the films in the knowledge that the beauty of his possessions gave the picture a touch of livableness that other pictures lack?

A great fault which should and can be remedied is the massing together of pieces of furniture which look as if they were just assembled for the picture. No air of comfort! None of harmony! A scene that calls for a living room should contain the atmosphere that such a room possesses. A room that seems to have been lived in, a room that makes people forget the fact that the contents were placed there by a director as a setting for the taking of his picture. Reality is the slogan. And the aim of "Fewer Films and Better Ones" can never be fully realized until the companies who wish to produce these films appreciate the importance of accuracy in detail.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Boomeranged.

EVIDENTLY it does not always pay to boom your production. R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., calls attention to this fact in relating his recent experiences with one of the feature releasing companies. For months he boomed the brand and attractions lavishly, both in his house and house organ and in the newspapers and billboards. Then, without the slightest warning, the service was taken from him and given to a competing house. He was not even permitted an opportunity to raise the offer of the competitor. And to rub it in, the competing house, in its announcement, remarks:

> Of course it is useless to extol the merits of these productions, as they have been shown in Montgomery regularly and our competitors have sung their praises for months.

Naturally the new house makes all possible capital of the advertising campaign of the opposition, but it is a shortsighted and misguided exchange management that will switch service in so cavalier a manner and expect to keep on doing business in that territory.

Don't be a come-on for the exchange manager. Tie him up to a contract and make him give one before you start in to make valuable another man's trade mark.

Better still, boom your house and its management and boom the attractions without the brand. The matter has been brought to the attention of those who are in control of the distribution of the product.

Follows Kellette.

A. William Ehlers, of the Plaza, Baltimore, sends in some card programs patterned in its lay-out after the Kellette program given in Picture Theater Advertising. He uses a five by seven card, folded once to get four well-proportioned pages, with plenty of space for the week's program, some underline and foreign advertising on the inside, a front page house chat and a foreign advertisement on the back.

The heading is not clear, the block letter "Plaza" being obscured by a wreath of film, and the address is too small and inconspicuous to be read. A new block should be made giving just the title of the house, and the address and times of performance should be added in type just below. Then there will still be plenty of room for the house chat.

Mr. Ehlers writes that few of the Baltimore houses use much advertising, but that he finds that it pays. Very probably others would, too, did they try it.

The program replaces a similar sized card, printed on one side only for a single attraction. At slightly larger cost (and this is more than covered by the additional advertising) he gets a full week before the reader in more attractive form. A tendency to over-illustration should be checked. Good type is better than poor draftsmanship.

Better Type.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Comique, New Bedford, Mass., sends in a weekly program on a single sheet nine by eleven. The first impression is that too much type is used, but the type is much better selected than for some of the specimens Mr. Chenoweth has submitted in the past, and there is not too much type for the number of attractions. The trouble is that he tries to get too many days on a one-side throwaway. It looks confused and uninviting to the eye and the chance recipient does not take the trouble to figure out that it is not as difficult to read as it looks. It would be better to discard the paper in favor of a card program, carrying less large type and yet better displayed because better proportioned. But since New Bedford is a mill town, perhaps Mr. Chenoweth finds that the throwaway is better for his purpose. Even at that, it would be better to run only three days to the sheet and come out twice a week. Even on a throwaway the days should be dated.

In Miniature.

Charles Q. Carlisle, of the Mecca, Saginaw, Mich., writes that he has not missed an issue of this paper since he opened the house a year and a half ago. He sends in three issues of his Weekly Reel News, eight page and colored card cover only 2¾ by 4 inches. The front is neatly gotten up, but though it is a weekly, it is dated merely for the month and not "week of." This should be changed to give the inclusive dates. The back page carries the program for the month and the inside cover pages are given over to foreign advertising. In the white form the right hand pages are given to the program announcements, two of the left-hand pages are given to foreign advertising and the others to house chat and a question box. It is neat and complete and is so handy to the pocket that more probably go home with the recipients than would be the case with a bulkier issue. It tells as much as a larger issue, but it tells it compactly.

The first white page is given to a cut and description of some underline. Here the date of appearance (which is subsequent to the week of issue) should always be given in the body of the text; not at the end of the story, but somewhere along the middle with such a line as "This subject, which is booked at the Mecca for October 3rd, is——" The house talk should not be repeated in a following issue. Always give them some new argument and get the fullest possible good out of the program. The same stock house talk used every week does not interest, and sometimes it even tires.

The program is very complete for its size, and if you want a twelve-page V. P. ask Mr. Carlisle for one, and send a return addressed envelope along with your request.

Too Long.

Programs should never be much more than one-third longer than their width, but the Regent and Colonade theaters, Brooklyn, N. Y., use a four pager five by twelve inches, which gives an awkward and rather irritating size. Folded once more and stitched, it would make a neat five by six booklet. Nothing definite indicates that the same program is offered at both houses, but since only one program is announced, it is to be presumed that this is the case.

The trouble with the size is that it gives too much type on one page. The prospect does not stop to realize that he would read it all were the page half the depth. He merely runs his eye down the foot-long columns of mostly six point body and ten and twelve point display, and, unless he is very much interested, he decides that it is too much of a job and throws the sheet away. Eight six inch pages would not have the same effect. It is not the amount of type but the suggestion of oversetting that counts. The man you most want to reach with a program is the man whose interest in your house or the pictures is not already gained. He will not try to persuade himself to read what seems to be too much matter. He will give a single glance and throw the sheet away. Better is the back page where the house talk is opened with lead and made inviting. One argument may be useful to others. It reads:

> "JUNK!"
> Don't Stop! this does not mean pig-iron, scraps or other discarded wearing apparel, when applied to the exhibition of moving pictures. It means, and very appropriately, a program made up of old and INDIGENT films that should have been laid quietly to rest forever. This class of film is "JUNK." If you are not careful where you spend your good money "JUNK" will be sold to you. In fact it will be forced upon you and you must sit and see it or get out, and no money back.
> There are a great number of moving picture theaters that follow the rule of giving you a large pretentious feature on a certain day, paying a high rental price for it and showing it at no advance of admission and without question losing money that day. Don't think for one minute you are ahead. These exhibitors simply do this to get "YOU COMING TO THEIR HOUSE." You do go the next day expecting a treat, and find a program of "JUNK." You go again and find the program "JUNK" and by the time YOU reach that special day again YOU have paid DEARLY for that special feature.
> Now why not attend a moving picture theater where each day's program is as carefully selected with BRAND NEW interesting photoplays as the next day? You will always get your money's worth.

If you run your house right and the other fellow doesn't a campaign of education rather than attack is always the best and most lasting in its effect.

Gets Full Value.

W. C. Harwood, of the Vermont, Toronto, sends two programs and writes that the first week's program brought him the best business he ever had, and that he believes that many came through curiosity who will remain as regular patrons. The programs cost him $7 for 2,000, and he says he would not now be without them for twice their cost. He adds:

> I depend on your column a good deal, and you will doubtless find traces of it in both the numbers enclosed, for the good things one can get out of your too few remarks every week are simply priceless to a wide-awake exhibitor.
> There is no "Bull" about that either, and I am willing to confess that the "World" is my guide and mainstay for everything connected with the business.

The program is too long for its width; 4 by 9½ inches, but it is well laid out. The front carries full information as address, prices and times of performance. The second page is given to chat about the films and the third to the program, six days with three changes. The back page carries three foreign advertisements. In the film chat the use of long dashes between paragraphs interrupts the continuity of some of the talk. It would be better to use a little more type and omit the rule. If it is desired to break up the page, small florets should be used in place of dashes. The matter is well written and deserves a better display. In the program proper it tells about films but does not expose the climax. The program makes a good start, but a change in form will help not a little. There is much to first impressions and the first impression is made by the size and composition of the page.

Take a tip from our "EXHIBITORS' ADVERTISING" Department. It has made money for others.

Programs Pay.

P. E. Schilling, of the Greenwood, Greenwood, Miss., writes that he finds his weekly program a profitable investment since his patrons now ask for them when they miss one and take them home for consultation. They are put out each Saturday for the following week. He uses the Hennegan colored covers, four foreign advertisements on the back, a house argument on the front and gives the inside pages to the program proper. A very little ten to fourteen point display type for titles and italic for the names of players would be a marked improvement. At present it is all machine work, with the titles in capitals. The page is too white. There is no contrast in type and nothing stands out. Just a little hand composition on the titles would make a tremendous difference and not markedly increase the cost. Ten and twelve point display faces should be used for the greater part with fourteen for the star features, and eighteen only for the most unusual attractions, and not every week at that.

An oddity is the scale of prices, ten and twenty cents being charged the whites and five and ten cents for the colored people. Two of the programs carry practically the same line. One reads:

> Do you know that we give a matinee daily at 4. P. M.

The other merely announces:

> Daily matinee at 4 P. M.

The first makes much more of an impression through the slight addition in words.

Mr. Schilling adds:

> I would not be without your good magazine, as it is absolutely my guide for the operation of my business.

We cannot understand any exhibitor being able to do business without the Moving Picture World, no matter what other publications he may receive free. It is as necessary to everyone as is the chart and compass to the navigator.

Dressing Up Postcards.

William P. Donlon, of the Orpheum, Utica, sends in some panel souvenirs that are nothing more than Kraus postcards mounted up. The cards are merely five by seven colored stock, printed up with the name of the house preceded by "Compliments of." They cost about ten cents a hundred and much more than doubled the apparent value of the postals. For the guidance of those who glued the cards, a strip of one point rule was printed at the top where the pasted edge of the card was to come. This made it possible to work rapidly and still with certainty. About one-eighth of an inch of the top was pasted. We believe that photographers use thick shellac varnish instead of glue, as it dries more quickly. These mounted postals form a handsome and very inexpensive souvenir and the same panel idea can be used for some of the advertisements supplied by the companies for features. Care must be taken to have the color of the mount harmonize with the tint of the card, a light lemon and a French grey being the colors used by Mr. Donlon.

He also describes some teasers he used for work, two of them being:

You will want to go to WORK
Monday.

Looking for WORK?
Wait until Monday.

These are scattered through the local papers several days before the film title was used, and as a result the town was watching, and a one-day booking was extended to half a week.

Gets Ideas.

John Henderson, of the Royal, Newcastle-on-Tyne, writes, covering a program and some throwaways:

> I am writing to thank you for several good ideas I have had from the Advertising for Exhibitors' Department. I particularly like the idea of booming "The Black Box" and am using it here. What do you think of the enclosed, re Chaplin? I do not know whether neutral U. S. A. is suffering from Chaplinalia to the same extent as belligerent Britain, but assume it is common to the whole world.

"The Black Box" scheme seems to be the one followed by John William Kellette, and we are glad that Mr. Henderson found it helpful. His program is printed on rather thin paper, as much of the English stock runs. He gets a lot of good outside advertising, but keeps enough space to give proper display to the house attractions, in this case the same "Black Box." The throwaway for Chaplin advertises the same sort of "revue" that we have recently had over here, a combination of several old releases joined up. It is announced as "The Life and Adventures of Charles Chaplin" and includes "Getting Acquainted," "His New Job," "The Property Man," "Cursed by His Beauty," "Mabel's Busy Day," "The Rounders," "The Face on the Barroom Floor," "Charlie in the Park" and "Champion Charlie,' which is an ample combination. The film ran for a week. The throwaway is cleverly worded to permit the block letter words "From the cradle to the grave" to be thrown up in display. And since it offered a rather wide column for six point, the matter set double column and so was vastly easier to read.

We would be glad if more of our English readers would send in their advertising. We have contributors in South Africa and Japan, as well as Australia, but the English exhibitor holds on to his stuff.

Please Copy.

Please copy the line from the letter heads of the Colonial Theater Company, Jackson, Mich. It runs:

Photoplays; not "Movies."

Run that on your program and other advertising. Create the impression that you run real pictures and not trash. W. S. McLaren, the manager for the company, sends in a bundle of programs and explains the numbered advertisements recently commented upon. The explanation cannot be commented upon because of postal regulations, but it is novel. The new programs are done in red and some dark color, black, brown, blue, etc. A novel idea in imprinting in red on each film announcement the trade mark of the brand. If you are interested in programs it will be worth while sending for a sample. Meantime, if you want to try a two-color effect, take the electro of the trade mark to a rubber stamp maker and have a stamp made. Then rubber stamp this on the programs with the aid of a painstaking small boy. If you do not have a large run you can get an odd effect at comparatively small cost, but be sure and teach the youngster not to pound the stamp on the pad and get enough ink on to smear all over things.

Mr. McLaren says that, so far as he can learn, this is the only suburban house outside of Detroit running daily matinees. It was a long fight to get them coming, but they kept plugging away at it, and now they have a paying business. And to show how careful they are of the matinees, the other day when a feature did not come in time, they kept the house closed in the afternoon rather than run on emergency film instead of the feature. That is one reason why they have a matinee business that pays. Another is found in this extract from his letter:

> If you could see my old "Worlds" you would not doubt that I read them. There is hardly a whole page left in them after I get through. The manager who tries to get along without the "World" will soon be in "also ran" class.

The back page is partly given to house chat along the lines suggested by these clips:

> Don't be afraid to tell us you don't like a certain picture—if you don't. Many of our patrons tell us when they are pleased—a few when they are not. We want to hear from more of you. In order to give you the pictures you want we must know "what you like and what you don't." Give us a chance—talk it over—we want to hear the knocks just as well as the "boosts."
> Did you ever go into a photo-play house and after having seen about half of the last show, have the operator flash the "Good Night" slide? If you have we know just how you felt. We have been "there" ourselves. We wish at this time to call your attention to the fact that at any time we accept your money you will see the whole show. Our box office is open until 9.30 P. M. daily and you may rest assured of seeing a complete performance if you enter the theater before that time.
> We have some requests to show "The Spoilers" with William Farnum and Kathlyn Williams This film, nine reels in length, is almost too long to permit us to show it at the Colonial and play even at a Dime. However, we will play it, if a sufficient number of patrons want it. If you do, just stop at the ticket office and tell Mrs. Moore our Cashier that you would like to see it. "It's up to you."

Stuff like that makes the reader feel that the house is being run in the interest of the patron and not merely to make a little money and quit.

Not So.

Comes this breezy letter from Charles Midgley, of the Franklin, Oakland, Cal.:

> What's new this week?—that's the big question you have to solve all the time.
> We've got something late. We can say now that the Franklin theater is the only theater in the world that publishes its own newspaper. The film companies publish a paper, the slide companies publish a paper, so why can't the exhibitor?
> They can. We're doing it and we hope to continue. Our first issue comes out today and under separate cover we will post you a copy.

We hate to wake Mr. Midgley up, but he is not the pioneer by a lot. Edmund Reid, for several years has printed a one-page daily newspaper with real news. Grand Junction, Col., has a weekly that prints some news and is hustling all through, and the Tucker Brothers of Oklahoma City not only print 20,000 two-page papers every day, but they do it on their own presses in their own plant. All of these have been built up on the strength of the local news, which is a hint to Mr. Midgley, who clips all except a brief editorial department. The paper is nicely gotten out on calendered stock with many cuts, but the paper is badly proportioned, being twelve by nineteen inches. It never could be mistaken for a regular newspaper. It would be better to use news stock, coarse screens, regular newspaper style heads and some local matter.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Working Synopses.

EVIDENTLY in answer to our contention that the plot of action should be written before the synopsis of the play, a correspondent offers the following:

> Many photoplaywrights contend that the only way to write a scenario is to prepare the scene action first and then write a synopsis from that. And some of the scripts that are shown on the screen remind me of a man building a house and then drawing up his plans.
> The scenario writer comes across an idea, and without taking the time to develop that idea into a logical and plausible skeleton, or synopsis, he sets to work to write his scenario. As he proceeds with his work bits of business that contain some "punch" atmosphere suggest themselves, and he embodies them, regardless of their congruity. These bits of business read well, and promise to throw a thrill into the audience, and the author becomes so enthusiastic over them that he never dreams of eliminating them.
> Now, a properly prepared synopsis, incorporating logic and plausibility, if closely followed, would not allow for any such deviation. The logical synopsis would suggest development and action. Suppose a man were to build a brick building, and every time he saw a nice large piece of colored stone he would stick it into some prominent spot—he would have a fine collection of junk when he was through.
> I realize that the fool director, who would be more at home with a medicine show, makes many a competent photoplaywright look foolish, and I am not criticising writers for work thrown on the screen, but simply questioning a method that does not appear to be over logical to me. Perhaps you may have a few words to say.

The synopsis that goes to the editor should be written after the plot of action has been complete, but the author should have some well-formulated plan to follow and this plan should be a complete synopsis. It may be mental or written.

But the really creative author knows that no synopsis must be followed exactly. He knows that even at the last moment he can change, or he can throw away his completed action and start anew on another line. There no doubt are writers who cannot deviate from a pre-determined synopsis. To argue that they are wrong is to argue that there is but one method of writing, and there are as many methods as there are writers. But generally it will follow that the author who must slavishly follow a predetermined line of development has not yet trained his selective faculty if he writes in scenes, important in themselves, and yet not germane to the story.

This is one of those places wherein practise and experience prove their worth. The practised writer is able to determine whther or not the added matter is of real value or not. The careful builder does not add to his structure all the attractive stones he sees, but since Bibilical times it has happened that the stone rejected by the builder has become the keystone of the arch and it may happen that the incident, strong dramatic, effective but not relevant to the story in hand may, of itself, suggest a story of greater importance and so the old timers look for all possible new developments and may often obtain a big, tense drama as the by-product of a story far less appealing.

It seems to us that a policy of work that demands rigid adherence to a predetermined scheme of action will frequently result in a moderately good story where a more selective system might produce a better story or even two or three, but this depends wholly upon the individual and his mode of thought.

It is so very seldom that a story gets to the screen as written that the screen will show nothing of the author's continuity; indeed, we recall but one of our own stories that was produced precisely as it was written. Even where the director does approximately follow the script, the cutting room may, and generally does, change, either because of the excess length or merely because the cutter likes to change things around. But, taking authors' scripts and not the screened result, it is possible that in introducing effective situations the story itself is lost sight of, but these are not punch situations because punch action helps the action by making the story itself more dramatic. It may be that a scene of itself attractive, will be introduced without belonging, but the author should be able to weigh values—as material presents itself, and be able to accept or reject almost instinctively.

As a general thing, the best way to write a story is to write the action in scenes and then to make changes in copying. With very little practise splendid results may be obtained.

In no case should an author take an idea and "without taking time to develop that idea into a logical and plausible skeleton" set to work. Many, very many, writers do precisely this sort of thing, but they are not authors yet. The author first plans his story very carefully, then he writes either that or something much better, starting from that skeleton. Following the skeleton would prevent the deviations the correspondent suggests, but it would also frequently prevent many important improvements from being made.

Experimenting.

Lately a lazy young man sent in a half synopsis and suggested a number of endings. He wanted to know which one to use. He did not develop the script along the different lines. It was easier to ask someone than to do the work himself. Probably when he was told to do his own writing he developed one idea and let it go at that. Study by proxy does no good whatever. If there are two or more ways in which to carry on your story, work all possible ways. In the course of time you will know, from experience, which is the better way to work an idea and you will not waste time with the others, but you must gain this experience first hand and not through asking someone else. Do your own work. You must, in the long run, if you would find success, so save time by doing it now.

Exceptions Noted.

"Elbert Moore" in his circulars grows clumsy. He seeks to prove to his prospects that the photoplay market is a cinch. He recites some of the prize schemes and then quotes the Chicago Tribune as saying that they expected the winner of their $10,000 prize serial to be an unknown. Writes Mr. Langley:

> The winner of this huge prize was Roy L. McCardell; and his photoplay, entitled "The Diamond from the Sky," is now appearing in theaters all over the country. One idea, written out in only a few hundred words, brought him fame and fortune in one short day.

Mr. McCardell found fame and fortune in "one short day," did he? Twenty years ago Mr. McCardell was already known as one of the American humorists of note, and the vogue of his "Send two dollars to Uncle Tommyrot" was general. Fifteen years ago his book of poems attracted favorable comment and a little later his "Mr. and Mrs. Nagg," forebears of the Jarr family, were introduced. Getting down to the later days, it was only a few months previously that he had won the Chartered Theaters Corporation prize contest and he had won prizes for everything from catchlines to cigarette coupon ideas. Mr. Langley should at least know what he is trying to talk about. He should know the photoplay lights if he would pretend to be an expert in photoplay.

The Difference.

At the top of this department appears a notice that manuscripts or synopses will not be handled. One day recently came four letters. Two commenced "I know you do not criticise manuscripts, but—." A third thought we should break the rule because of a fancied relationship. A fourth said "I know you do not read manuscripts, so I am not sending any, but want to ask some questions." Which of the four letters do you think was the most welcome?

Positively we cannot and will not read manuscript. Rules are made to be broken, but since a very silly person accused us of being the real author of "The Goddess" because we alone had seen her bromidic plot, and she knew Mr. Morris could not think of a plot so good, the rule has been rigidly enforced.

What's the Use.

Questions a writer:

> When John is spying on Joe, why does the director always take a front view? Such a method appears to be childish, and in an intense drama very often brings roars from the audience. Why doesn't the script writer state that camera is to be placed at back of John? Occasionally Joe, the villain, or man following, could peep out from behind a box, a corner, a hedge, etc., and the audience would know perfectly well what was going on. If necessary, flashes of Joe could be shown at regular intervals. Possibly some directors use the back-view method, but I have never seen it on the screen. The nearest to it was the use of a field glass.

Now that is one of the points that are open to discussion. The camera is supposed to record the story through action and facial expression. If John spies on Joe and all we can see is his back, we shall lose about 90 per cent. of the value of the scene. Very few backs are eloquent. Granted that the full face presentation of the spy is inartistic and that the back is dead, why doesn't the script writer so frame his business that John can seem to look toward the rear and yet give his face to the camera? This could be worked very nicely if the author will stop and think a moment to get his business oriented, but what's the use of taking a picture of a man's back and getting only the effect of an occasional gesture?

Another Photodrama.

William Morgan Hannon, who is connected with the Coquille Film Company, of New Orleans, makes contribution to the second form of photoplay literature in the shape of an essay, "The Photodrama—Its Place Among the Fine Arts," an essay on photoplay and photoplay writing as an art and comparing it with other forms of literature.

Mr. Hannon, in his preface, makes it plain that he does not seek to instruct in photoplay, but merely to discuss it, and it is the first volume we have seen to cover this phase of photoplay work. He writes graphically, interestingly and with an intimate knowldege of his subject with the avowed purpose of making clear to students of literature the position that photoplay should hold. In his endeavor he has succeeded admirably, speaking with authority and yet not weakening this authority by exaggerated claims for the new art or overestimating its value. He assigns it its true place, defining both its advantages and its limitations. Most authors hitherto have confined their expresion to the advantages, presenting an argument too one-sided to be of value.

It is not a book of instruction, nor does it aim to instruct in text book fashion. It is a frank discussion of the art for those who wish to study the work before taking it up, and seems designed primarily to gain the interest of workers in other literary lines.

It is unfortunate that the main title is the same as that of Henry Albert Phillips work on photoplay technique, since this is liable to cause confusion.

Details.

Details are important. Often a story with a lot of big scenes is thrown out because the details that lead up to those big scenes are wholly impossible. Big scenes are the results of a succession of details just as three and two and five and four total fourteen, a larger sum. Continuing the simile the fourteen and other similar totals add up to the sum of the climax. If you add one, three, two and one and obtain the result of fourteen, something must be wrong.

Adaptations.

Almost overnight the market changed from adaptations of stage plays and books to original stuff and almost fabulous prices were offered for new scripts. In the same way the foolish and inane comedies are going to be engulfed one of these days, and it will no longer be necessary to use a bucket of paste and nine comedy falls—to say nothing of the seltzer siphon—in order to be funny. And it is going to be mighty profitable to the company that can equal the Biograph comedies of six and seven years ago, but it must be done with real actors and not clowns. Watch for the day and be ready with the ideas, for the first ones to sell are going to get the fancy prices. Later on when the supply again equals the demand, the prices will drop.

Plain Foolish.

An author writes to say that he has been stung by having two scripts lost by a certain company and now he has lost a third. With an air of surprise he bewails his fate and adds that he supposed that as usual the department will defend the editor. Not necessarily; but the company in question is so extremely careless in handling and keeping track of scripts that no real author ever sends to them, and we'll be hanged if we can weep at the sorrows of an idiot who gets stung three times in the same place.

Don't expect to have your complaints taken seriously if your letter shows that you are at fault.

Mrs. Parsons' Book.

Added to the list of books on photoplay is one written by Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, formerly editor of the Essanay Company and more recently photoplay expert for the Chicago Herald. With her long connection with the Essanay it would be odd, indeed, if Mrs. Parsons did not speak with authority, but she does more than this in her volume, for she tells what she knows simply, intelligently and helpfully. She adequately covers her ground in a manner that may be fully understood by the novice and appreciated by the more advanced. Now and then Mrs. Parsons does not follow general practise in some minor matters—such as her advocacy of 8 by 13 inch paper instead of the more generally used 8½ by 11 inches, but it is only in these small things she leaves the beaten track. It is decidedly a book to be added to the limited list of helpful treatises. Included are two two-reel scripts produced by Essanay and a split reel comedy done by Lubin as well as a one-reel drama developed for use as examples. It is concise and helpful and modern in its teachings. "Writing for the Movies," by Louella O. Parsons, cloth, 202 pages. Price, one dollar net. A. C. McClurg Co., Chicago.

Agriculture.

Plant your plot-seeds in your brain, then fertilize with practice and they'll sprout.

Different.

Two wrongs do not make a right, but two weak stories may make one strong plot.

One Reelers.

The one reel story will come into its own again, but the trouble is that no one knows when. Partly this is the fault of the producing companies and partly the house manager is to blame. He is the man who pays the money and if he insists there will presently come out more one reelers that are stories and not merely apologies for such, but when the producer gets a story the temptation to make it into a double reel is strong.

There is more than one reason for this. In the first place a really good one reel plot will work into two reels very nicely. It will permit the director to play the scenes easily and effectively, without planning and contriving to make a fit. He will be able to get a smooth production with less effort. More than this, his record will show a credit of two reels. He will seem to have done twice as much work, and too many studios still estimate the value of a director's work by his footage. He really does not work twice as hard, perhaps he does not even work as hard on two reels as he would have to work on one, but his ledger account shows that he has produced two thousand feet which have been sold for so much per foot. Naturally he sees a two reel story wherever he can.

Then the play comes to the manager, who is just beginning to realize that most patrons are growing tired of the features. The manager tries one reel programs but cannot get enough good ones. His business is not bettered. He goes back to features which are easier to advertise. The other night we saw three shows at different houses. There was not a single good one reel story. There were but two double reels that were really worth making in that length.

Some authors, too, work the same padding scheme and lift their stories into the two reel class by a greater number of scenes. They are paid more for two reels than for ones.

Until the time that exhibitors demand really first class one reel stories we shall have the manufacturers demanding them of their authors and producers, and yet we have only to look at the old Biograph reissues to realize that stories were better four and five years ago. It is not that we merely thought them better then. They still look better on the screen; even with due allowance made for the fact that the reissues represent the pick of accumulated negatives.

The business was built up on one reel stories. These must always form the basis of the business; particularly in the business districts where patrons used to drop in to spend a half hour or an hour and where they now merely get the middle or the two ends of a five reel feature in that time.

A Plot Hatchery.

"My plots get away from me," wails a new writer. "I get fine ideas but unless I can work them at once they are forgotten again." He might have added that some of the ideas, while good, are too incomplete to be immediately available as material. Perhaps an incubator will be helpful.

Our own hatchery is what is known as an Elbe binder, which takes the sheets without perforation. An idea in the rough is jotted down on paper. It may be only a line or half a dozen lines. In the rough it is but part of an idea and not a complete plot. If the plot is complete or reasonably so, the memorandum will be filed in another division. When ideas come easily the memorandums are many. When a slump in plotting comes the ideas are worked over, the suggestions being done into rough plots and the rough plots being worked over to a more complete, but still brief synopsis. Whenever a story is to be written, the rough ideas are also looked over to see if anything has come in that can be added to strengthen the story.

To show how it works, a company issued a play based on an old minstrel afterpiece, more generally known as "nigger acts." In the rough ideas division went the title "You'll find out," which was the name of the original. Several weeks later this was taken over to the rough plots with the suggestion that the leading characters be Cleopatra and Marc Antony and a week later the script, Queenie of the Nile was written and put in work. It bears so slight a resemblance to the original act or the first film made from it that probably no one would connect one with the other.

If you prefer, you can use loose leaf books or large envelopes and the three divisions may be replaced by a more elaborate classification. But it is generally best at the start to keep the items all together rather than to classify so elaborately that an item is likely to become lost. A paragraph about a man arrested for impersonating a policeman might be filed under "police." But it is not essential that the idea developed from this should concern the police. It might be a physician, a musician or anyone else who is impersonated, and if the item runs in a general file, it will show each time such a file is consulted and not merely when ideas using police are being looked for.

Many items will suggest complete plots almost immediately. Others will be better if the plot is allowed to grow slowly, being built up, bit by bit.

Cumulative.

One good scene deserves another and another until you have a complete play.

True to Life.

Do not try to make your scripts true to life or they will seem to be untrue. Take a really instantaneous picture of a running horse. Note the stiff attitude, the seemingly impossibility angled legs, the strained position of the head. Compare it with the pictures of Remington. See how the artist gets a composite of the horse in action. It is the same way with your scripts. You cannot use the true story, but from a combination of several true stories you may get a composite that seems more true to life than any one of the factors.

Technique of the Photoplay

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department's reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 108.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose you have a very steep pitch in projection, what could you do to secure sharp focus both at the top and bottom of the picture? Can a picture be made sharp all over under these conditions?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 102.

The Roll of Honor on Question 102 is as follows: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; John Solar, Watertown, New York; Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; T. Glucksman, New Orleans, Louisiana; V. A. Barton, Baltimore, Maryland, and Vernon Kidd, Victoria, British Columbia.

I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour for publication.

Reply to Question No. 102.

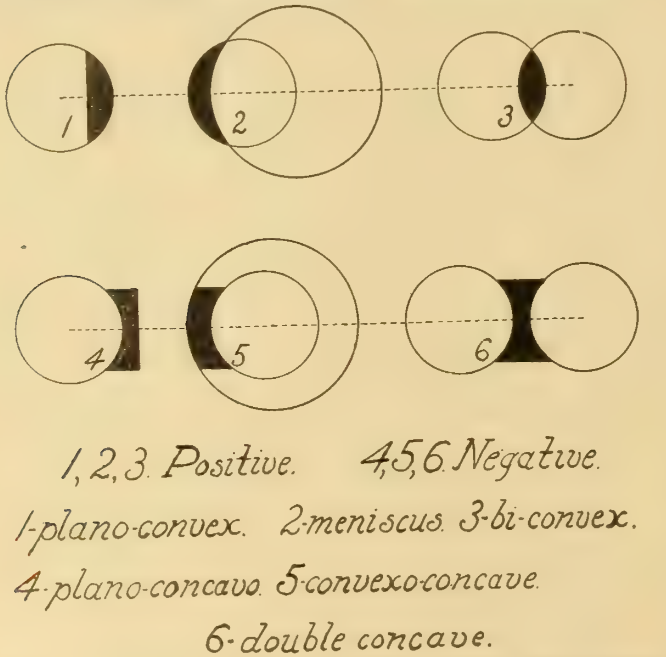
By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

How often should condensing lenses be cleaned, and what is the best method of cleaning them? If you were purchasing condensing lenses how would you judge of their quality? What is the advantage of a carefully polished lens surface as against a rough, uneven surface? What is a plano-convex lens? A meniscus? A bi-convex? A positive lens? A negative lens?



The Answer:

Condensing lenses should be breathed on and polished with a clean cloth once a day, and washed say twice a week either in a solution of one-half wood alcohol and one-half water, or with soap and water, or with ammonia water, being carefully polished afterwards. But the twice a week is not necessarily arbitrary. It might be required oftener or not so often, according to circumstances. The best guide is, wash the lenses when they look the least bit cloudy when opening the condenser casing and looking at them from the side while the light is shining through. It is very difficult to judge the quality of a condensing lens without actually trying it out. However, I would examine the lens to see that it was carefully polished, had a smooth, even surface and that it was perfectly white when looked through edgewise. I would also focus some distant object and judge by the clearness of the image as to the amount of spherical aberration present, but in doing this one must first carefully clean the lens to be sure to remove all trace of oil. I would also secure a written guarantee from the dealer that they would not discolor after being used. (You would have some job getting that guarantee now I am afraid, Brother Larmour, though the idea is perfectly correct.—Ed.) A rough, uneven surface on a lens acts the same as would a large number of minute, irregularly placed prisms, viz., scatter a portion of the light in all directions, thus causing considerable loss, as compared with a lens having a perfectly smooth surface.

Referring to the drawing, a plano-convex lens, (1) is a lens with one flat side and one convex side. A meniscus lens (2) is convex on one side and concave on the other; in other words, it is crescent shaped. A bi-convex lens (3) is one having two convex surfaces. A positive lens has a focusing point, while a negative lens has only a "virtual" focus. As shown in the sketch, a line drawn through the center of a positive lens will pass through the thickest part of the lens, whereas a line drawn through the center of a negative lens will pass through its thinnest part.

A New Carbon.

Recently Jones & Cammack, New York City, importers of a Swiss carbon, known as the "Reflex Carbon," presented their product to the department for examination and approval, as was set forth in a recent issue. Following our usual custom, we gave Messrs. Jones & Cammack the names of six operators, located in various sections of the country, requesting them to write and find out the size carbons used, and send them one bundle of proper sizes for test, report of results to be made to this department.

Reports have been received, up to date, from Ashland, Wis., San Francisco, Cal., and Fort Worth, Texas. In every case the operators speak well of the carbons. Ashland says:

> I find them to be of uniform density, neither too hard or too soft, and they do not needle.

San Francisco says, in part:

> I find they have many excellent qualities, among them the production of a decidedly brilliant, white light.

Fort Worth, Texas, says:

> The special pains taken with the negative carbon produces a very brilliant light with D. C., and the results with A. C., using these carbons, are equally good.

Please understand that this is only part of the letters, but on the strength of the reports I am prepared to recommend the Reflex carbon to our readers, and would suggest that they give them a trial.

For D. C. the negative carbon contains a small copper core in its center, therefore, when ordering "Reflex" for D. C. you must order both positive and negative carbons.

In this connection it will be remembered that Brother Smith of Fort Worth, not so very long ago, predicted that we would eventually have positive carbons and negative carbons, which proves that Neighbor Smith is some prophet.

Film Cement.

L. Rosenberg, Seattle, Washington, says he has had a lot of trouble with film cement, and asks recipe for a good cement.

I have told Brother Rosenberg that it is quite a difficult matter to get a thoroughly reliable film cement recipe—or at least that has been my experience and observation. I attribute this to the variation in chemicals. I have receive samples of film cement to try out which I have found to be a really splendid article. A few weeks later I have secured another sample of the same cement and it was very poor. Why? Undoubtedly the makers did everything they could to produce a good cement, but, as I before said, I believe the lack of uniformity is due to the difference in different lots of chemicals. I don't know how to explain the matter otherwise.

Some one who can provide a cement which will (a) make a strong, durable patch; (b) not curl the film; (c) not make a hard patch; (d) not eat the film, and have it the same thing from one year's end to another will confer a distinct boon upon the industry. I have arrived at the point that I will absolutely have to be shown on the film cement proposition.

The Straight Throw.

William M. Hyde, New Haven, Connecticut, says:

> I hand you herewith a drawing showing the distortion resulting from the angle throw. You may be familiar with this proposition, but, inasmuch as I have seen no previous data on the subject in the department, it may be of interest. The question of illumination due to added area is in itself interesting, as also the fact that the top of the picture cutting a smaller area of the light pyramid, and the base cutting a larger area, calls for the altering of the light spot at the aperture, in order to make the illumination appear even.
> Brother Weiss' picture is 16 feet wide, but were he to move his machine, with his throw as a radius, to a point where it would be at right angles with the screen he would find there would be a considerable reduction in the width of the picture. As it is his image is "short" and "fat," while the same image under the conditions I submit would appear "tall" and "skinny." Such distorted pictures do not look so very bad to us, but to the person accustomed to a truly proportioned projection they would appear absurd. I am submitting this purely in the interest of a straight throw.

The question of altering the spot at the aperture to secure even illumination is interesting, but I think, impractical. A picture projected at a heavy angle is, in the very nature of things, unevenly illuminated, though I believe the difference would usually not be discernible to the eyes. The practice of projecting pictures at a heavy angle is a very bad one, and, moreover, as I have many times pointed out, it ordinarily is an unnecessary practice. The manager locates the projection machine clear up at the back of the top balcony, because he does not want to spare space for it where it ought to be. There is only one way to project a picture properly, and that is with the lens square in front of the screen.

A Live Wire.

C. A. Dann, a Toronto operator, has been sending in replies to the questions and comments on department matters which prove him to be a "live wire." Brother Dann's reply to Question 96 was exceptionally good, but it came too late for publication. I don't know if Dann is a member of the Toronto local or not, but hope he is. Organized labor needs such men in its ranks. Together with his answer to Question 96, came the following:

> I note with much interest your comment on Friend Dobson's letter speaking of his enlistment, and would say, with all the emphasis I am capable of, "Them ere's my senterments tew." Christianity? Save the mark! Civilization? Ditto! The war is nothing less than diabolically educated savagery and barbarism. The Good Book says: "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle toward all," and "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal," and "Love your enemies and do good to them that hate you," etc. Well, to make a long story short, Friend Richardson, I am just now engaged in reading a book which throws a flood of light on this whole subject, and I am going to ask you to accept a copy as a token of my personal esteem. The book is entitled "Armageddon," and I trust you will find it as interesting as I have.

The book came promptly but I won't have time to read it for at least a month. Words are too weak to express my abhorrence of that whole European proposition. The department is not, of course, the place to discuss matters of this sort, but sometimes my disgust at the insanity of this wholesale murder proposition gets the best of me. I don't know who is to blame for it all, and I don't know that it makes much difference. The end will be that, broadly speaking, humanity will have gained ABSOLUTELY NOTHING, and the poor devil who works with his hands and earns his bread by the sweat of his brow will be compelled to shoulder and pay the staggering financial loss—the loss in manhood and womanhood is, of course, irreparable. What owl-eyed simpletons we are after all! We have had one spasm after the other for months in trying to save Leo Frank, who was charged with a crime against womanhood and murder. The whole country was agitated over this one item, yet over on the other side of the little ball we live on, they kill (official murder) a hundred in a single minute, and actually brag about it, while crimes against womanhood are too common to even merit mention. It seems to be something like theivery. Steal a million and you're a "financier"; steal ten dollars and the jail for yours. Verily our "civilization" resembles an oil painting, in that while it looks fine at a distance, don't examine it too closely at short range.

Certainly You Are Right.

C. C. C. Bretz, Kansas City, Kansas, says:

> Recently I visited an operating room equipped with two motor driven machines, one an Edison Exhibition, and the other a Powers' Six. The operator was a young fellow about 18 years of age, and seemed to know his business. I watched his work for quite awhile and noticed that many of the scenes were out of focus. Asked him if he had to focus up on many of the scenes, to which he replied in a gruff voice: "Naw. When the picture is out of focus I leave it alone; it will come back in itself." I studied projection several years ago, and I believe I was taught to focus up on the scenes which needed it. Am I right?

You certainly are. The operator who allowed his picture to "come back in focus itself," might or might not know his business. If he does know it neither his actions or his words indicate that fact. Such a man is not a credit to the profession of operating—exactly the reverse. The out of focus effect might have been in the film itself, or it might have been, and probably was, due to fault in the mechanism—a buckling of the film. It is possible he was not to blame for this. Maybe he had worn machine parts for which the manager refused to purchase duplicates, but even so his answer was disgraceful. He might much better have said nothing at all.

Operator Honored.

We learn through a newspaper item that our old friend, Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, is to be appointed to the board of moving picture operators examiners by Mayor Tyra, Fort Worth, Texas. Brother Smith will serve with the City Building Inspector, the City Fire Marshal and the City Electrician.

Friend Smith has been a correspondent of this department for a long time, and has proven himself to be a man very thoroughly versed on the technical end of his business. I am also informed that he projects an excellent picture. I am glad to hear of his selection for this important office. I believe it would have been hard to select a better man; also the city is acting wisely in adding a practical moving picture machine operator to the examining board.

Probably Quite True.

Tacoma, Washington, says:

> Some of the articles in the department cause me to have "answeritus" or "replyitus." Referring to letter from the traveling salesman at Lima, Ohio, don't you know that the tone of those letters almost always make it appear that the fault is always on the part of the operator, while, as a matter of actual fact, I believe I can trace not a particle less than 60 per cent. of the faults commented on to the manager, and I think that 60 per cent. is making it conservative. I am the chief "Scrubupus" in the largest and best equipped theater in this city. Explaining scrubupus, will say that it means head, or chief operator, and that that dignitary has the privilege of cleaning up the operating room, the motor generator, the projectors, etc., while the relief man comes on with a white collar and cuffs, and operates a clean machine in a clean operating room. Get me? I am not raising this point as a kick at the duties of the chief, but merely as partial excuse for some of the flaws which will be, at times, seen in the projection in different cities. As I before said, this is the largest and finest photplay theater in the city, and not only my manager, but many of the operators in the city tell me we have the best projection. Here are some of the rules which I am, under no circumstances to deviate from. Show starts at 11 A. M. and runs on regular schedule until 11 P. M.; i. e., I am obliged to work out a regular schedule that will give a certain number of shows in twelve hours. For instance: I have a five-reel Paramount. I can run the show either in one hour and twelve minutes, or in one hour and twenty minutes, which ever makes the picture look best. But if it is the former, that makes me run just ten shows in twelve hours, and shows must be kept on the advertised time; as soon as one is finished the next begins. Some of the houses in this town, in fact most of them, will tell the operator to "speed up as soon as the house is fairly well filled," and as soon as there are only a few they will have him slow down so slow that the flicker on the screen is the finest little headache maker you ever heard of. There is one house where the operator has asked for repairs, and almost cried for them, using an old intermittent sprocket in each machine which has been in constant use fourteen hours a day for three years. (Phew! Some record.—Ed.) He has ground the hook off the teeth until there are hardly any teeth left. In such a case how can an operator govern speed, keep the picture steady on the screen, or do anything else, except swear (under his breath) at the parsimonious manager? My manager operated for about eight years, and he thinks almost all the films will look right on the screen if run at one speed, saying that the cameraman was turning at the same speed all the time, and that the picture projected at the rate at which it was taken will give the natural action on the screen.
> Now to get to the fellow in Lima. Maybe he was ordered to run fast, and maybe he needed repairs for his old equipment, and he gets the credit of being, to say the least, a mediocre operator. No excuse for the poor light and no excuse for the picture out of frame you will say, but at times there are some excuses. I run two machines and use not less than 60 amperes. Some time back the manager decided he would save money by using another brand of carbon. I use ⅝ inch below and ⅞ inch above. The binder on the new carbon is very poor, and the carrying capacity for the same size was not as great as was the carrying capacity of the Bio. The result was needling, red hot carbons, and even red hot carbon arms; including burned carbon clamps. I came to work one day at the end of the relief only to find the relief man had not tightened the clamp on the lower carbon as tight as he should, and the whole thing had gotten so hot that the screw and arm had melted together, and I was compelled to take that carbon arm out and repair it while the other machine was running. Do you suppose my light was as good as it should have been during all the time I was working on that arm? There are a great many extenuating circumstances, but the operator seldom gets the benefit of the doubt. Some managers will not let you use sufficient juice to produce good results, and then the boob in the operating room gets the "credit." On a separate sheet I am sending you a little piece of poetry. My wife cut it out a local paper. possibly you have seen it before.

The brother is perfectly right, from his point of view, and all the things he says are absoltuely correct, but, nevertheless, for the good of the business as a whole, it is well that I should publish these criticisms on projection. You see the filling of the position of editor of a department of this kind isn't exactly child's play. In fact it is something even more than a full size man's job. There are a great many things to consider. I often allow some one to roast an operator, when I am not at all sure it was the operator's fault. But if he really is not to blame, and is enterprising enough to defent himself, he is welcome to any reasonable amount of space to do it in. However, in the Lima case I wrote to Lima and inquired as to conditions, and the advisability or justice of publishing the letter referred to. I cannot say to whom I wrote, except that it was to one who certainly might be depended on not to advise publication unless it was needed. I was informed that quite likely the publication would do considerable good, and was, by inference, led to believe that the charges were true.

The Tacoma brother's manager is in error in the matter of speed. He is quite correct in assuming that the projection should always be at the rate of speed at which the picture was taken, but he is absolutely incorrect when he says that the cameraman always takes the pictures at the rate of sixty a minute. He does not—not by a jugful. And as I have often pointed out, if one cameraman takes one scene of a film at 57 feet a minute, and another cameraman takes the scene next to it at 63 feet a minute, there will be a big difference in those two scenes if both of them is projected at camera speed of either one of them, and if the projector pounds along at sixty a minute on both of them, neither one will be projected right.

One of the worse handicaps to high class operating is the "schedule show." The operator is helpless against that sort of proposition, and really high class results are impossible where it is required, unless he is allowed the use of some sort of "filler."

As to the poem, why, it was written for and published in the projection department something like a year ago, under the title of "The Guy at the Crank." It is by Ernest Eade, operator at the Hanna theater, Hanna, Alberta, Canada, and is good enough to bear repetition, so here goes:

The Guy at the Crank.

By Ernest Eade.

Did you ever go to a picture show,
  And sit in the dark and stare,
And wonder how in creation
  The picture got up there?
It isn't the soft, slick manager
  Whom you have to thank;
It's the half-baked, oily son-of-a-gun
  Who cusses and twists the crank.

He goes to his little two-by-four,
  Iron lined like a prison cell;
He starts to make the film chase through
  And soon it's hotter than—well
You talk of the steamship stoker,
  And the heat of his fires bank,
But the stoker's dream it like ice cream
  To the chump that turns the crank.

To the picture show is where you go
  To sit in the dark and stare;
You forget there's another world outside
  When you are snugly seated there;
You watch the actors play their parts,
  To you it's all a dream,
But it's very real to the guy at the wheel
  Of the picture show machine.

Just where do operators go
  When they leave this vale of tears?
Is there some cold place in celestial space
  Where they pass their after years?
Or do they mingle with the throng
  Where sulphurous fumes are dank
And hear Old Nick when the flames are thick,
  Shout: "Hey, there! twist the crank?"

Tries to Get Funny.

One who signs himself "Archibald Snow," though I take it it is not his name, writes from San Francisco, at considerable length, in what seems to be a clumsy effort at comedy. Friend "Snow" evidently has acquired the idea that those who have written letters criticising projection, signing themselves "traveling salesmen," are operators who are seeking to boost themselves by bragging on the projection in the theaters where they are working, and knocking at projection in other houses.

For the benefit of our friend, Snow (I am rather surprised that so crude an effort should come from San Francisco), I will say that, unless I have reason to know or believe that reports of this kind are true, the letter is verified before publication. I am not quite as simple as "Snow" seems to imagine. We may be easy marks here in New York, but not quite as easy as all that. Of course, I will cheerfully admit that they do "put something over" on me once in a while, but I guess even my distinguished enemies will admit that don't happen very often.

A Cheap Machine.

George W. Thompson, Chairman, Entertainment Committee, Mutual Welfare League, Sing Sing Prison, Ossining, New York, says:

> We have a Powers' Five picture machine to sell. It is almost new, having had a new sprocket and springs at a cost of $25.77 by the Power Company. We are willing to sacrifice this machine at $50.00. Anything you can do to help out in this matter will be highly appreciated by us all.

This machine, always assuming it to be in good condition, as the letter indicates, would be an excellent investment for a traveling exhibitor. Full details can be had by addressing Mr. Thompson.

Would Not Hurt 'Em.

E. W. Nichols, Pasadena, California, writes:

> This is my first time to butt in, but I have been a constant reader for the past five years; also have your Handbook and literally could not get along without it. Every real operator should have one, and it would not hurt some of the others either. We have two of the latest Simplex, a Chicago spot light, Chicago dissolver and a 5 H. P. Martin rotary converter, which are all O. K. I am having a little trouble with flicker in the picture when running at 60 per minute. Throw 108 feet, Keno 2½-inch diameter lens, three-wing shutter, 54 amperes of 82-volt D. C., 17-foot picture, mirroroid screen. Have tried a number of different shutters, and have written the Simplex people, but no help yet. Would a 50-50 shutter work better?

I see you are using a high grade lens. When the optical dope appears you match up your optical system carefully in accordance with it. For the present proceed as follows: Hold a metal plate in front of your condenser, with a one-quarter inch hole drilled in its center, open the machine gate, turn the shutter so that the light will go through to the screen, and project the ray through that one-quarter inch hole to the screen. Blow tobacco smoke in it, observing where its narrowest point is. Set your shutter as near the narrow point as you can get it; that will be the best position for the shutter. A 50-50 shutter would be ideal and would probably eliminate flicker, but I don't think you can use one without travel ghost. I would suggest that when you get your shutter located as above, you substitute a paste-board pattern for its blade, and then keep trimming off the wide blade until you get travel ghost. You can then cut the metal shutter down, leaving its main blade just a little wider then the paste-board pattern. Flicker may be reduced by (a) properly proportioned shutter, (b) reducing light brilliancy, (c) increasing speed of projector. Flicker is worse, other conditions being equal, on a large picture than on a small one.

Burlington, Vermont.

J. R. Andrews, Burlington, Vermont, says:

> Although I have been operating about six years and am a constant reader of the department, still this is my first letter to you. I have been reading the questions and later the answers, but until No. 98 appeared I have not been tempted to send one in myself. However, here is my version of 98. There are four theaters here. Operating conditions are fine in two of them, and the other two are nine and twelve dollar a week houses. There is prospect of another large picture theater being erected soon. Projection is good in two of the houses, fair in one and poor in one. I hope my answer to question 98 will meet with your approval.

Well, Brother Andrews, whether the answer "meets with my approval" or not, the fact that you have attempted to answer shows you to be one of the live wires. Instead of the number of answers received we ought to have at least 5,000 every week, but some are afraid, some don't know and some are too lazy, but you bet they're not missing any of the answers. Come again brother.

Best of Its Kind.

L. Z. Nighswonger, manager Palm Theater, St. Cloud, Florida, says:

> The Moving Picture World is the best paper of its kind for the operator and manager. In a recent issue you spoke about the dilemma in which an operator would find himself if called upon to splice N. I. film without having any N. I. cement. I promptly did a little experimenting, with the following result: Cut both ends of the film on the framing line, then take a piece of slide binding tape and join the two ends. This is not by any means an ideal splice, or a very strong one, but it will go through the machine all right. I am using forty-five day Mutual film, four reels daily, and it has brought the best summer business this town has ever known. I don't wish you to live forever, to which you very naturally object, but do wish you to prosper and enjoy life while you do live.

The patch suggested is, of course, only intended as a make-shift to be used in case of emergency. Many thanks for the suggestion, Brother Nighswonger, also for your good wishes. It is good to know that the work one is trying to do meets appreciation.

How Many Minutes?

T. B. Smith, manager Gem theater, Clinton, North Carolina, writes:

> I would appreciate being advised as to your judgment of how many minutes should be used in running a reel of 930 feet in order to get the best results from a Powers Six A machine?

My dear Mr. Smith, you bring up a rather large proposition. Ordinarily film is supposed to be taken by the cameraman at the rate of sixty feet per minute, but that is not always the fact. In order to get the best results it is, as a general proposition, best the film be projected at the rate at which it was taken, and the operator will be obliged to judge of the naturalness of the action in the film in order to comply with that condition. There are, however, other important factors to be considered. First, where one is using a powerful illuminant, and a screen which gives a very brilliant picture, even with the best proportioned shutter, probably one will get some trace of flicker unless the speed is increased above normal, and the action in the film accelerated, which hurts on one direction and helps in another. In that case it is a question of some flicker and the best action in the film, or injuring the action in the film and obliterating the flicker. This condition is often made worse by the operator not being sufficiently well posted in the optics of his revolving shutter to place the shutter in the best possible position. Again, quite often in an automobile race, or something of that sort, where there are no moving figures except the automobile, the action may be vastly improved by "speeding up."

Speed is a question of combined knowledge and good judgment on the part of the operator. Nine hundred and thirty feet of film run at normal speed at 60 feet per minute would require 15½ minutes. Under ordinary circumstances this should be about the average speed. Some scenes in the film may require an excess of 60 and others may require less than 60, but on the whole, assuming your light not to be so strong that flicker is not eliminated at 60 per minute, the average for best projection will come pretty close to that figure.

Getting Action.

Just to show you: Recently a Boston operator sent in a bunch of clippings taken from a certain film received from a certain Washington exchange. Now, for obvious reasons, I am not giving names, but I forwarded these clippings to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, and the following is received. I might add that this is a fair sample of many letters received from this and other film producing corporations to whom letters containing film faults have been referred—with the operators' and theater name eliminated:

> "I have your favor of the 14th, enclosing clipping from film received from the Boston operator, calling our attention to poor inspection on the part of our Washington Exchange. We have severely taken to task our Washington office, and you may rest assured that no further complaints will be received along this line."

The point I am trying to get you fellows to see is that this sort of thing has some effect. I am not sending these clippings to the exchange manager, but to the president of, for instance, the Universal, Mutual and other big producing companies, and leaving them to land on the exchange manager. I don't claim this is going to be a cure-all, but you bet it will help all right, all right.

Send the Bill.

Verner Hicks, Marion, Illinois, writes:

> I have noticed considerable comment on condition of film sent from exchanges and will say that our regular service taken from the St. Louis Universal is always in A1 shape as to misframes, bad patches, etc. However, recently I ran chapter ten of "The Diamond from the Sky," made by the North American Company, and was obliged to amputate eighteen patches in 300 feet, and eighteen is some splices to cut out. The only remedy I see for getting better films is for operators to send exchanges bills for services in making repairs, as I told the North American I was going to do with them. Enclosed find a patch cut from "The Diamond from the Sky" received today.
> I recently noted in the department, a scheme for threading a Powers Six A in frame. It was, as I remember it, to thread with the dividing line of two pictures at the top edge of the aperture plate, but it failed to work with me. The best thing I have found is to get a miniature lamp and socket and place them inside the head, just under the lens tube; connect this up to batteries and fasten wire to light shield so that when it is open for threading up the lamp will light. In framing the framing lever is thrown clear down to the bottom and the picture is framed with the dividing line in the center of the opening. Before starting the machine pull the framing lever up to a level position, and the picture will always be in frame, provided the intermittent sprocket has completed its movement. Have used this scheme for two years, and have found it very satisfactory.

Sending a bill for services would help, of course, but making an exchange pay the bill is quite another thing. It seems to me that that matter would be a very good and proper thing for unions to take up whenever they are powerful enough to have influence, or compel action. When an operator receives films in poor condition he is either compelled to do a lot of work he is not paid to do, and often does not have the time to do, or else project films with inherent faults, which will bring discredit upon his work, and hence upon his union. If unions took this matter up there undoubtedly would, in some instances, at least, be a terrific scrap before exchange managers would be brought to time, but something certainly ought to be done about the matter. This department is doing all it can, and it is having some considerable effect, too, as I happen to know, but it is a rather large subject to handle all alone. The splice sent in was awful. It would probably cause the film to run off the sprocket, and anyhow would cause a big jump in the picture and a flash of smeary light as the emulsion had been wet and all run together for fully one-half inch on either side of the one-half inch patch.

Film Splices.

A. N. McLain and Fisk, operators, Holland Theater, Wichita, Kansas, write:

> With regard to Brother Mitchell, September 4th issue, we find that, if, in making film splices, the stub-end is placed on top (emulsion side) of bottom of picture, the tension springs will interfere. If the reverse, then the lower film guard on the Motiograph will hook the ends and rip the film along the sprocket holes. We, therefore, suggest that each operator resplice each film so that it will run best on the make of machine he is operating.

All of which is referred to our readers without comment.

E. K. E., Manhattan, Kansas, writes:

> I would like to get some information regarding the use of nitrogen filled lamps for interior lighting.
> Would two 1,000 watt and two 750 watt lamps be enough to secure good exposures, using a lens working at f 3.5? Distance of camera to object 12 feet or less. >
> I have been doing some moving picture work the past year. This includes some developing and printing in a small way.

It is probable, making the statement offhand without having made an actual test under those conditions, that if the lamps were placed as closely as possible to the objects photographed with suitable parabolic reflectors and assisted by what daylight you could get at the most favorable time of day, that you could make usable negatives, although the results would not be what you could call fully timed, nor would the lighting be artistic or natural in appearance.

The training you have outlined should make a good foundation for becoming a cameraman, but it is likely that you would have to serve an apprenticeship in a film factory before you were intrusted with a camera, and in addition you will require war supplies sufficient for you to carry on a personal siege for a job in one of the motion picture centers for a month or more—which means a trip to Los Angeles, Chicago, or New York.

Moving the Motion Camera.

Mr. William Cutts of Butte, Mont., wants to know what is the method employed by the Quality Picture Corporation in their close-ups in the "Second in Command" which he says is a particularly striking example of a problem which has interested him for some time. So far as he knows, the system was introduced by B. A. Rolfe but is now used by several manufacturers. At one time he thought that this was accomplished by means of a Mobile camera which would be the simple and logical solution but the "Second in Command" has upset this theory in at least two scenes where an obstruction to any movable mechanism appears in the center of the stage as the camera recedes. The theory of the racking bellows system of the still camera is also in this picture as the camera lens is evidently moved some ten or twelve feet and no "stock" disconnections naturally result from this arrangement.

The studios which release under the Metro trademark use two different methods of obtaining the moving up effect in close-ups. The first is done by "dissolving in" the close-up and the second is by moving the camera up while the picture is being taken. In "dissolving in" the photographer "fades out" where the close-up is to appear by gradually closing the diaphragm of the lens or in some specially constructed cameras the shutter opening is automatically gradually decreased by pressing a button so that the exposure fades away to nothing in about three feet of film; with the diaphragm or shutter still closed the handle is turned backward until that section of the film where the fade out began is before the lens, then the camera is moved up to the required nearness, aimed by the view finder and focused by scale and the close-up is faded in on top of the fade out by opening the diaphragm or shutter, as the case may be, giving what is called a dissolve, that is, as the previous scene disappears the next scene appears giving, when properly done, the illusion of swiftly moving down upon the close-up figures.

The second method of procedure is much more simply described. The camera and operator are mounted on a truck with pneumatic tired wheels—a "chauffeur" steers the contrivance and a property man acts as the motor and when a close-up is required the truck is pushed up to the proper distance and the camera man cranks with one hand; tilts, focuses and panorams with the other and hangs onto the truck by his toe nails. "'Tis an exciting life and requires considerable ambidexterity" in the words of Misther Dooley.

Irising In and Out.

Wooster Lambert, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> I am an amateur here and merely take pictures of my friends, etc., for my own amusement, with an occasional topical event which I sell to one of the weeklies.
> I have the latest model American and a small Erneman, and up to this time all my pictures have been simple and clear cut to the edges and corners. I would like to know how pictures are made where corners and sides fade out, such as you often see in the close-ups of "The Birth of a Nation." Then there is another kind, such as a sharp defined masking as the effect of looking through a telescope at a distant object. I imagine this latter is done by putting a mask in the aperture of the camera, and if that is the case, I can't understand how the other is done.
> I hope I have made myself clear in the matter, although I fear I haven't expressed myself very well, but I am hoping you will understand the kind of picture I mean. I am very anxious to get some results in that line.

You are correct in regard to the "masking out" in such effects as looking through a keyhole, telescope, field glasses, etc.

Irising in and irising out, or circling in and circling out, are the terms used where the picture disappears in a diminishing circle or appears from nothingness or a small spot in a widening circle. These terms should not be confused with diaphragming or fading in and out, for when the diaphragm is opened or closed the illumination is increased or decreased in the same ratio in all part of the picture.

The circling in and out is done with an iris diaphragm placed at some distance in front of the lens; this distance depending upon the amount of diffusion required at the edges of the circle and upon the diaphragm opening at which the picture is being taken. The irising diaphragm for this effect should be mounted upon the outer end of an extensible lens hood and should have sufficient opening not to cut the corners of the picture when the lens hood is fully extended.

The closer the iris is to the lens the more it is out of focus and consequently the softer is the diffusion of the edge of the circle and, vice versa, the farther it is from the lens the nearer it is in focus and the more sharply is the edge of the circle defined.

Odd shaped vignettes may be obtained by cutting them from black paper and putting them on the front of the lens hood.

American vs. European Cinematography.

In an address before the Western Camera Club, Homer Scott, who is filming "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's $800,000 photoplay, declared that the American motion picture camera men are excelling their brothers in the profession in Europe.

"When motion pictures first became an industry," said Mr. Scott, "it was discovered that this country was far behind Italy and France in the cinematographic art. Cabiria showed us some wonderful effects, and other films from the other side were so filled with startling lighting, dissolves, double printing and double exposure that we, in this country, finally realized we were behind the times.

"However, that was a few years ago. Since we have learned, turning out in this country some of the greatest motion pictures ever produced anywhere, with all the spectacular camera effects, and more, than in European films. This country has now come into its own in the art of cinematography and will remain in the lead."

Motion Picture Photography in Book Form.

G. L. Waring, San Francisco, Cal., writes:

> Will you kindly inform me whether your papers on motion picture photography, as published in the Moving Picture World, are in book form. If so, please let me know what the price is and where it may be purchased.

The publishers of the World expect, at some future date, to issue a Handbook of Motion Picture Photography, which will be uniform with the series of Handbooks already published on Motion Picture Operating, Scenario Writing, etc., which will consist of matter which has appeared in this department revised and rewritten and with suitable additions.

For the present, why not try some of the books mentioned in the last few issues of this department?

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

JEALOUSY'S FOOLS (Biograph), Oct. 11.—It happens, fortunately, that there are not many women in the world quite so contemptible as the lone female character in this one-reel drama. The story is unusual, commands attention, and is vigorously acted by Charles Perley, Robert Nolan and Augusta Anderson.

THE EMERALD GOD (Lubin), Oct. 11.—A detective drama in one-reel, this photoplay has a lady "gumshoe" for a heroine. The unraveling of the crime is accomplished by the aid of a camera and a missing finger. The tension is very well sustained. In the cast are Jessalyn Van Trump, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Jay Morley, Robert Gray and Melvin Mayo.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 81, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 11.—French prisoners marching through Lille, France, to a German detention camp, is the most eventful item in this number. Other items are: Exhibition of Rescue squad in mine explosion, San Francisco Fair; G. R. veteran signaling from dome of Capitol; raising the submarine F-4, Honolulu; Mayor James Rolf, Jr., elected at San Francisco; lima bean crop, Los Angeles; tug-of-war, Columbia College; warship Oregon at Panama-Pacific Exposition; celebrating James Whitcomb Riley's birthday, Indianapolis; Greek sailors being massed at Piraeus; President Wilson and Mrs. Galt at ball game.

THE LURE OF A WIDOW (Vitagraph), Oct. 11.—The three leading roles in this lively one-reel comedy are taken by Nitra Frazer, Wally Van and Charles Eldridge. The spirit of the play is broadly comic and particularly adapted to the methods of the trio. Wally Van made the production.

QUEERING CUPID (Kalem), Oct. 12.—Rube Miller has been at it again! This time, his burlesque one-reel comedy is loaded with love, a trio of suitors being deadly rivals for the hand of Beautiful Bertha. Ethel Teare, Dave Morris, Bud Duncan and John Zahl work energetically, with keen eye to the comic side of photoplay making.

ROMANCE OF A BEANERY (Lubin), Oct. 12.—Dorothy Roth, David L. Don and Jack Delson perform many strenuous comedy stunts in this one-reel farce, written and produced by Edward McKim. The whole reel is wildly but hilariously improbable.

THE FOREMAN'S CHOICE (Selig), Oct. 12.—Tom Mix introduces a new thrill into this one-reel drama and performs it with the neatness of execution with which he climbs into a saddle. The entire photoplay is decidedly worth watching. Victoria Forde is an important part of the thrill.

THE WIDOW'S BREEZY SUIT (Edison), Oct. 13.—Six infatuated males try to win the lady of the breezy suit, in this one-reel comedy. After seeing Sally Crute in her striped bathing suit, it is easy to understand why all the men found her irresistible. A bright comedy, well played by all concerned. Raymond McKee being notably prominent in the cast.

THE CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL (Essanay), Oct. 13.—Wallace A. Carlson has hit upon the happy thought of cartooning current events, and his first issue is a huge success. To see T. R. denounce Wm. J. Bryan, is the "loud noise" of the picture. Scenes in the Canadian Rockies are on the same reel.

THE STEADFAST (Lubin), Oct. 13.—Aside from the familiar bridge and the inferior grade of cement, the material used in this two-reel drama, by Harry Chandlee, may be recommended for its reasonably fresh reflection of life. There are several situations of unforced pathos and the interest is held with a firm grasp. Joseph W. Smiley, Lilie Leslie, Percy Winter, John Smiley and Francis Joyner constitute an excellent cast. Joseph W. Smiley directed the picture.

ON WITH THE DANCE (Vitagraph), Oct. 13.—The present dancing craze is made the target of keen shafts of humor in this one-reel comedy of which Grace Livingstone Furniss is the author. John T. Kelly bounces and beams through it with all his oldtime unction, and is aided by Mary Maurice, Jewell Hunt, and Arthur Cozine.

THE DAWN OF COURAGE (Biograph), Oct. 14.—Novelty of situation may be rightfully claimed for this one-reel drama. The story is not remarkably impressive, but is made interesting by the good work of the cast. Curtis Cooksey has the leading role. Isabel Rea and Hector V. Sarno have important characters.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 82, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 14.—The Naval Advisory Board, Washington, opens this installment. Other items: Prosperity Day, Kalamazoo, Mich; horse show at Panama-Pacific Exposition; State Firemen's Convention, Philadelphia; Cossack camp in the Caucausian Mountains; Italian troops in the Trentine Mountains; on the German firing line, France; Lucile fashions; outdoor bowling, New York; submarines in San Francisco Harbor; President and Mrs. Galt at baseball game, Philadelphia.

BELLE OF BARNEGAT (Lubin), Oct. 15.—This one-reel drama is a romance of the seacoast, a child saved from a wreck being the heroine. There are the two suitors—one wealthy, the other poor but manly. The story is neatly put together, and was written and produced by Clay M. Greene. Frances Sanson, Gilbert Ely, Clarence Jay Elmer and Kempton E. Greene give praiseworthy impersonations.

HOW JOHN CAME HOME (Vitagraph), Oct. 15.—Glad news for moving picture "fans"! Sidney Drew is back again! In fact, he's in this very picture! Last week's release saw him wading out into the ocean, until he disappeared from sight. He's given up as "gone, but not forgotten," in this one-reel comedy, also. He comes back at the finish, however, so, we'll all see him next week, and Mrs. Drew will be with him. How about "How John Came Home." Another hit for the Drews. Martha G. McKelvie wrote it.

THE LITTLE SALESLADY (Edison), Oct. 16.—This is a pleasing drama, written by Mark Swan, with Leonie Flugrath in the leading feminine role. The story treats of the unpleasant experiences of an attractive girl in a department store, and of how her employer, a high-minded young man, falls in love with her, guards her, and eventually asks her to marry him.

BRONCHO BILLY'S PARENTS (Essanay), Oct. 15.—The situation at the end of this one-reel drama is enough to make a worse man than Broncho Billy drop his gun. In attempting to rob an express agent, William discovers that he is holding up his father and mother. G. M. Anderson makes the most of this situation and is well supported by the other members of the cast.

THE INEVITABLE (Biograph), Oct. 16.—The story of a woman who leaves her husband and child for another man, she is made to pay dearly for her sin. The reel unfolds the plot interestingly, and capable acting is supplied by Claire McDowell, Alan Hale, Vola Smith and Ilean Hume.

THE LITTLE SALESLADY (Edison), Oct. 16.—A one-reel drama with an appealing heroine, this photoplay has the human note that counts so strongly for success. The drama is cleverly acted by the entire cast.

A TEST OF COURAGE (Episode No. 49 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series), Oct. 16.—This one-reel drama is well named. Miss Holmes takes a sufficiently perilous chance during the action of the play to satisfy the most ardent sensation lover. The story is full of life and offers excellent acting parts for Robyn Adair and Charles Murchison.

THE PRICE OF PIES (Lubin), Oct. 16.—Billie is down on his luck in this picture, and forced to steal several pies. This starts the sheriff after him, and Billie cavorts through the picture in his usual kidney-footed fashion. Epes Winthrop Sargent, the author of the reel, has provided the star with a number of additional comic adventures. Mae Hotely, Wally Helston and Charles Griffith are members of the cast.

IN THE MIDST OF AFRICAN WILDS (Selig), Oct. 16.—Bessie Eyton is assisted in this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama by several four-footed actors, and the thrills are realistic in character. The story is entertaining throughout.

General Film Company Specials.

THE VILLAGE HOMESTEAD (Essanay), Oct. 11.—The discovery of an illicit still in the vicinity of the homestead would seem to indicate that the scenes of this three-reel drama are laid in Kentucky; the scenery, however, is pure New England. The story is interesting. Its author shows originality in telling it, and employs the homestead for a novel purpose. Darwin Karr is an engaging hero, and it is a bit surprising that he fails to win the girl. Joseph Byron Totten's acting and his production of the photoplay are both of excellent quality.

THE DANCING DOLL (Kalem), Oct. 11.—Howard Irving Young is the author of this three-reel drama, which is rather fantastic in plot. Once having stated his proposition, Mr. Young develops it deftly and takes every advantage offered by the theme. The producer's staging of the scene where the villain is struck by lightning could have been made more impressive. Vivian Wessell is earnest and apt in the role of Hilda, the dancing doll.

THE SCULPTOR'S MODEL (Selig), Oct. 11.—Nellie Brown Duff has furnished the director of this two-reel drama with material for an effective, if somewhat conventional, photoplay. Sculptors and their models have frequently appeared on the screen and they seldom fail to make good subjects. The studio scenes in Miss Duff's drama register strongly. The human note in the story is skillfully struck. Joe King, Vivian Reed and Fred Hearn lead a well-selected cast.

BLOW FOR BLOW (Biograph), Oct. 12.—This two-reel photoplay is founded upon an English melodrama of the same name, that was a great favorite with theater-goers fifty years ago. Twin sisters are the leading characters, and are both played, in the screen version, by Mary Malatesta. She fills the dual role in a highly satisfactory manner. Other competently acted parts belong to W. J. Butler, Ivan Christy, Joseph McDermott, Charles Bennett, Gus Pixley and Frank Pethrick.

THE GREAT DECEIT (Essanay), Oct. 12.—Situations of pronounced dramatic worth form the framework of this two-reel photoplay, written by E. T. Lowe, Jr. The incidents are emotional and offer Warda Howard every chance to reach the hearts of an audience. Miss Howard is equal to the occasion. John T. Lorenz has one of the important allotments, and justifies his selection.

LILLIAN'S HUSBANDS (Vitagraph), Oct. 12.—One husband has been known to cause a suffragette several anxious moments; in this three-reel comedy, a trio of the necessary evils prove an embarrassing possession to the lady of the title. The picture is good fun throughout and leaves the fair Lillian cleared of the charge of trigamy, and happy and contented with one better-half. Lillian Walker is, properly, the Lillian of the pictureplay, and Donald Hall is her leading support.

SERGE PANINE (Biograph), Oct. 13.—A dramatic three-part photoplay made from a novel by George Ohnet. The picture is very well acted with Ican Christy and Edward Cecil in the principal roles. A review may be found on page 90 of the Moving Picture World of October 2.

VOICES IN THE DARK (Kalem), Oct. 13.—The baby used in this two-reel drama should become a great actress—she already exhibits much talent. C. Doty Hobart's photoplay is a good example of a well-constructed domestic theme, and is effectively played by Anna Nilson, Helen Lindroth, Henry Hallam, Guy Coombs and John E. Mackin.

THE DRAGON'S CLAW (Knickerbocker), Oct. 13.—Marion Leonard and Walter Hampden are featured in this quite exciting, though somewhat sombre, three-part melodrama, written and directed by S. E. V. Taylor. The story is unusual and well handled, especially in the last reel that introduces a fight between cowboys and western bandits. Miss Leonard and Mr. Hampden are sincere in their interpretations of the leading roles. Reviewed in issue of October 23 on page 631.

NAN O' THE BACKWOODS (Lubin), Oct. 14.—Valentine Grant has the title role in this three-reel drama, and Sidney Olcott made the production. The picture is a creditable filming of a familiar theme, and was reviewed on page 630, issue of Oct. 23.

GLADIOLA (Edison), Oct. 15.—An extended review of this admirable four-reel drama was given in the preceding issue of this publication. The play is uncommonly entertaining, pictorially and dramatically, and Viola Dana is fascinating, by reason of her personality and art, in the title role. Reviewed in issue of October 23 on page 628.

THE LAW AT SILVER CAMP (Kalem), Oct. 15.—Western melodrama is to be found in both reels of this photoplay. Its story is vigorous of action and suited to the mood of those who admire brave men, gun play, and hair-breadth escapes. Walter L. Rodgers, Alberta Garcia, Joseph J. Franz and Al. Ernest Garcia are the leaders of a competent cast.

SHANGHAIED (Essanay), Oct. 11.—Most of the scenes in this two-reel "Chaplin" are laid on shipboard, and Charlie of the Weary Trotters does more original stunts during the incessant and side-splitting action than he has ever put into any one of his previous comedies. The Charlie Chaplin brand of humor is unique and this lot is out of the XX, Three Star box.

THE REAPING (Essanay), Oct. 16.—The author of this three-reel drama has not minced matters. His story starts with a seduction and traces the consequences of the woman's sin with remorseless truth until the finish. He then compromises with probability, for the sake of the "happy ending." The acting and direction of the photoplay do everything possible to make the theme impressive and to rob it of its unpleasant features. Lillian Drew, Camille D'Arcy, Richard C. Travers, Frances Wood and De Wess Seewir comprise the cast. Edward T. Lowe, Jr., is the author.

THE RULING POWER (Broadway Star Feature—Vitagraph), Oct. 16. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, Mrs. Raymond Brown, Mrs. Thomas B. Wells and other leading Suffragists, are introduced in this three-reel drama which frankly proselytes for the "Votes for Women" cause. The author puts up a good argument by means of his story, but keeps the human interest of the picture always to the fore. L. Rogers Lytton, Edith Storey, Adele De Garde and Leah Baird are the leaders of the well selected cast. Lionel Belmore made the production.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE FINAL JUDGMENT (Rolfe), Oct. 18.—A Rolfe, five-reel offering featuring Ethel Barrymore and E. Cooper Cliffe. It is a sensational melodrama and, whatever shortcomings it has, will be pretty sure to be found acceptable to most patrons. Its subject matter and handling are up to date—it is a picture that was made to appeal to present-day audiences. A review of it will be found on page 631, October 23 issue of Moving Picture World.

MY MADONNA (Popular Plays and Players), Oct. 25.—An artistic five-part production, suggested by one of Robert W. Service's poems and directed by Mme. Alice Blache with Olga Petrova playing Lucille, the demi-monde in whom the artist finds his Madonna. The motivation of the drama is a bit weak at times; but altogether it is a more than ordinarily impressive production, artistically staged and very well acted. Mme. Petrova is ably supported by Guy Coombs, Evelyn Dumo and Albert Howson.

Mutual Film Corporation.

POOL SHARKS (Casino), Oct. 3.—An eccentric comedy number with amusing spots in it. W. C. Field, the well-known juggler, is featured, assisted by Bud Ross. A comedy pool game is part of the picture. This contains some good nonsense.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 5), (Gaumont) Oct. 12.—A half reel picturing the Mutual Traveler in Washington, D. C. Good views of the Capitol, monument and public buildings are shown. Also interesting glimpses of the way paper money is made.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Oct. 12.—On same reel with above. Amusing animated drawings showing the way in which Pa McGinnis slips away to the seashore, pretending ill health. His wife finds him enjoying himself.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 41, 1915 (Mutual), Oct. 14.—Among the items of this issue are the result of the gulf hurricane at New Orleans, a celebration at Sing Sing where the convicts are being treated "like human beings," the departure of Dr. Dumba, the lima bean harvest in California, the Corn Palace of 1915 at Mitchell, South Dakota; the submarine F-4 raised, the Red Sox and the Phillies at Boston (world series), and also President Wilson and his fiancee, Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt.

PROFIT FROM LOSS (American), Oct. 15.—Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester compose the cast in this picture, which is a drama of medium quality. The wife of a laborer, who spends his wages in a gambling den, is given a bunch of flowers by a neighbor woman. In desperation from hunger, etc., she takes her baby and goes out to a restaurant where she sells the flowers for a large sum of money to the man who won her husband's wages from him. The husband turns over a new leaf and all ends well.

ETHEL'S ROMEOS (Casino), Oct. 17.—Featuring Fayette Perry as a boarding house maid. Three young men, thinking she is about to become rich, pay her great attentions. But Jake, the wealthy brother, is related to a woman guest and eventually marries the waitress. This has a neat little plot and is quite amusing as presented.

RIP VAN WINKLE BADLY RIPPED (Novelty), Oct. 18.—An amusing farce comedy featuring Will Browning. Rip, because of his pretty daughter, gets into the hands of the burgomaster and his son, who give him salt herring to eat and refuse to give him a drink of water until he has signed a contract to hand his daughter over to the burgomaster's son, and also his fortune when he, himself, has finished with it. Rip goes to sleep on the mountain side, and sleeps until his beard has grown several feet in length, when he returns and upsets the almost completed arrangements of his enemies.

YOU CAN'T BEAT IT (Novelty), Oct. 20.—This is good legitimate comedy, and well produced. The story treats of how Bill Pike made a night of it with the boys, borrowed a drunken cabby's cab to drive home in, had the pleasure of being taken for a cabby and of bringing his wife's brother to his own door, and of being forced at the point of a revolver to help a burglar to escape with a suitcase of silver from his own sideboard. Bill arrives home with the wrong suit case, in which is found the missing silver and succeeds in covering his tracks in an exceptionally clever manner.

VISITORS AND VISITEES (American), Oct. 22.—Rather an amusing situation arises in this production through a mixup of dates. An unexpected house party takes place in the home of one of the husbands who is entertaining the husband of his wife's friend. Both the men come home drunk, in the belief that they are coming to an empty house, are robbed on the doorstep by a "friend," who is going to "put them to bed." After having the finger of reproach pointed at them by their wives goodwill is restored.

DESERTED AT THE AUTO (Beauty), Oct. 23.—The bridegroom and not the bride happens to be stolen in this one-reel comedy. And the bride weeps bitter tears before the matter is righted. It is the best man and some accomplices that do the dastardly deed, out of which arise many amusing situations.

AT THE PATRICIAN CLUB (Thanhouser), Oct. 24.—Quite an interesting story, related by a waiter at a gentlemen's club. At the psychological moment the man who is supposed to have ruined the waiter's daughter enters the room. Familiar subject matter handled entertainingly. The photography is also very good.

TILLIE, THE TERRIBLE TYPIST (Falstaff), Oct. 25.—The gum-chewing stenographer is well portrayed in this number and there is considerable quiet amusement in some of the situations. The plot itself is hardly strong enough, though the production has numerous points of merit.

TOURING WITH TILLIE (Beauty), Oct. 26.—An amusing comedy in which Neva Gerber plays the role of "Tillie," and lives to rue her treatment of the hero. She and her companion are rescued from a couple of tramps, by this same hero, and Tillie and the hero decide to live happily ever after. The tour takes place in California, where, according to the picture considerable devastation has been wrought by tourists camping about.

THE SOAP-SUDS STAR (Falstaff), Oct. 28.—A couple employed in a laundry do a shop act in vaudeville successfully; when they try Shakespeare they fall down. This is not particularly strong, though some of the burlesque scenes in the Romeo and Juliet performance are amusing. The couple then go back to the laundry. Fairly strong comedy.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE BREAD LINE (Reliance), Oct. 13.—A three-reel production, the story of which was written by Roy L. McCardell, and directed by Francis Grandon. It is fairly meritorious but leaves the impression of being somewhat overdrawn and there is no satisfactory solution to the problem of the story. It is left to the imagination to disentangle the relationship of the man Kingsley and the wife of the man who, through the force of circumstances, too continuously unhappy, joins the bread line. Few mortals could survive the numerous blows on the head which are accorded this man, and furthermore, it would be pleasant to contemplate a condition which would allow for the average man having enough red blood in his veins to deter him from following a persistently wayward woman to the bitter end. The picture is not what would be called healthy, inasmuch as that the moral of the story, if it has any, is not driven home.

"TWO SPOT" JOE (Mustang), Oct. 15.—An especially attractive two-part western drama in which Anna Little, E. Forrest Taylor and Jack Richardson have the leading roles. Tom Carroll, after some trouble in a saloon, goes west, picks up with a dance hall woman, deceives his wife in the east and is eventually released from a prison session by "Two Spot" Joe and told to leave town. When the wife comes west Joe takes charge of her, and when Carroll, on his way to kill Joe, stumbles to his death, Joe marries the woman, whom he has learned to love. The production has been unusually well developed, and is sure to please.

THE EVER-LIVING ISLES (Reliance), Oct. 17.—A two-part production treating of the early Quaker days in America. The romantic spirit of the period has been nicely preserved; and also the severity which is characteristic of the Quaker spirit is there, and has been utilized in many instances in the garnish of amusing situations. The main thread of the story centers around the arrest of the Spanish lover, accused of sorcery, and his return for the sake of his sweetheart in the face of a death sentence.

VINDICATION (Centaur), Oct. 21.—Here is a two-part production that might be termed excellent but for a little hurry job at the end. Mabel Van Buren plays the feminine lead. Other familiar faces present in the cast are those of John Brennan, Clarence Baker and John Oaker. The story is developed along the lines of strict melodrama. It is consistently developed also. At the end the husband of the woman who is responsible for his vindication, gets a position at the Bostock trained animal zoo. This has the appearance of having been forced into the story but is in itself entertaining.

THE PENALTY (Reliance), Oct. 24.—This two-part picture must rely for its attractiveness on some highly realistic desert scenes, in which the jealous rival at first does the cruel act of refusing water to the thirst-crazed man who stole his sweetheart. Some Indians arriving on the scene, attack them, and in the side-by-side fight the jealous member of the company is killed.

THE CONSCIENCE OF JUROR NO. 10 (Thanhouser), Oct. 26.—This would have been a more than ordinarily attractive two-part production had not some of the scenes in connection with the trial been highly improbable. For instance the escape of the dissenting juror from the room in order to rescue his child, which, thanks to an improvised situation, has fallen into the water. There are some points about the picture that are highly commendable.

HIS WIFE (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 44—Thanhouser), Oct. 28.—The story of a jealous young wife, driven to desperation by unfounded suspicions and reconciled after a lapse of many years. The story starts with great promise, and the treatment is marked by some charming pictures, but interest falls away where it should increase by reason of too much straining for effect. What should have been a powerful ending is merely a weak tapering off in conventional style. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison in this issue.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY NO. 25.—In this number of the serial Powell is drugged by Lovell, who is in search of the diamond and in the dead of night makes a desperate attempt to get away with it. In the struggle between him and Blair he falls head first from the window of Powell's bedroom, and the diamond, which he still grasps in his hand is taken by another hand, the owner of which we know not yet.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 80, 1915 (Pathe), Oct. 6.—Interesting items of this issue are scenes in Wall street during the boom on war stocks, a double balloon ascension and triple parachute drop at the interstate fair, latest dances of the winter season, members of the Bedtime Stories Club enjoying an outing at Bronx Park, and scenes showing the Bulgar army mobilizing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, NO. 2 (Pathe), Oct. 11.—In the second number of the Wallingford adventures Mr. Boggers is the victim in hand. Mr. Boggers is lured into parting with $65,000 of his money for a circus that is supposed to be coining money. This proves to be just a Wallingford method of getting even with another member of the clique who helped to ruin Marjorie's father. The title of this particular number of the series is "Two Rings and a Goat."

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE DISCIPLE (Triangle Kay-Bee), October.—Easily the strongest play of the Triangle series to date, the inspiring story of a frontier missionary who loses nearly all that he holds dear and his soul as well until a succession of highly dramatic circumstances bring realization that the All-Powerful One is All Merciful. William Hart in the lead is at his best, and the story is absorbing from beginning to end. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison in this issue.

THE SABLE LORCHA (Fine-Arts Film).—An adaptation depicting the mistaken hatred of a half-breed Chinaman and his ingenious schemes of revenge, all of which are foiled in the end because the victim was one of that large family of twin brothers who look exactly alike on the screen, a story that is far from being a suitable vehicle for its talented cast.

A GAME OLD KNIGHT (Triangle-Keystone), October.—A burlesque on the old costume romance which long supplied material for light opera. The action is most interesting when it is not rough and tumble, the ingenious mechanisms employed constituting the story's chief value.

HER PAINTED HERO (Triangle-Keystone), October.—The story of a stage-struck girl in love with a matinee hero impersonated by Hale Hamilton. The little Mr. Hamilton has to do with the story is very well done, but it is not his kind of a comedy. He is out of place, for the action is that of slapstick, the usual Keystone kind, funnier by itself, and about as poorly suited to Hale Hamilton as it would be to John Drew. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison in this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

PETE'S AWFUL CRIME (Joker), Oct. 23.—A low comedy number, with Gale Henry, Max Asher and Wm. Franey in the leads. The scenes are taken on a ranch and are full of harmless, nonsensical tricks, some of which are quite amusing. A burlesque hanging closes the number.

POOR BUT DISHONEST (L-KO), Oct. 24.—Peggy Pearce and Hank Mann appear in this eccentric comedy number. The chief scenes are of a rough house character and occur in a brick yard. The incidents are clearly pictured and contain a fair amount of amusement.

BY RETURN MALE (Imp), Oct. 26.—This story by Roy Clements features Victor Potel, of Slippery Slim fame, as a sporty young husband who comes home with a jag. He and his friend see three or four white mules, in place of one; he imitates the cuckoo clock and sleeps in the bath tub. Mr. Potel succeeds in making this sort of a part amusing without being vulgar.

TEARS AND SUNSHINE (L-KO), Oct. 27.—A burlesque comedy, featuring Gene Rogers, Alice Howell, Gertrude Selby and others. A widow and widower become involved in a flirtation. The plot is not very strong, but there is nothing objectionable in the story and it has amusing moments.

MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK IN "THE LOST ROLL" (Powers), Oct. 28.—Another of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series, featuring Gale Henry, Max Asher, Wm. Franey and others. The number is characteristic and Max springs a surprising number of disguises during the reel, many of the makeups being very good.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE UNDERGROUND CITY (Universal Special Feature), Oct. 17.—No. 18 of the "Broken Coin" series. In this number Kitty goes through some painful experiences on the desert island, at the hands of cannibal natives. These scenes are well put on and are quite realistic. Count Frederick is also a captive on the same island. He demonstrates the use of a revolver and gains the respect of the savages, after which he organizes a party to go to Kitty's relief.

THE SPRINGTIME OF THE SPIRIT (Rex), Oct. 24.—A three-reel subject, by John B. Clymer, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and others. The story is entertaining throughout in a mild, agreeable way, and leads up to a novel climax. The bachelor, who had determined to marry the daughter of his old friend reflects over his past life and decides he is unworthy of her. At the very hour of the wedding he learns that she loves his brother. The names are changed on the records and the younger man wins the bride. This is well constructed and makes quite a strong offering.

IN THE FOLDS OF THE FLAG (Big U), Oct. 28.—A patriotic story, written by Olga P. Clark, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie, Mrs. Benson, Edna Payne and others. Betty goes into moving picture work because her grandfather is behind in the rent. The pension papers were lost fifteen years before. Later an old soldier is needed and the grandfather is reluctantly induced to play a part. The missing papers are found inside the folds of the old flag and he gets a big back pension. The story is one of a pleasing, entertaining sort, with just a proper touch of pathos about it. The photography is unusually good.

THE CRATERS OF FIRE (Imp), Oct. 29.—A three-reel offering of Italian make, telling an interesting and well-constructed story. The photography is very good and the Italian cast, headed by Albert Capozzi, does strong work. The picturing of the Venetian water festival was well done and very attractive. The story has a dramatic tinge, dealing with two brothers, impersonated by one man. One is responsible for the other's death and later tries to make up for this by caring for the dead brother's child. One woman adventuress brings sorrow into both their lives. The plot itself is somewhat obvious, but as a whole the offering has much merit.

THE SUPERIOR CLAIM (Bison), Oct. 30.—This is a good western subject, three reels in length. The leads are played by Edythe Sterling and M. K. Wilson. Sherman Bainbridge has the heavy role and does good work, as does also Rex De Rosselli as the father of the young woman in the case. There are interesting desert scenes, one of the best of these being the vision of the city and of forests and water seen by the exhausted man left on the desert to die. It may have been designed for a mirage, but the effect is striking in either conception. J. J. Franz directs.

THE COLLEGE ORPHAN (Universal Broadway Feature), Oct. 25.—A six-part comedy-drama introducing the De Havens to the screen. The subject will make good entertainment. There is unusual college atmosphere on the comedy side and on the dramatic there are good situations. The picture was reviewed on page 628 in the issue of October 23.

World Film Corporation.

THE BLUDGEON (Equitable), Oct. 18.—A well-staged five-part subject in which Kathryn Osterman is featured. The review on page 627 in the issue of October 23 points out that "in spite of the gray that dominates its coloring, experience with pictures in character resembling it gives assurance that 'The Bludgeon' will be liked by most practical picture men because of their knowledge as to what their clientele like."

YOU NEVER CAN TELL (Banner), Oct. 18.—The story of a tenderfoot who is given a warm reception by the cowboys on a ranch. In the end he surprises everybody by revealing a manly strength which he uses to good purpose. The plot is by no means fresh, but it still makes good entertainment when skillfully handled, as in this instance.

MISTAKES WILL HAPPEN (Federal), Oct. 18.—Using a plot that has been tried and found adequate many times—that in which a normal man is mistaken for an escaped lunatic—the director of this farce comedy produced a genuinely entertaining film. It is certain to draw laughs.

Associated Film Sales—Corporation Specials

FOR THE HONOR OF BAR X (Ramona), Oct. 18.—A two-part western melodrama in which cowboys figure prominently. Interest centers in the character of a youth who sacrifices his own good name in order to save that of the father of the girl with whom he is in love. Events are arranged in a consistent fashion and they become reasonably dramatic as the story progresses. Vic Frith and Reeva Greenwood are conspicuous in an able cast. Western locations are attractive.

Miscellaneous.

THE LITTLE GYPSY (Fox), Oct. 11.—Despite a few scenes of spectacular quality this romantic melodrama is disappointing. The story has so little grip that there is danger of its becoming tiresome before the five reels have been run. Dorothy Bernard, in the title role, is supported by Thurlow Bergen, William Riley Hatch, Raymond Murray and others in a generally competent company.

ALONE IN LONDON (Ideal Film Service), Oct.—A five-part adaptation of an English melodrama by Robert Buchanan in which Florence Turner plays the leading role. The picture was produced in England by Turner Films, Ltd., under the direction of Larry Trimble, and makes very fair entertainment. The story is of sound melodramatic quality and it is adequately staged and acted.

THE CORSICAN (Sun Photoplay), October.—The full title of this five-part production is "The Corsican, or the Last One Hundred Days of Napoleon." It was made in France and first shown in this country at the New York theater. Hector Mazanni gives a faithful and exceedingly impressive characterization of Napoleon. The picture is historically accurate, it was elaborately staged and offers some spectacular battle scenes.

BALBOA claims to have the youngest leading lady before the public today in Helen Marie Osborn. Only recently she celebrated her third birthday anniversary and on that occasion she was elevated to stellar honors, playing opposite no less a screen favorite than Henry King.

Helen Marie Osborn.

Until this event, the little lady was known about the Balboa studio as "Baby Marie;" but now she takes exception to such address and out of respect to her position, she is called Miss Osborn. She comports herself with unspoiled dignity, is childishly frolicsome and withal ladylike.

Helen Marie Osborn is a native of Denver, Colo. Her parents are both professionals. As "Babe" St. Clair, her mother is known to many people of the stage. Leon T. Osborn is the father. Both are members of the Balboa playing force. But since Helen Marie is doing leads, she has become the most important member of the family. Mother is acting in capacity of maid to her daughter; while father serves as the manager.

Three months' studio experience preceded Helen Marie's promotion. During that period she played the usual line of child parts in "Maid of the Wild," "The Lady of Perfume" and several other Balboa features; but in such an unusual way that the Horkheimer Brothers had a story specially written to feature the little lady. She was put under the direction of Henry King and he is delighted with the results that are being obtained.

HOWARD ESTABROOK THE STAR OF "THE CLOSING NET."

We are in receipt of the following from the Pathe Exchange: "Through an unintentional error in some of our advertising matter for 'The Closing Net,' Mr. Howard Estabrook was merely featured with others where he should have been starred exclusively. We are making this announcement in fairness to Mr. Estabrook."

Fayette Perry

FAYETTE PERRY—that irresistible little charmer of the legitimate and vaudeville stage—is bringing all of her clever wit and attractive personality to the screen. She will appear as the next star of the Gaumont Casino All Star Comedies on the Mutual Program. It will be a farce, entitled "Ethel's Romeos."

Miss Perry was born in Nebraska about twenty years ago. Even when she was in school and had no thoughts for the stage she was a dancer, and performed in many local entertainments. Her first professional appearance was in Denver in the light opera, "Martha." After a successful season in stock in Denver, the little ingenue-dancer-comedienne came to New York to try her fortune under the direction of Cecil De Mille. She first appeared in vaudeville at the American Music Hall. New York liked her. She was fresh from the west and the breeziness of her manner was most delightful.

Fayette Perry.

Then in New Haven she appeared in such productions as "The Blue Mouse," "Girls," and also in "The Lion and the Mouse."

In "Cheer Up," at the Harris theater, Miss Perry came back again to Broadway. Then she appeared in "Baxter's Partner" and "The Marriage Knot." She has also appeared in pictures, having been with Universal, Lasky, Pathe and Kinemacolor.

Valli Valli

VALLI VALLI, who was starred in the big production, "The Woman Pays," which has just been completed at the Rolfe-Metro studio in West Sixty-first street, worked under a severe strain during the last few days the picture was under production. Her brother is fighting at the front with the Royal Fusiliers and Miss Valli has not heard from him or been able to communicate with him for a distressingly long period.

Valli Valli.

Valli Valli was born in England and naturally has a heart interest in the present world's conflict. She was successful on the stage in her native land before she was induced to come to the States, just eight years ago. In both stage and screen productions she has shown a remarkable versatility. She had a prominent singing role in "The Dollar Princess," also in "The Purple Road," two Broadway successes. Later she was starred in "The Queen of the Movies," a big musical conception, which enjoyed a run at the Globe theater in New York and afterward on an extended tour.

The first work of Miss Valli in pictures was in "The High Road," a Rolfe-Metro feature production which was received with enthusiasm all over the country. Miss Valli is extremely fond of acting for the screen, but she says she intends to remain on the speaking stage during the regular season, where her services are always in demand.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IN COMMENTING upon the campaign of the reformers against moving pictures and their places of exhibition, it has been repeatedly stated in these columns that the zeal of the reformers in that work had distracted them from their real field of labor to an extent that whatever falling off has taken place in the attendances at places of religious worship was due almost solely to the reform element. These statements have been met with prompt denials by the reformers, but a recent practical demonstration prompted by the reformers themselves has shown that the statements they refuted are sustained by facts. About two weeks ago the city of Chicago, Ill., had its first dry Sunday during a period of forty-three years. The city has over seventy-one hundred saloons and on the Sunday referred to they were shut down tight, with very few exceptions. To be exact, there were but twelve violations. In the enforcement of the order to close, the reformers and authorities had the co-operation of the liquor organizations, as there was an implied understanding that the test was to show whether or not the claim by the reformers that with the closing of the saloons church attendances would increase was well founded.

It is not intended here to side with the liquor interests, to claim that the people want the saloons in preference to the churches, or that churches have passed without their sphere of usefulness. It would be folly to attempt justification of such claims because they are not in accord with the true sentiments of the people. But in order to sustain the original proposition it is consistent to say that the saloonkeepers of Chicago and the motion picture interests are in identical position on the reformation question. The reports on the closed Sunday show that the claims made by the reform leaders that the churches, art institutions and like places would draw large attendances utterly failed. Official reports show there were no marked increases in church attendances, but there was a direct effect noted in the quarters of the Salvation Army and in the moving picture houses. In the slum districts, the reports say, the latter were packed to the doors, day and night.

It is to be expected that the reform element will claim that the packing of the picture houses is a verification of its claim that those houses draw the people from the churches. But some very damaging body blows are given this claim when two points presented by the test are given attention. The reports also state that "for the most part, Chicagoans stayed at home." While the regular churches showed no marked increased attendances, the Salvation Army quarters showed the reverse.

These facts do not leave the reformers in an enviable position. It leaves them under the indictment filed against them by the moving picture interests charging neglect of duty in their legitimate field. In dabbling with the censorship of moving pictures and other side issues which the proper authorities are sufficiently equipped and able to deal with the reformers have injured the very institutions they should have upheld and protected. If the motion picture houses absorbed a large percentage of the overflow upon the streets created by the closing of the saloons, it was because the reformers had failed to reach these people, as they evidently failed to reach the majority of the city's population that stayed at home that Sunday. For the failure of these people to go to the churches surely the moving picture people cannot be held accountable.

In a nutshell, the truth of the situation is that the reformers have been trying to detract public attention from their own waste of time by the cry of "Mad dog." Thousands of dollars are appealed for and collected annually for the rescue of the fallen and bringing back to the fold the straying ones. The test case in Chicago does not show a faithful performance of this stewardship, and it does not bear out the claims of those responsible that they are handicapped by the moving picture houses. There is not the semblance of evidence that the picture people had scouts out to get the people shut out of the saloons to patronize the picture shows, nor that the reformers made a serious effort immediately preceding or on that Sunday to get those people, or the stay-at-homes, to the churches. The affair, when brought down to hard-pan, presents a picture of the reformers, the authorities and the liquor interests joining in a game of freeze-out and leaving the people to decide for themselves as to what they wished to do on the Sabbath. The sequel is a black eye for the reformers who, through persecution of the motion picture interests, have posed as protectors of the people's morals, but have defaulted in the protection and promotion of the people's spiritual welfare. It is a significant fact that in none of the turmoils that have been created throughout the country over the question of official censorship has the Salvation Army been prominent. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the methods and proprieties of the Salvation Army's operations, the Chicago case has shown that the organization, by faithfulness to its legitimate field, has accomplished more in that city than the more pretentious religious organizations.

The time is drawing near when the various religious denominations of the country will arise from their slumber and call upon their stewards to give more time and attention to the work they are selected and paid for. Ministers have been known to almost abandon their pulpits and flocks for weeks to attend conferences, sessions of legislatures, and travel from city to city in support of their pet censorship schemes. Time that should have been devoted to increasing the membership of their congregations and bringing non-churchgoers into the fold has been spent in hobnobbing with politicians to advance their censorship ideas. They have become so absorbed in the fight to cripple, even to kill, the motion picture business that the welfare of their congregations has become a secondary consideration. "Tax the motion picture people" is their cry. At the same time they are putting additional taxes on their own congregations. Censorship agitation has taken the place of revival work. We seldom hear of the old time revival work in these days. Those who should be conducting the revivals are too busy with the censorship bug. It is no longer a question with them of reforming the people, but of reforming the moving pictures. The revival work has, to them, become a professional institution. When it is to be done, the Billy Sundays are called upon to perform it, and the respective congregations are duly taxed for it. A prominent man said, the other day, that if the moving picture people looked after their business interests no better than the reformers care for those they are selected to look after, the business would soon go "to the dogs" and the reformers would be obliged to seek something else to bark at. "One thing I have noticed particularly in all this motion picture controversy," he said; "the louder these reformers shout when girdled for such campaigns the more pronounced becomes their desire for notoriety, and the basis of that desire is ambition for promotion and advanced pecuniary gain. Such agitation becomes a profession with many of them and their constant association with politicians and political agents eventually transforms them into professional politicians. This is not a theory, but an absolute fact. The political germ becomes so firmly imbedded in them that they finally become candidates for office. Most of the appointees to the various censorship boards throughout the country secure their berths through the influence of the reformers. What is the answer? If the reformers do not land the jobs themselves, they get their friends into them. There are some real, all-wool reformers, but they are in the minority and generally mere tools in the hands of designing agitators. Many people will not concede that leaders in religious work will stoop to methods of the scheming politician, but, unfortunately, it is the truth. All of them are not in the game for notoriety or personal gain. Far worse, some of them are inspired by a spirit of deep-rooted prejudice. One of the foremost clergymen of the country, one of the first to begin warfare upon moving pictures with a spirit that would listen to no appeals in their behalf, declared that he would never sanction the pictures, and he is as decided on that point today."

A VALUABLE COLLECTION OF NEW PICTURES.

Part II.

From Cape to Cairo.

For the first time we have here an excellent series of through Africa films. The first and most important deals with the great railway now in course of construction from south to north. Thousands of natives—largely savages—are employed in the gigantic undertaking, although the discipline and systematic methods by which they labor ought to remove from them the old stigma of "savages." Under the direction of European engineers these natives are used entirely for the construction of this enormous road now about two thousand five hundred miles in length. Judging from the intelligence displayed by them in their work, they show both a knowledge and keen interest unsurpassed by those in more enlightened lands. All this is put to the test by a special effort—no doubt put forth for the purpose of this film, but which at the same time reflects great credit upon them.

Laying One Mile of Railroad Track in Sixty Minutes.

At first this seems an utter impossibility, but when one sees the thousands of natives stretching over miles of road and the marvelously well organized companies handling the steel sleepers and then the rails, dropping them in place in such rapid succession as is depicted upon the film, one cannot for a moment doubt that even if only for one mile under special pressure the thing was at least once surely accomplished.

Natives Laying Rails in Cape to Cairo Line (Variety).

This serves to evidence the fact that this great railroad undertaking is being thoroughly accomplished alone by native labor, and it will stand as a credit to their industrious traits of character.

Bridge Building.

The many great engineering problems met with in so extensive a work as the Cape to Cairo railroad are promptly overcome. Bridge building seems to be accomplished in Central Africa precisely in the same manner as in the center of the United States, native labor seeming equal to the emergency there as here. Great piers are built at equal distances in the water, the iron bridge is put together in sections, mounted upon floats and floated to its place upon the piers with ease and precision.

These laborious incidents named are but characteristic of the whole film which is a wonderful portrayal and record of as great a railroad engineering feat as was ever undertaken in any part of the world and gives great light upon what has always been looked upon as "Darkest Africa."

This opening up to great civilizing undertakings is having a tremendous effect for good upon the teeming thousands of the dusky inhabitants.

Other most interesting films dealing with the inner life of those people full of educational matter will be reviewed in our next issue.

Central Africa.

Continuing the review of these valuable films released by the Variety Films Corporation, those illustrating the industrial customs of the natives are very interesting. Primitive industrialism is without doubt the greatest revealer of the ideas of man when absolutely without any technical training or mechanical aid. Educationally these films may be looked upon as possessing additional value in their becoming everlasting records of ages which to those in lands of old civilization seem to have existed only many centuries ago. That there are today such primitive people with their manners, customs and industries, seems to have been forgotten, these films are not only a reminder, but they become of additional historical value therefor.

Natives Making Weapons or Tools (Variety).

Pottery making has perhaps never before been portrayed without the earliest "potter wheel," but in Central Africa even that seems unknown, the making of circular articles requiring a deftness which brings out all the cunning and ingenuity of the worker. Weapons either for warfare, hunting or domestic use while of great variety are all made under precisely similar conditions; that they vary at all bespeaks the ability of the maker. Tools for agricultural purposes are also made under the same conditions In many instances it would appear that the average native is capable of working at a variety of trades in that he may be both the maker and user of the tools or weapons he is going to use; often too the women seem as important as the men in these industrial pursuits. Basket making of the Bazi Zulus is one of the oldest of primitive industries, in all ages it has seemed natural to weave reeds into a shape for either shelter or articles of domestic use. In nothing is the dexterity of the fingers more displayed than in basket making by primitive people everywhere. The Zulus are not one whit behind in this natural art. The making of clothes displays the pride of these people which grows with the wider range of their experience. The film depicts the actual preparations of a "trousseau" for a native princess. The signing of a treaty of peace requires no great council, even pen, ink and paper are not necessary; a series of beating the palm of the hands, even as children play in parlor games, is sufficient to adjust the inter-tribe grievances of this interesting race of people.

Scenic and Natural History Pictures.

But for the absence of those beauties only to be found in more temperate climes, Africa has its picturesque parts. A tour from Zambesi to Central Africa not only opens up a new route of travel, but one with its own peculiar beauty of landscape. The Victoria Falls are indicative of greatness and grandeur second only to Niagara, and will convey, in part at least, some idea of the country. Animal life in Central Africa is probably more abundant than in any other part of the world, and nowhere can better subjects or better pictures be made. Beyond the limits of a one-man series of subjects, the greatness of the country provides abundant opportunities for picturing in their native haunts lions, tigers, leopards, gnus, zebras, etc., as are filmed here.

Victoria Falls, Northern Rhodesia (Variety).

For special detail this company have filmed a hippopotamus hunt in German Southwest Africa. Here these huge animals are abundant; it is no task to find them, and hunting is really a matter of selection with choice of a good shot. For this purpose long, narrow, canoe-like boats are used and when the right monster is selected and a good range found close to shore, the true marksman finds the right spot with his bullet, and the hippopotamus is conquered.

Of exceeding value now dead, the natives proceed to prove in every detail the worth of the carcass. With astonishing dexterity the thick, heavy hide is removed from the two-ton body of the giant of the waters, his body quartered like an ox and the parts carried to camp; while every part of the hippopotamus is of some especial value, the natives give preference to the use of the fat, which is regarded as one of the greatest delicacies.

Climbing the Alps.

Pictures taken at a height of 15,000 feet above the sea level are as surprising as they are interesting. Beautiful in the extreme is the journey through an ice encrusted tunnel of the Gornagreat Railway, emerging to behold an Alpine panorama of entrancing beauty.

Details of the Alpine range have been most thoroughly pictured as the following list declares: Matterhorn, 14,765 feet high; Dent Blanche, 14,320 feet high; Obergabelhorn, 13,850 feet high, and finally the summit of Monte Rosa, 15,180 feet high. Here we are given an exhibition of rapid travelling on skis. The art of Alpine climbing is shown with that detail which causes wonderment as to how the films could possibly have been secured. An exhibition in itself and full of interest is the art of the Alpine climber, making his way at the dizzy heights up a steep wall of rock, or climbing upwards through a "crack" in the rock wall.

The dangerous task of crossing a precipitous rock on a rock-ribbon causes many auxious moments. These real thrills certainly reduce to nothingness the so-called thrills in many sensational and cheap dramas.

Thousands of feet in the air, with nothing but their own ability and dexterity in handling their irons and ropes, these Alpine climbers teach many lessons of a kind of stability that many who see these pictures can make of educational value.

In the Realm of Diamonds.

The diamond fields and mines of South Africa are a revelation. Few people can be aware of the extensive nature of this search for the little bits of white stone which are changed from no value to that of inestimable value. More extensive than clay mining, nearly as extensive as coal mining, these great mines give employment to large numbers of people and use most extensive machinery and miniature railways.

Digging, dynamite blasting, trucking, sifting, washing of the material is one continuous industry. Colored natives are relegated to examine the commoner grades of earth, while the better grades are carefully examined by white people until the profitable stones accumulate for the machinist and the market.

By this film a new industry is added to the list of industrial subjects. The whole of this great series from the Variety Films Corporation is at once one of the largest and best additions ever made to the educational branch of kinematography at one time. Great praise is due to all who participated in the production and release of these films, and we bespeak for them a most thorough appreciation from the interested as well as the educational user of films of this high class character.

"Analysis of Motion" (Pathe).

Pathe will release during the weeks of November 1 to December 13 some very remarkable pictures showing the analysis of motion. These films are the second and third of the kind ever released by any of the film manufacturers. The first of the type, called "The Analysis of Motion," was released by Pathe about two years ago, and at that time secured some very remarkable publicity.

Ordinary motion pictures, it will be remembered, are taken with a camera making sixteen pictures per second, and are projected upon the screen at the same rate. With the "ultra-rapid" method, patented by Pathe, a motor is attached to the camera and 1,200 pictures are taken in a second. These pictures are projected at the ordinary rate, with the consequence that every animate object in the film moves so slowly that the naked eye easily has time to detect the contortions and muscular action of every object. For instance, the hurdler running at a record pace is seen crawling along at almost the pace of a snail, so that he seems to almost float in the air as he goes over the jumps.

For pure interest and educational value combined it would be hard to beat these pictures.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

OHIO EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Special Meeting of Ohio State League Condemns Present Censorship Methods—Resolutions Adopted.

THE Ohio Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America assembled in convention at Columbus, Ohio, October 19, for a special session at the call of Max Stearn, president of the Ohio Branch No. 1, who received numerous telegrams requesting that the convention be called for the purpose of protesting against the action of the Ohio Board of Censors in rejecting "Hypocrites" and "The Birth of a Nation." Lem S. Miller, of Cincinnati, was made temporary chairman of the morning session, which opened at 10 o'clock. He introduced Geo. J. Karb, Mayor of Columbus, who welcomed the exhibitors and said among other things that he favored a national board of censorship rather than a state board or municipal board.

Max Stearn, president of the league, was next introduced. He gave a resume of the work, which had been done by the league, citing the number of obnoxious bills that were introduced in the last legislature and which had been killed through the efforts of the officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. He said that he was of the opinion that the exhibitors of Ohio were ready to give up censorship when a proper substitute that would be satisfactory to the public was presented. He said also that he hoped that the exchange man and the manufacturer would help to solve this difficult problem.

At the afternoon session Charles Williams, chairman of the Ohio Board of Censors; Maud Murray Miller and W. R. Wilson, other members of the board, made addresses. Many of the exhibitors present had seen the picture, "Hypocrites," and were of the opinion that it should be passed by the board. Those who had seen "The Birth of a Nation" felt that it should also pass. In the evening a banquet and cabaret entertainment was given. John H. Arnold, Lieutenant-Governor of Ohio, was the guest of honor. In his speech he also made the statement made by Mayor Karb to the effect that he was against state and municipal censorship, but rather favored a national board.

Out of respect to the memory of the late M. A. Neff the following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, It has been the will of Providence that our beloved Brother, M. A. Neff, has been taken from us, and we mourn the loss of one who has sacrificed so much of his life for the exhibitor; the one who has made our organization possible, now therefore be it

RESOLVED, That a committee of three be appointed to draft suitable resolutions, so far as it is possible expressing his good works and our heartfelt bereavement in his loss. That the resolutions be engrossed and spread upon the minutes of this League.

In this connection a resolution was adopted thanking the management of the Moving Picture World, President Max Stearn and W. R. Wilson, for their efforts in behalf of the late Mr. Neff during his last days.

Resolutions were adopted pledging the support of the Ohio Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to Max Stearn, its president and to its other officers and condemning the action of President Herrington in calling a meeting at Cleveland.

An attendance of fifty-five exhibitors was recorded.

REORGANIZE LEAGUE AT CLEVELAND.

Big Meeting of Ohio Exhibitors in Two Days' Session Elects Officers—Censorship Condemned.

AT A BIG gathering of Ohio motion picture exhibitors held in Cleveland, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 19 and 20, National President F. J. Herrington reorganized the Ohio branch of the league. These officers were elected:

President, Lemotte Smith, Alliance; vice-president, Frank Beverstock, Mansfield; secretary, W. H. Horsey, Cleveland; treasurer, Louis Becht, Cleveland; National vice-president for Ohio, Frank Kenney.

Our correspondent reports that 300 exhibitors attended the sessions. Among those present were Peter J. Jeup, of Detroit; W. J. Sweeney, of Chicago; L. W. Brophy, of Muskogee, Okla., and M. A. Miller, a New York lawyer.

Resolutions were adopted condemning censorship and favoring a rule to bind exhibitors not to admit children at night unless accompanied by parents or guardians, also favoring an auxiliary organization to embrace the representatives of allied industries.

The meeting was closed by a banquet on Wednesday night at which Hon. Newton D. Baker, mayor of Cleveland, and other city officials spoke.

IN MEMORY OF M. A. NEFF.

The following resolutions of respect have been adopted by the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America upon the death of former National President M. A. Neff:

WHEREAS, Our Almighty Father in his infinite wisdom has called to the Great Beyond, our beloved Brother and co-worker, M. A. Neff; and

WHEREAS, The motion picture industry has lost an honest, upright and conscientious worker for the amelioration of the new art; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That our association extend its heartfelt sympathy to his near and dear ones in this, their sad hour of bereavement, and express our most profound regrets on the passing of one so sincerely interested in the industry; and be it further

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this association and that a copy be sent to all the trade journals.

(Signed) MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF ILLINOIS.

BOOMING THE MASSACHUSETTS BALL.

Every Indication Points to Record Breaking Attendance at Third Annual Function of Bay State Exhibitors.

PROMINENT members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts are more than occasional visitors to New York City these days. Among those in town during the week were Samuel Grant of Boston, chairman of the executive committee of the third annual ball to be held in the Boston Arena in that city Wednesday, December 1; R. W. Drown, of Lynn, vice-chairman; Glover Ware, of the Larcom theater, Beverly, and Mr. Toomey, of Toomey & Demara, who own three houses in Lawrence.

Mr. Grant in New York is dividing his time between preparations for exploiting his "Marvelous Maciste," the six-part Itala subject featuring the strong man of "Cabiria" and for which he holds the United States rights, and in visiting film manufacturers in regard to the attendance of screen stars at the ball. The success of last year's function was so pronounced that the manufacturers are promising Mr. Grant every aid in their power. It is the intention of the chairman to refrain from announcing the attendance of players until he has assurance of their presence. He does not wish to disappoint the New Englanders.

Already the opening guns in the publicity fight have been fired. To determine the personnel of the double sextet that will lead the grand march the Boston American will conduct a voting contest for the selection of the five men and six women players who will, with Governor Walsh of Massachusetts, be out in front. The American has been devoting from two to four columns daily in announcing the terms of the contest, which opened on October 10 and will continue for four weeks. The newspaper has arranged for 121 awards to voters—eleven will have a special reserved box and be guests at the banquet. Eleven others will receive two reserved seats and ninety-nine will receive an invitation.

It is the aim of the committee to secure as free an expression of preference as possible—and it will do everything in its power to get a genuine test of the respective popularity of the players. The exhibitors are aiding the committee by the use of slides—already 225 theaters are advertising the ball, and Mr. Grant estimates that before he is through over 600 houses will be using them. Boosting the contest are the

2,600 agents of the American. The committee has doubled last year's price of admission to the ball—this year tickets are $1 for each person, reserved seats are 50 cents extra, and boxes containing four seats are $10. Additional boxes have been installed, so that the total now is 250. Already checks are coming in; the New England public still remembers that 5,000 were turned from the doors last year and that the record for a paid indoor gathering in New England is still held by the Massachusetts exhibitors.

CINEMA EXHIBITORS' BALL.

The annual entertainment and ball of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Bronx will be held at Hunt's Point Palace, Southern Boulevard and 163d street, on Monday evening, November 1. The entertainment commences at 8.30 o'clock, music will be provided by Clark's orchestra and a general good time is promised. The Bronx exhibitors are known for their hospitality and have always provided liberally for the entertainment of their guests in the past. No exception will be made on this occasion. The dancing floor is one of the best and the crowd will be a jolly one.

Rita Sacchetto

A STAR of international fame and great distinction who appears exclusively in Great Northern productions is Miss Rita Sacchetto, the celebrated dancer and character actress.

Rita Sacchetto.

In her early girlhood she began her theatrical career specializing in dancing and pantomime, and winning the attention of leading critics with her power of mimicry. She has performed in all the famous theatres of the world, including the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, where she delighted many with her marvelous dancing, for Miss Sacchetto is a most versatile artist, combining histrionic with terpsichorean feats. The Dowager Czarina of Russia, after witnessing a performance in St. Petersburg, commanded the actress to appear at the royal box to receive the imperial lady's personal praise. She also received the distinction of appearing before the Infanta Isabella of Spain, and is the recipient of many more great honors.

Her acting is sincere and convincing; she emphasizes the note of womanliness, tenderness and sympathy, pathos and affection, and is particularly well adapted to interpret the roles assigned to her. This, combined with her charming appearance, are what have spelled success for her in the past, and they are factors that will insure that success lasting well into the future.

MARSTON DIRECTING "THE PATRIOT."

Theodore Marston has begun work on the second series of episodes of the Vitagraph production of "The Patriot," in which the action is brought up to the present day. The first two parts depict scenes in the eighteenth century. The final scene in part two, in which the characters appear in the costumes of the period, dissolves into the first scene of part three which brings the action into the twentieth century. The way it was handled by Director Marston makes it appear as if a lapse of two centuries intervene. The cast selected by Mr. Marston for the modern characters include Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, Leo Delaney, Frank Currier, Robert Gaillard, Donald Hall, Lillian Burns and Audrey Berry.

KLEINE HAS ENOUGH SCRIPT.

The scenario department of George Kleine reports a superabundance of splendid stories as the result of its recent advertising campaign for comedy and dramatic subjects. As enough material is now in hand, scenario writers are asked to send no more manuscript for the present.

William H. Tippert

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has appointed William H. Tippert editor of the eastern scenario department to fill the vacancy left by Raymond L. Shrock, who has been advanced to the post of director. In reorganizing the department Mr. Tippert, who is a literary man, with knowledge of scenario editing, revising, adapting and writing, was selected as the best qualified to fill the post.

William H. Tippert.

Mr. Tippert is a Philadelphian. In 1894 he won one of the city's four scholarships in the University of Pennsylvania, being graduated in 1899 with honors and the degree of Master of Arts. He worked on the New York Sun and later joined the McClure forces on the Philadelphia Times.

It was not long before he was made city editor of the Philadelphia Press, which paper he left to join the Philadelphia North American as dramatic critic and associate literary editor.

After ten years of newspaper work he joined the Klaw and Erlanger forces. Then he became secretary to Sigmund Lubin and began his career as a photoplaywright with the Lubin Company. Later he did important work for the Fox Company and for Selig.

Since joining the Universal Mr. Tippert has written "Blood Heritage," a forthcoming release, produced by Brinsley Shaw, and has also written for King Baggot a three-reel drama entitled "The Turning Point," which has just been completed by Henry McRae Webster. His best effort thus far has been the adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's novel, "The Lords of High Decision," which is now being filmed under the direction of John Harvey.

Albert Tuchman

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has appointed Albert Tuchman to the secretaryship of President Laemmle, vice George Kann, who was promoted to business manager of Universal City a few weeks ago. Mr. Tuchman is ably equipped to fill the vacancy and has thorough knowledge of the film industry. He has been President Laemmle's financial secretary for the past year, and during that time has convinced the officials of the company that he is thoroughly capable of filling his new position.

Albert Tuchman.

The active head of the Universal is in his office most of the time when he is in the city and there are a thousand little details which he thrusts upon his secretary. In other words, his secretary is kept busy through the day and often into the night handling correspondence.

It has been said the private secretary of President Laemmle is one of the big men in the film industry, and those who had occasion to transact business with George Kann when he held this post will not hesitate to verify this.

"Nedra" a Big Production

Jose's Gold Rooster Play Staged in Bahamas—Thousands of "Extras" Used.

EDWARD JOSE, the Pathe producer, has just returned from his trip to the Bahamas with his "Nedra" company, and a batch of interesting stories. With him were Margaret Greene, George Probert, Fania Marinoff, Craufurd Kent and a swarm of "extras." Judging from Mr. Jose's stories and the "stills" he brought with him his Gold Rooster play is a colossal production.

Scene from "Nedra" (Pathe).

Readers of the book "Nedra," which is by George Barr McCutcheon, will remember that the hero and heroine are wrecked on an island where they are made king and queen by the natives who never before have seen a white man. There is also a stirring battle between the friendly natives and hostile tribe in which the good generalship of the white man decides the victory. Mr. Jose employed in these battle scenes some 2,000 of the native Bahaman blacks and found to his surprise that they did their parts well. One scene, which is particularly effective, shows the defeated savages jumping from a lofty cliff into the ocean, but the colored actors plunged from it as though it were their own doorstep.

Only once did the dusky supers show fear. There is only one real forest on the island on which they were working and while going through it the company ran across a large snake. The supers fled in all directions, and refused to go into the woods again until the snake was captured. A white man was the only man who dared to go near the reptile and he soon killed it. Work then went on.

As the huge mob of colored people went from place to place to the different locations they formed into military ranks and sang "Tipperary." The rousing chorus from so many throats attracted great attention, it is needless to say, and every one in the islands soon knew Jose's players.

A British warship was lying in the harbor of Nassau and the officers of it extended many courtesies to the players in the way of permitting them to take pictures on shipboard and entertaining them.

HITCHCOCK IN A "FORD FLIVVER" PICTURE.

However funny Raymond Hitchcock may have been in the speaking stage with his individual, copy-proof drawl, and the omnipresent flowing blond lock over the left temple, and however laughable he may have been in his previous film appearances, you may chalk them all off and begin over again with your "laughter ledger" when he makes his bow in the new Lubin feature, "The Wonderful Wager," which is now under course of making under the direction of Rene Plaisetty at the Lubin Betzwood plant.

George V. Hobart is sponsor for the story, and he has done himself full proud, with substance for five thousand feet of riproaring laughter, guaranteed, and whipping the story into scenario form there have been Mark Swan and Daniel Ellis, of the Lubin staff of writers. For this general theme in the play Mr. Hobart has picked on the broad-shouldered "Ford Flivver," and the way he has picked on said Flivver is a caution—the joke books have been backed to darkness.

King Baggot

KING BAGGOT is the veteran of the screen forces of the Universal Company, having joined the Imp in 1909 and been with it continuously. That's a long record for a screen player, for a leading screen player. Mr. Baggot early had leanings to the stage when those leanings were not toward the diamond. As to the latter he did get as far as semi-professional rank. At one time he played with a Burlington club. Also he was with his father in a real estate office and later with an insurance company.

His first stage experience was a season with Koerner's Garden stock company. After a season in one of James H. Wallick's productions he was engaged by Charles E. Blaney for the lead in "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned." In the summer months with the Koerner company he played in support of such stars as Wilton Lackaye, Virginia Harned, Amelia Bingham, Cecilia Loftus, Kelsey and Shannon and Marguerite Clark. Four years with the Lieblers followed, one of his roles being Mr. Bob in the original production of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." His last season on the boards was opposite Marguerite Clark in "The Wishing Ring."

King Baggot.

Mr. Baggot is prominent among his fellow players for his activities during the past three years in the Screen Club, of which he is known as the founder. For the first two years of the existence of this big organization he was president and is now one of the board of governors. It has been said of him that he takes to politics like a duck to water. He makes fast friends, and for them he will "go the limit." He is strong in controversy, but when the smoke has cleared away his hand is ready for the re-establishment of the entente cordiale. Mr. Baggot is also a member of the Lambs.

For the fourth annual ball of the Screen Club, which will be held at the Astor on the evening of Saturday, November 20, Mr. Baggot is chairman of the committee of arrangements.

LUBIN BACK FROM COAST.

"Lubinville," at Indiana avenue, Philadelphia; the Glenwood avenue studio, at 16th street, and Betzwood all took on an aspect of "Old Home Week" on Saturday when Siegmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, returned from his three months' tour of the west. Once more is the familiar "my man" and "my boy" to be heard about the plants and once more is the smile on the faces of Lubin employees, for where is the one who does not look upon Siegmund Lubin not as a "boss" but rather as a paternal friend.

During this western trip Mr. Lubin has enjoyed many celebrations in honor of the "Father of the Industry"; he has been feted at every turn; accorded a day in his honor at the Exposition; been guest of honor of the U. S. Army and Navy officials at the coast, and made the opening address at the new Lubin plant at Coronado, Cal.

ATLANTA MUTUAL OFFICE BURNED.

A fire said to have originated in the inspector's room of the Mutual film exchange at Atlanta at 2.30 in the afternoon spread to the other parts of the two-story building, causing the deaths of three girls employed there. Some of the employees state that the fire was caused by the blowing out of a fuse in the electrical motor attached to the renovator.

The young women who were killed were trapped in a supply room on the second story into which they had fled in order to escape, but were overcome before they could reach a window. Many others were seriously injured.

Manager Charles E. Kessnich has opened an office at 68 Forsythe street and now has an ample supply of films and accessories.

Must Have Permits

Picture Players on Street in Costumes Liable to Arrest Says Magistrate.

MAGISTRATE KROTEL, in the Jefferson Market Court last Thursday made an announcement of more than ordinary import to motion picture players and their employers. In effect it was that he would sustain charges and punish actors who in costume tried to do "film stunts" in public thoroughfares without an especial permit or license. This declaration he made to counsel for George Kleine. The lawyer was trying to explain why Traffic Officer Wm. D. Knealy should not have arrested George Bickel, Dan Crimmons and Max Moree when, on Monday morning he saw them, garbed as regulation pirates with big moustaches, clanging cutlasses, long-barreled revolvers and Sixteenth Century boots, alight from an auto and make their way toward a vacant lot in the vicinity of Fourth avenue and Thirteenth street, where it was afterward explained it was intended to make a bit of film history.

Knealy, evidently thinking he had caught red-handed the band of thieves who had been operating in Manhattan in the guise of motion picture actors, grew considerably excited and blew his whistle loud enough to attract a small army of policemen who, surrounding the luckless thespians, escorted them to the Mercer Street Station, where bail was quickly supplied.

In court, however, Knealy charged the alleged offenders with disorderly conduct in appearing on a public thoroughfare in masquerade. Magistrate Krotel sustained his charge, found the actors guilty, but suspended sentence.

Bickel is of the team of Bickel and Watson, noted comedians; Crimmons is of the team of Crimmons and Gore, also comedians, and Moree is noted in legitimate drama and vaudeville.

Magistrate Krotel's decision will likely prove vexsome to the many troupes of motion picture actors obliged to pass through the city's streets in stage costume in order to save time, or who must get local color to scenes supposed to be enacted in Greater New York.

An arrangement may be made by which special, yearly permits will be issued to Mr. Kleine and other moving picture firms, enabling their employees to perform their necessary duties while in costume without molestation.

SOUTHERN GIRLS IN KALEM'S "MONEY GULF."

Although cynics have never been able to speak harshly enough of blase, bored New York, five little southern girls who have just finished spending the happiest days of their lives here vow it a wonderful, enchanted city where everybody, from the Mayor down, wears a smile of welcome and does all he or she can to greet the strangers within their gates.

Kalem's Dixie Girls

The girls are the Misses Marie Bain, Gladys Thornton, Jessie Ruth Snow, Mary Lee House and Irene Miller. Their presence in this city is due to the fact that they won a popularity contest, conducted by the "Metropolis," a Jacksonville, Fla., daily. In addition to being given a trip to New York, the winners were to take part in a three-part drama, "The Money Gulf," produced by the Kalem Company.

Although a trip to the big city was in itself sufficient to make every girl in Jacksonville determined to prove herself one of the five most popular misses residing in that city, the opportunity to take part in a photoplay was the stronger attraction. The contest was strenuously contested from the outset and thousands of votes were polled.

The young ladies who appear in the accompanying illustration proved the victors. Before leaving New York, they were cast for their respective roles in "The Money Gulf," by Harry Millarde, who is producing this feature at the Kalem studios in Jacksonville. Then, after completing their work, the young ladies started on their tour.

Roy Applegate

ROY APPLEGATE, the Equitable Motion Picture Company's regular "heavy," has had experience in almost every phase of the motion picture field. He has directed, some. He was the dramatic producer of the Mirrorgraph's recent feature "All for a Girl," in which Renee Kelly, the pretty actress who is en tour this season with Henry Miller in "Daddy Long Legs," played the lead. Then he appeared with Lionel Barrymore last spring in a number of pictures.

Roy Applegate.

Mr. Applegate, however, has just signed a contract to appear as a "heavy" for some time. He is tall and very dark, and of the type of features which is especially adapted to that sort of work. His first work for the Equitable was in "Life's Crucible," in which he appears opposite Clara Whipple. He has since played in "The Bludgeon," and is now engaged with the rest of the company in "The Fisher Girl," in which he again plays opposite Miss Whipple.

Sometime in Mr. Applegate's past is a short history of his connection with a newspaper. Whether as editor or reporter, he will not say, but at any rate, along with most men who have done journalistic work, Mr. Applegate cherishes a secret longing to some day possess a newspaper in a town, in which he can write and publish everything he wants to.

A curious incident happened one day when the Equitable company was at Block Island, R. I., last week, producing the picture of "The Fisher Girl."

The popular heavy had been told that he would not be wanted one day, but at noon Mr. Seay, the director, changed his mind, and sent his assistant in search of Mr. Applegate. The actor could not be found. At about four o'clock he was finally located. He was in the back room of the village's newspaper, setting up type, and writing "scare heads" for all the village's "juicy bits."

The editor tried to sell the paper to him, but the actor determined to remain true to his profession and returned to Flushing still a "heavy."

FAMOUS BASEBALL PLAYER JOINS KLEINE FORCES.

Charles Nichols, the famous ex-baseball pitcher of the Boston National baseball team, is now a member of the George Kleine selling forces, traveling out of the Kansas City office. Mr. Nichols was the hurling end of the Boston National's celebrated battery of Nichols and Bennett from 1890 to 1900. His baseball career began with Omaha in 1888. He has managed the Kansas City team of the American Association and has been identified with sports of various kinds in the Missouri metropolis for a number of years. Nichols is remembered by Joe Vila, sporting editor of the New York Evening Sun, as "the best pitcher Boston ever had."

Equitable Directors Afield

Prosecute a Wide Search for New and Interesting Settings for Their Productions.

THAT the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation is intent upon technically perfect productions, as much as that quantity is possible in film plays, is best attested by the activities of the seven men who control the productional destiny of that concern's releases.

Webster Cullison is at Martinique, where, on the edges of Mont Pelee, he is seeking the proper background for the production of "Idols," in which Katharine Kaelred is the star. The scenario of "Idols" calls for rugged coast lines, abysmal chasms, primeval caves and big water movements which are all possible in the French West Indies. Before deciding on Martinique and the surrounding islands Cullison and his camera man visited Isle of Pines, Jamaica, Saba Rock, St. Kitts, St. Thomas and Port of Spain, Trinidad. It was after three weeks of travel that the director selected the rim of the famous volcano for his camping grounds. Miss Kaelred and her supporting players leave New York this week on the Booth Line Steamer, Madeirense, for Barbadoes, where they will catch a channel steamer for Mont Pelee.

Joseph A. Golden, of Triumph Films, an Equitable producing company, is at Washington, where, with Charles J. Ross and his supporting players, many scenes in "The Senator" are being made, with the Capitol, Congressional Library, Treasury and Senate Hall as settings for the various scenes.

John Ince, for his production of "Greater Love," in which William Courtenay, Arthur Ashley and Mary Charleson will play the principal roles, has engaged a train of nine cars from the Erie Railroad and will, while traveling from New York City to Jamestown, N. Y., make the necessary scenes to constitute the first two reels of the picture. In addition to an engine and eight cars, the train will contain a fully provisioned diner and a crew of waiters, chefs, etc.

Marshall Farnum, now busily engaged on "Creeping Tides," in which Alexandra Carlisle is playing the star role, left Saturday of last week for Cienfuegos, Cuba, where it is claimed by those who know, that the tides rise and fall fifty-two feet. Mr. Farnum and his cast will work on the sandy stretches of Cienfuegos for two weeks, with the tremendous tidal actions and subsequent surf as a background.

E. Mason Hopper, who is staging "The Labyrinth" for Equitable, and which will be seen on the World Film program early in December, is completing arrangements for the absolute wrecking of two giant mogul engines, which, by arrangement with the New York Central railroad, will be staged near enough to New York for the local trade press to witness the event. Two antiquated engines, both powerful enough to be impressive and both brought up to date with paint and polish, will be sent head on into collision. Mr. Hopper and General Manager Felix F. Feist are now consummating the final arrangements for the big scene. Gail Kane and a strong cast will handle the principal roles in "The Labyrinth."

Harry Pollard, who is directing Margarita Fischer in "The Dragon," leaves with Miss Fischer and her company for Jacksonville, Fla., this week, where the requisite scenes for the picture in which no little allegorical and symbolical incident will play important parts, and which incidents can be better staged in the Southern city than elsewhere.

Charles Seay returned last Friday from Block Island, where many of the most powerful situations and scenes in "The Fisher Girl," in which Muriel Ostriche is starring, were made.

Mr. Seay spent two weeks at Block Island before the company arrived and was successful in securing the cooperation and services of the large fishing colony on the island. A yacht was blown up, a storm was braved by the volunteer life saving crew and many other typical marine climaxes that go to make "The Fisher Girl" a big, technically perfect picture were made.

DE FLESH DECORATING PICTURE HOUSES.

Charles De Flesh, scenic artist, who has a record of thirty-five years' accomplishments in theatrical decoration, is now giving much attention to motion picture houses. He is specializing in day, sunset and night light effects, as may be seen at the Dyckman and Crescent theaters in New York. The Duffield theater, Brooklyn, exemplifies Mr. De Flesh's ideas in imitation stage effects.

Men Who Head the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

The group above shown includes some of the biggest of these men—not in stature perhaps, but in point of achievement. They constitute the officers and directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc. They are assembling for the first regular meeting of the Board of Directors. From left to right they are:

Wm. M. Seabury, general counsel; W. Stephen Bush, vice-president of the Moving Picture World; Walter W. Irwin, chairman executive committee, general manager V-L-S-E, Inc.; Joseph W. Engel, treasurer, treasurer Metro Pictures Corp'n.; J. E. Brulatour, director, distributor Eastman Kodak Co.; E. A. MacManus, secretary, general manager International Film Service; S. L. Rothapfel, director, manager Rialto theater; Wm. A. Johnston, director, editor Motion Picture News; Max Stearn, director, manager Majestic theater, Columbus, O.; Nicholas Power, vice-president, president Nicholas Power Co.; R. H. Cochrane, director, vice-president Universal Film Mfg. Co.; John R. Freuler, vice-president, president Mutual Film Corp.; J. W. Binder, executive secretary.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company, president of the Board of Trade, is not included in the group, being ill at the time the picture was made. Just prior to making the picture here shown, the magnates were filmed as they drove up in their motors by the news weeklies. These pictures will be shown all over the country in the current releases of the Hearst-Selig, Mutual and Universal weeklies.

Samuel F. Wheeler Back in Law

Brother's Election to the Bench Compels Him to Suspend His Motion Picture Work.

ONE of Pennsylvania's foremost exhibitors, Samuel F. Wheeler, the founder of two of the most prosperous motion picture theaters in West Philadelphia, has decided to re-enter the practice of the law, in which he had been engaged for upward of twelve years before entering the exhibiting business. Mr. Wheeler's brother, William T. Wheeler, one of the leading attorneys of the Quaker City, has recently been elected to the bench. Great interests were in the keeping of the new judge and he has arranged with his brother, Samuel, to attend to these interests.

Samuel F. Wheeler.

Samuel F. Wheeler, who for many years has played a considerable part in the political and social life of Philadelphia will, therefore, once more return to his old profession, with offices on the twelfth floor of the Finance Building, South Penn Square. Mr. Wheeler has been one of the most relentless of the foes of the censors and censorship and his many battles with the Chief Inquisitor are well remembered. He will be glad to help all exhibitors who may need legal advice. With his knowledge of the law and his practical experience of the exhibiting business he will be in a position to render valuable services to his old colleagues.

"My theaters," said Mr. Wheeler, "have been leased to the Paragon Theaters Corporation, but I still take a lively interest in their welfare. I have taken charge of my brother's clientele, but it is possible that I may in time go back into this wonderful industry with the indescribable fascination. The industry is still in its boom state. The man who can think two years ahead will make a fortune in motion pictures."

TOURNEUR HEADS PARAGON COMPANY.

With "quality, not quantity" as its motto, a new film manufacturing concern, the Paragon Film, Inc., will open a great studio, now nearing completion, and a factory at Fort Lee, N. J., about Dec. 1. At the head of the organization, which is backed by ample capital, is M. Maurice Tourneur, the eminent French producer of motion pictures, who came to this country from Paris a year ago and who in that time has staged some of the most artistic screen productions seen in this country. His office in the New Jersey corporation is the dual one of vice-president and general manager. The Paragon will release its output through the World Film Corporation, with which Mr. Tourneur has been associated.

"The new company," said Mr. Tourneur, "will enable me to present photodramas of five or more reels each, along special lines, which I have long felt would be very profitable. We will not attempt to turn out a million feet a week, nor even from thirty to forty reels, as nothing really artistic can be assured to such an output. Our intention is to produce about twenty-four big, five-reel features a year and perhaps three or four larger ones, which will mean from 10,000 to 15,000 feet of film a month. We are certain of the best market for such an output and we expect to produce better pictures than have yet been made. This will make the exhibitors our friends."

STRAND'S MUSIC FOR "CARMEN" COMPLETE.

B. A. Rolfe and Carl Edouards have completed the incidental music which is to be played to the "Carmen" picture in which Geraldine Farrar will be seen at the Strand theater the week commencing October 31. This music is made up principally from Bizet's opera, and is said to be strikingly appropriate in every respect to the scenes shown on the screen. Miss Farrar will be seen in person at one of the performances. The date of her appearance will be announced later.

Francine Larrimore

FRANCINE LARRIMORE, ingenue lead of "Some Baby" at the Fulton theater, has been engaged by the Gaumont Company to appear in the next Rialto Star three-reel feature on the Mutual Program, produced by William Haddock. The title of this photoplay, in which one of Broadway's current stars will be seen, is "The Devil's Darling." Miss Larrimore will play the role of an innocent girl who comes under the influence of a wicked adventuress who tries all her wiles to force the younger girl to sell her soul, to no avail.

Francine Larrimore.

Miss Larrimore is an American girl, although she was born in Rouen, France. She toured the country four years ago in the A. H. Woods production of "Over Night." She became known to Broadway when she played with the Princess Players in "Any Night." She has been the favorite of many other productions.

Miss Larrimore makes her bow to the screen in the "Devil's Darling." Although she has been urged to enter the pictures, she has heretofore declined.

H. Cooper Cliffe

H. COOPER CLIFFE, the eminent English dramatic actor, who has been featured in several Metro feature productions, has just completed work in the new five-part picture, "Tables Turned," produced by the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., in which Emmy Wehlen is starred. Mr. Cliffe is also featured in "The Final Judgment," another Rolfe-Metro production now being released, in which Ethel Barrymore appears in the stellar role.

H. Cooper Cliffe.

As a dramatic leading man Mr. Cliffe occupies an enviable position, distinctly his own, on both the speaking stage and the screen. He is a direct descendant of the celebrated family of Kembles, and as a young man possessed a wonderful baritone voice. He made his professional debut in grand opera, but after one year at the Covent Garden Sir Henry Irving induced him to take up the dramatic stage. For three years he appeared with Sir Henry at the Lyceum theater, playing juvenile roles. Following his engagement there he became Ellen Terry's leading man. Then he went to the old Drury Lane, where he was featured in prominent roles for two years.

Mr. Cliffe became a full fledged star playing Shylock, Richard the III, Cardinal Wolsey, Benedick, Dante and other big roles in London and in the provinces. He first came to this country with Mr. and Mrs. Kendall, playing in New York and on tour. Then he joined E. S. Willard and later appeared with William Faversham in "The Squaw Man." He added to his laurels in "Everywoman" by his artistic creation of the mystic role of "Nobody." Mr. Cliffe's first appearance in motion pictures was with Robert Warrick in "The Face in the Moonlight." Then he joined the Rolfe-Metro forces, and was soon in an important role in support of Hamilton Revelle in "An Enemy to Society."

School for Theater Managers

Milwaukee Chinaman Teaches Countrymen How to Run Picture Houses on American Plan.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., is the home of one of the most unique experiments in the moving picture world—not as might be supposed, some new stunt in displaying pictures, but the establishing of what might be called a school for the education of theatrical managers of picture playhouses.

But this is not the most unique phase of the experiment, for the school is to teach Chinese young men how to run moving picture theaters, so that they can go back to their native land and open playhouses on American lines, with the most up-to-date methods of America's great picture industry at their command.

There are six Chinese young men now in Milwaukee studying this problem, and their teacher is himself a Chinaman, who has developed from a chop suey retailer to a theater owner and promoter.

Charlie Toy, who twenty years ago was an up-state laundryman, at Oshkosh, and who later came to Milwaukee and opened the first chop suey restaurant in this city, is the picture magnate who is trying this experiment. Toy is now probably one of the wealthiest Chinamen in America. From a restaurant owner he has developed a huge importing business and is today the largest importer of Chinese foodstuffs in America. His consignments of mushrooms alone, for instance, come in two-ton lots, and he pays Uncle Sam nearly $100,000 a year in customs duties on these imports.

Not content with this, however, he developed a moving picture theater, with a typical American play on his own name. Three years ago Toy invested $100,000 in a downtown six-story building, devoted chiefly to his restaurant and wholesale business, but built in the style of old China. The defaulting in rent of one of his tenants gave him a new idea, and he used a portion of his ground floor for the development of what he calls the Toy theater. His theater is Chinese in style, interior and exterior, but plays to an exclusive patronage, the prices being double those of any of the other standard houses in Milwaukee, and the attractions being entirely four to six-reel high-priced features.

With this as his combination school and theater, Charlie Toy has started out to make picture theater experts of Chinese boys with money who want to learn the business and then go back to China and start in business for themselves.

The first of his students will leave in a month, Moy Wah and Moy Hop being the two who will make the first plunge into the Chinese field as American-trained managers. Both have studied at the University of Wisconsin, and are thoroughly Americanized. Charlie's two sons Moy and Charlie, are at present handling the local interests of their father, but are about to contract for a location for a Toy theater in Chicago, where their father is already the real, though not nominal, owner of one of the biggest Chinese restaurants. Lester Lee and Loo Wau are others of the group who are being trained in the picture business, and they also are former state university students.

REORGANIZES PATHE ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT.

General Manager L. J. Gasnier, of Pathe, has reorganized his general publicity department to take care of the increase in business since he has assumed active direction of the Pathe American interests.

W. A. S. Douglas, who recently returned from the Paris office, has been appointed general publicity director with entire control of all branches of advertising and also of the publicity departments of the Paris and London offices so far as Pathe American pictures are concerned.

Under the new regime, George A. Smith becomes serial syndicate director.

P. A. Parsons will remain, as before, trade advertising and publicity manager.

A. R. Caughey remains in charge of posters.

B. Millhauser becomes editor of Pathe, weekly house publication.

H. J. Walsh assumes the duties of assistant syndicate manager.

Pathe will continue to run two series at the same time. The stories of one will appear in the Sunday papers throughout the country and those of the other in the dailies. The general direction of the Sunday serial will be in the hands of Assistant Managing Director M. Ramirez Torres; that of the daily will be taken care of by Mr. Douglas. Mr. Smith will have charge of the syndicating organization of both Pathe series.

Sends $100 to Hospital Fund

George Loane Tucker, with London Film Company, Contributes to Aid of Unfortunate Fellow-Players.

TWO years' absence from home surroundings have not lessened the keen interest of George Loane Tucker in the doings of his old associates. Since leaving New York Mr. Tucker has been producing pictures for the London Film Company, Limited, the studio of which is at St. Margaret's, near Twickenham, Middlesex, England.

A letter from Mr. Tucker under date of September 25 incloses a draft for $100 for the Motion Picture Hospital Fund, in the sending of which he says he takes a great deal of pleasure. The draft has been turned over to Adolph Zukor, treasurer of the fund. It is the largest single contribution so far received.

Mr. Tucker has just finished work on Hall Caine's "The Christian," which will make 8,000 feet; "The Shulamite," a 5,000-foot adaptation from the celebrated play, "Jelfs," a story of English banking, and "The Game of Liberty," one of Oppenheim's recent novels. Mr. Tucker is now getting ready for the production of "Arsene Lupin," following the completion of which he will take up an adaptation of Hornung's famous "Raffles."

A meeting of the subscribers to the hospital fund will be called for Saturday, October 30, at 5 p. m., probably in the offices of the Famous Players, 507 Fifth avenue.

James T. Hennegan

JAMES T. HENNEGAN, whose portrait appears below, is one of the young old-timers in the film industry. His experience in the field includes that of exchange owner and manager, theater owner and manager and film manufacturing both in the advertising and dramatic fields.

James T. Hennegan.

Mr. Hennegan, who recently resigned as secretary of the Smallwood Film Corporation, where he also served in the capacity of technical director, entered the film business as manager of the Lubin theater early in nineteen hundred and seven after having had considerable experience in other branches of the show business through his association with Hennegan & Co., the Cincinnati show printers. After two years as manager of the Lubin, Hennegan went to Chicago, where as one of the owners of the Western Feature Film Company he entered the manufacturing branch and released one of the earliest state rights successes, "Old Wyoming Days."

This experience was followed by him as a state rights seller and later as manager of the Magnetic Film Service of Cincinnati. He was also manager of the Cincinnati Music Hall, when it was opened about three years ago as the first large picture house in the middle west catering to a twenty-five-cent patronage. For the past two years Mr. Hennegan has been associated with the Smallwood Film Corporation. He says he will take a short vacation before making any plans for the future.

ROOSEVELT IN THANHOUSER SUBJECT.

In the Thanhouser (Mutual) release of October 19, entitled "The Spirit of Audubon," Theodore Roosevelt plays second to the spirit of the dead Audubon, two kiddies and some 75,000 birds who made their homes on the half a hundred islands which when he was in office it was within his power to give over to them for their own special use.

On a photographing and inspection trip to the island homes of the birds in the Gulf of Mexico, Mr. Roosevelt accompanied Mr. Job, the photographer, and incidentally came in for a bit of posing along with the birds. He is displayed on the moving film watching gulls, herons, wild ducks and other specie of wild fowls which circle and wheel about him.

Spoor Adds Orchestra

Soothes the Players' Troubled Spirits and Facilitates Work with Music.

IN THE filming of "The Raven," a melange of George C. Hazelton's biographical novel of the poet, and the poet's poem of that name, arranged and produced by Charles J. Brabin, the Essanay company resorted to music to raise Henry B. Walthall, Warda Howard and other members of the cast up to the required emotional pitch.

George K. Spoor, president of the company, conceived the idea as he stood on the studio floor and watched Brabin and the others working on the intense scenes of the photoplay. There was difficulty in reaching and keeping the pitch required because this play gives an actor little time to get balance. After two or three of the heaviest scenes had been rehearsed and retaken many times without success, Mr. Spoor left the floor and got busy at the telephone.

That afternoon when the members of the cast returned from lunch, tehy found the "seats" for the play surrounded by wooden screens. When they were called to the floor and prepared to resume their work, they were startled by the music of a full orchestra, playing some of Greig's Pere Gynt Music.

The play was finished in record time for a production of its kind. It was easy to portray the emotions of Poe, his wife, and other characters because of the music. Mr. Spoor, after a consultation with his directing staff, announced that music would be used at the Essanay studio in all future productions. This is the first time in film history that music has been used in the production of photoplays. Its tremendous success has established it as one of the first aids in the production of emotional plays.

Did you ever feel like a burglar? No? Well, slip in quietly with a lot of noise on Nat Rothstein some day when he is "making up" on his serial book without giving the Universal high sign, then tell me about it.

Are you voting for or against suffrage? If your mind is not made up there is doubt as to whether woman is inferior to man in the commercial world, go in and say how-do to Mrs. J. Johnson, or better yet, sneak in and watch her dispose of a man's job, that of editing The Paramount Magazine, and pushing out publicity.

GAUMONT COMPANIES TO GO TO JACKSONVILLE.

An ambitious autumn and winter all-American program has just been announced by the Gaumont Company. At the first indication of continuous inclement weather, three companies will be sent by boat to Jacksonville, Fla. Making their headquarters at the recently leased studios known as the Dixieland theater property, the entire Florida peninsula will be used by the directors in producing Rialto Star and Casino Star Features. During the winter, extensive reconstruction work will result in the practical rebuilding of the Flushing studios. Several comedy companies will remain here, however, throughout the winter.

Edwin Carewe

EDWIN CAREWE, who has just signed what is probably the biggest contract ever given to a director of his age with the Rolfe-Metro Company is only thirty-two years old. In "Destiny" or "The Soul of a Woman," by Anthony P. Kelley, however, he has produced what is conceded to be one of the greatest of all regular program pictures, for which a cash profit of $50,000 was offered to its owners three hours after its private-view presentation. He has recently finished "The Final Judgment," with Ethel Barrymore as the star, supported by H. Cooper Cliffe, Percy Standing, Walter Hitchcock and Mahlin Hamilton, and Frank Dazey's "The House of Tears," in which Martha Hedman is the star. He will produce another photoplay with Emily Stevens, his star in "Destiny," and then will undertake a huge feature for the Rolfe-Metro along entirely new lines.

Edwin Carewe.

Mr. Carewe is one-fourth Chickasaw Indian, his maternal grandmother having been a full-blooded member of that tribe. His father is F. M. Fox, an Englishman by birth, but now a practicing lawyer in Corpus Christi, Texas. After being expelled from four schools in less than a year for his pranks, he ran away from home, punched cows and generally roughed it until he was seventeen, when he made his stage debut with a repertoire show playing one-night stands in Missouri.

After playing in stock from one end of the country to the other, Mr. Carewe became leading man for Laurette Taylor and afterward played with Otis Skinner, Nat Goodwin, Chauncey Olcott, Mattie Keene, Hal Davis and Augustine McHugh and Kitty Gordon. The last engagement, which was in "Alma," introduced him to Joe Weber, for whom he put on two "Alma" road companies. This was his introduction to direction. Three and a half years ago he had his first motion picture experience, which was with Lubin, under the direction of George Nicholls. He was featured afterward with the Tampa Feature Films and then assisted in the organization of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, of which he became principal director.

Mr. Carewe's first work for B. A. Rolfe was a year ago when he played the lead in "The Three of Us," with Mabel Taliaferro as the star.

VIGNOLA HAS ENOUGH CHORUS GIRLS.

Robert Vignola is ordinarily the most cheerful of individuals. Of late, however, the smile seems to have faded from his face. His shoulders are perceptibly bowed, while at times a furtive, hunted look appears in his eyes.

The trouble dates back to the issue of this publication in which it was announced that motion picture chorus girls were being used by Kalem in its forthcoming four-act production of the famous extravaganza, "The Black Crook." Since that day, chorus girls by the score have been waylaying Mr. Vignola at every opportunity, and at all hours of the day, beseeching him for positions in the Kalem chorus.

"Please! please announce in your publication that Kalem is not in need of any more chorus girls!" exclaimed Mr. Vignola the other day. "Ever since the first announcement was published, practically every chorus girl in New York and vicinity—or so it seems—has pestered the life out of everybody connected with the Cliffside studio in an effort to land an engagement in 'The Black Crook.'

"In the first place," the producer explained, "the chorus people were engaged long ago. In the second, they finish up in a day or two and then their engagements end. Consequently, any person who tries to see me, or any of the Cliffside attaches in reference to getting into the Kalem chorus, is simply wasting valuable time."

Another Censorship Angle

Too Many Exhibitors Help to Confirm the Uninformed in Their Belief in the Justice of Censorship.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

NO PERSON who has given the matter thought will admit that there is real need for censorship—other than public opinion—for a generality of produced photoplays; indeed, it is safe to say that 90 per cent. of the rulings of the various censors are childish and without a foundation in reason. But while decrying the censorship we must look also upon the other side, and it must be realized that much harm is done the business by the hasty and ill-considered action of some exhibitors and the deliberate action of others.

Censorship would not be permitted to endure for a day if public opinion were fully against it. This has been shown time and again in other matters. The trouble is that only lately has the motion picture become the recreation of the affluent as well as the diversion of the poor. The legislator can get free tickets to the theater or can afford to pay admission. To him the immense business of displaying motion pictures is largely a theory and an opinion—the opinion of others, and those who talk the loudest and most forcefully and are the best organized win their point.

Two classes of persons seek to establish censorships. Those who will directly profit and those who take pleasure in interfering with the legitimate pleasures of others. To these active partisans of the censorship idea must be added those who are passively in favor of it because they believe that it must be a good thing. These are the ones who form the bulk of the support of the censorship idea, and these are they who are influenced by letters like this received the other day:

> I am a traveling man and find lots of enjoyment in the pictures, but when I see an exhibitor advertising like the enclosed ad, I consider it an insult to decent thinking people and high time that we encourage a board of censors instead of discouraging them.
> I haven't seen the picture, and it is not likely that I would encourage my wife and daughter to go and see it if it is anything like the ad represents.
> Honestly, what do you think of such trash?

The advertisement accompanying the letter (which was fully signed and very different from the usual anonymous type) showed a four and a half inch single column cut of a woman almost entirely nude. Above was the attracter line:

SOLD FOR $5,000.
Her Pride Only—Not Her Honor.

It was the Paramount picture "Sold," which is in no way sallacious, but the catchline went out of its way to suggest that it was and in large type opposite the cut was:

Pauline
Frederick as The Model
in
SOLD.

The exhibitor seems to have deliberately sought to convey the idea that Miss Frederick would be seen in the nude in the pose depicted. He probably drew to the theater some morbid curiosity seekers, but he also made an enemy of a picture lover and created in the minds of many beside this correspondent a belief that the picture was unfit for public exhibition.

A California exhibitor goes still further. He recently announced a comedy. Not only did he print the subjoined announcement, but he enclosed the matter in a "box" that its importance might be made still more apparent:

> The police stopped this film in Los Angeles and several scenes were cut out, but this copy is absolutely original, with > NOTHING CUT OUT.

The inference is obvious, though in point of fact the film was not particularly crude even in its uncensored condition, but the idea was the same as that of the management of an exceedingly poor musical farce that some years ago paid the police officials of a small town to stop the performance just prior to the presentation of the inanity in New York, and it actually ran the better part of the season in New York for no better a reason than that it has been suppressed by the police.

So long as these things are done, just so long will the opinion obtain among the uninformed that pictures are vile and debasing.

It is only a few weeks since the authorities of a Kentucky town raised a tremendous row over "Hypocrites." In the same state another exhibitor, George H. Bleich, of the Empress theater, Owensboro, wanted to run this striking subject. His method of meeting possible objection is explained in his own words:

> Recently I booked "Hypocrites," and, as the dubious character of the production had previously reached town, I gave out to the press that previous to the showing of same publicly that a committee would be invited to view it privately. I invited, and it was made plain that I, with a capital I, was doing the inviting, representatives of the newspapers, the Mayor, members of the Woman's Club, and three pastors of different denominations.
> I preceded the running off of the films at this private exhibition with a statement to this body that if, in their estimation, the picture was objectionable, it would not be shown to the public and that my theater would remain closed alhough "Hypocrites" was heavily advertised, and the loss to me would be quite a large sum.
> The finding of the committee was that "Hypocrites" was a beautiful picture and no objection was found. The ladies in particular were loud in their praise of what they declared an artistic treatment of a great theme. The result: A monster patronage at advanced prices, a turn away of hundreds, necessitating the playing of a return engagement.
> But—suppose my committee should have declared against this picture? I'll tell you: Could you imagine a more valuable piece of advertising than my letting the house stay dark for the day and assigning as the reason that the picture was unfit as declared by the people gathered at your own solicitation? Study the effect when it is considered no objection had been raised and none would be raised by the authorities.
> It must not be taken for granted that I picked just those who were friendly. Not so, I selected representative people.
> It is certain that I gained in the estimation of the public by the steps taken. Unfriendly criticisms on the picture were laid and the feelings exist that I am ready to sacrifice (and I am) rather than impose bad pictures on the community.
> Had my Lexington brethren not waited for the authorities to come forward in a "grand stand" play against "Hypocrites," but had themselves chosen a committee as I did, the chances are great that all the noise over the showing of the films there would not have resulted, with the connecting agitation of a local board of censors.

One exhibitor thought of the effect of the film on his general business. Instead of seeking to run counter to public opinion, he left that public to be the judge. He appealed to reason and not to sensation, and his appeal was heard. "Hypocrites" was shown in Owensboro without excitement. It was regarded as a play and not as an exhibition. In another part of the state an opposition to a self-constituted board of morals merely made them more intolerant and more determined than ever in their opposition.

The small profits to be made through the showing of sensational films such as the Frank case, the Becker case and similar "reproductions" of criminal events, the additional money to be gained through the pretense that something is wicked when it is not, is in no way equivalent to the sums lost through the hampering restrictions of the censorship. One of the causes of a loss of interest in the films is the fact that in many states the censorship is so rigid that an uncensored film is the exception and a curiosity and films are never shown in their completeness but sometimes with essential explanations removed bodily because the scene is laid in a bar room or because a murdered man is shot in the scene and not just outside the range of the camera. There has been at least one instance of a murder trial in which the audience did not know who had been killed, because the eliminated scene had not been replaced by a leader, and it is not possible to hold interest to his emasculated and mutilated stuff. It should be possible to act directly against offending exhibitors and not make the whole decent body suffer for the widely advertised sins of the few.

FILM PRODUCER WRITES A PLAY.

Ashley Miller, who produces all of the Arnold Daly photoplays, has completed a drama for the speaking stage. It is in three acts and deals with the child-labor problem. As "Damaged Goods" was given the backing of the medical fraternity, so the Miller play will be presented under the patronage of the National Child-Labor Committee. Miss Ethel Browning, the tiny American actress, whose portrayal of the child, "Nuri," in the Harrison Grey Fiske production of "Marta of the Lowlands" will not be forgotten, will play the principal role.

EQUITY PURCHASES GUNBY STUDIO.

The Equity Motion Picture Company, of New York, has bought the studio located at Ridgefield Park, N. J., formerly operated by J. W. Gunby. The studio is described as being of the latest construction. The Equity has also bought a large developing and printing plant at Lake Sunapee, N. H.

Director and Actor

Why My Latest Picture Proves My Contentions for Harmony Between Them.

By Muriel Ostriche.

HOW many times I have sat in a darkened theater while around me sat friends and strangers, commenting on my lack of dramatic ability, my apparent ignoring of certain stage tricks employed by other artists and my seeming indifference in big dramatic moments, I will not attempt to enumerate.

Chas. Seay Instructing Muriel Ostriche in the Art of Crying

I have sat within earshot of dear friends, unaware of my presence and heard them "roast" my work to a frazzle. They were dear friends, for they prefaced their remarks with apologetic statements of how much they thought of me, personally, but how little they liked me on the screen.

"She is a lovely girl," they would say, "but my, how little she is fitted to that role."

Oh, how I would have liked to go up on the stage and enlighten them. How I would have sacrificed everything if only I could have told them how, while the big scene was being taken, Mr. Blank, the director, was frothing at some trivial incident. How I would have loved to tell them how, that very afternoon, the director had flung his coat upon the floor and in primeval anger wiped his shoes on the coat. But this was impossible. This, the unseen side of film acting, was not for the public, Not for the ears of my friends. Not meant to dispel the magic illusion screen work builds up in the spectator. All must be rosy in the minds of the motion picture audience, else the hallucination is gone.

True, all directors have not been unsatisfactory. There have been moments in my work when I imagined myself in paradise. When the end of my day's work found me tired unto being ill, yet wanting to continue. But this type of director seems to lack virility. The courteous, smiling producing genius, whatever else may be his virtues, fails to bring forth what lies latent in his subject.

My latest effort, and my first for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, proves every contention I have made. The contentions are:

1. Absolute harmony must exist between director and actor.
2. Courtesy and a bond of good fellowship must characterize the two important elements, director and cast.
3. Equal intelligence of actor and director.
4. Favoritism in the studio must disappear.
5. Absolute knowledge of the theme and subject by both director and cast.

When the actor and director meet on a plane of absolute equality, aggressiveness and hostility disappear and the bonds of co-operation and friendship seal the work with harmony, then will the every picture result in fifty per cent. better acting and one hundred per cent. greater effectiveness.

In "A Daughter of the Seas," in which I was placed under the direction of Charles Seay and for the first time I found four of my contentions personified—the fifth developing.

We had a hard story to visualize. It is a sea story and required many technical touches, which were they to be screened in any manner at all in keeping with sea tradition, would need the touch of a seasoned mariner.

I was introduced to Mr. Seay by General Manager Feist of the Equitable. Russell Edgar Smith, author of the story, read the script to us in Mr. Feist's office. We all liked the story and it was decided that my personality would fit the principal role.

To take the picture, then, with maritime atmosphere, and yet retain the effete contrast, called for by the author, was of prime importance.

Several days later, Mr. Seay called me on the phone. "I am going to Block Island for a few days," he said. "Do you think you would like to go along?"

We went to Block Island, to New London and thence to Cape Cod and there, for nine days, this able man studied fisher folk and their ways and I studied the female life. Result, I consider my work in that picture one hundred per cent. better than anything I have ever done.

At Block Island we engaged forty fishermen and their families to play small parts. It was a most satisfying sight to see the way Mr. Seay handled these crude, childish people. He deftly measured every word, he blended his theatrical knowledge and the local atmosphere and before the week had passed there was not a fisherman, or any one of his family who would not have gone out into the worst kind of a storm if Mr. Seay had requested it of them.

"Thank you, Miss Ostriche," he would say if something went well. "That's not exactly right, what do you say to trying it over again?" was his strongest epithet when he was not pleased with a bit of business. And the humblest supernumerary received the same courteous treatment.

Miss Ethel Langtry, playing a very small part, was taken ill with ptomaine poisoning during the taking of the last scenes at Block Island. Miss Langtry worked the last three days in perfect misery and a much weakened condition.

"Do you think for an instant," she said upon returning to New York, "that I would inconvenience Mr. Seay. I'd rather have died than delay his work for a minute." Thus spoke an ordinary extra woman Imagine then, how far we, who are considered of more importance, would go for the proper director, who is ever proper.

Harmony, co-operation, courtesy, consideration, all work to a successful picture, as much as oodles and oodles of money. One without the other is not sufficient.

A director must build the illusions for his actor. He must make our imaginations leap out through the invisibility to the realization of things that are to happen—beyond—in the distant future of the story in hand.

He must be our constant inspiration, our companion, our cause, for we are a common cause indeed.

PATHE HAS NOT YET SELECTED PRODUCER OF "WHO IS GUILTY?"

We are in receipt of the following from the Pathe Exchange, Inc.:

"In view of the recent published statements with reference to the coming Pathe series, 'Who Is Guilty?' which statements have been at variance with those sent out from this office, we desire to emphasize the fact that 'Who Is Guilty?' is the property of Pathe; that the producer has not yet been decided upon; that before long we will publicly announce as the author of the stories one of the most famous women writers of the time; and that George B. Seitz, the Pathe scenario editor, will write the scenarios and has already finished several."

EVA MARIUS PAIGNE WITH ASSOCIATED.

Miss Eva Marius Paigne, the talented and beautiful young leading lady, can boast a long line of theatrical ancestors. Her father, Alexander Marius Paigne, was for many years leading man with the great Bernhardt, and her mother, Margaret Henry, was Drury Lane's leading woman in the palmy days of Sir Augustus Harris. Miss Paigne's first appearance was with Nance O'Neill and McKee Rankin in the Australian production of Queen Elizabeth, an independent starring tour under the management of J. C. Williamson, who took the young star throughout Australia and New Zealand. Then followed a tour with Andrew Mack and an engagement on the Orpheum turn with a sketch by Will Cressy. The lure of the pictures overtook her when she reached the home of the industry, Los Angeles. Her screen work with the Universal led to her present engagement, which promises to give her ample opportunity for the display of her beauty and talents. She is appearing in a series of new and original two-reel features written and produced by Director Phil Walsh, for the Associated program.

"The Man Who Could Not Beat God"

A Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in Which Maurice Costello Takes the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE guilty conscience is the theme of this story. The dramatic thread is as thin as gossamer and at times it disappears entirely. Maurice Costello, who signalizes his first big part in a blue ribbon feature, has a most difficult part. He is called upon to portray the emotion of remorse on a large number of occasions.

According to the story, a young English farm laborer arouses the ire of a lord. The latter, on horseback, meets the laborer in the woods and apparently without any provocation hits him with his whip. The laborer resents this treatment, loses his temper and deals the lord a blow which results in death. Nobody suspects the guilty man. It is supposed that the lord fell from his horse and broke his neck. The guilty man then leaves England for America. He "works his passage" as a stoker and upon his arrival in New York secures employment as a "sandhog" in the subway. The first thing he does is to rescue the perishing victim of a cave-in. While gazing at the rescued man the murderer sees the form of the slain lord.

He advances rapidly in his career, becoming the partner of his employer and marrying the latter's daughter. At the wedding every thing passes off well only at one point in the ceremony our young man sees the parson assume the form of the dead lord. A most embarrassing moment follows, but the marriage is duly consummated and the young husband enters politics. He is nominated for governor and goes through a series of most thrilling and somewhat improbable adventures. One night he is scheduled to speak on the evils of bossism. The tools of the boss kidnap him and carry him to the twentieth story of a building. He succeeds in breaking his bonds and descending through the iron frame work of nineteen stories he gets to the political meeting. He is late, but he succeeds in confounding his enemies. He is elected, but both during and after his campaign the vision of the dead lord haunts him with fearful persistency. At one time he sees himself beside the gallows getting ready for the black cap. At another time he sees himself in a convict's garb, and another vision shows him the judge in the court pronouncing the fatal sentence. The reader will now be ready to believe that Mr. Costello's part was a most trying one. In the midst of all his honors and all his prosperity the murderer is finally seized with a desire to go back to England. His nerves give way and he must take to bed. His wife and father-in-law are with him and he has the best of care. Overpowered by a strange impulse he flees from the sick room and hastens to the spot where the killing took place and there he dies in horror.

Scene from "The Man Who Could Not Beat God" (Vitagraph).

There are good points in every Vitagraph and there are good points in this feature. Photography and acting are good, most of the settings are splendid. The rescue of the laborer in the bowels of the earth is a marvelous piece of realism and a marvelous piece of photography. The types are all good, but the mobs are poorly handled. There are crudities and inconsistencies scattered throughout the play, the result probably of hurry. Altogether this feature does not measure up to the best standards of Vitagraph blue ribbons.

"His Wife"

Five-Reel Thanhouser Story of Jealousy in Married Life, with a Dramatic Adjustment.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SAID one of the impressionist critics present at the private showing of "His Wife": "It is just like a good, old-fashioned novel. It is in fact a very careful adaptation of a novel. The care shown in atmosphere and scenery can not be too highly commended—one scene in a jaunting cart looked as though it might have been taken in Ireland. 'His Wife' is one of those stories dearly beloved by the matinee girl, one of those in which a poor girl of 'no chance' wins a wealthy young lordling. He takes her to his home, and, of course, the question rises as to how far she shall be left to develop her own individuality. The indulgent husband finds an easy way by turning his crude young wife over to the mercies of a former flame, a young lady secretly married to his erring brother."

Scene from "His Wife" (Thanhouser).

The only material crudity that crops out is a violent and not altogether unreasonable jealousy on the part of the intense young wife. Its violence is primitive, but she is scarcely to be blamed when she discovers the other lady resting her head on the husband's bosom and encircling his neck with her arms, all to tell him that his erring brother has come home. That might very well have been done in the ordinary fashion of real life, but old-fashioned novels, especially by authoresses, force situations instead of making them logical, or at least plausible. The young wife finally sees enough to outrage her pride and she attempts suicide. From that moment the story runs wild through some hastily edited melodrama to an exceedingly inartistic conclusion, though one well-intended. For a widower of five years' standing to be found prostrate before a stone erected to the memory of a wife supposedly drowned at the very moment she strolls, for no visible reason, from a railway station into the graveyard, is one of those strains on human credulity no longer tolerated, even in old-fashioned novels. There was a big dramatic situation possible at the meeting of wife and husband under the circumstances, but it was not only compromised, it was totally lost.

Harry Hadfield With Lasky.

Harry Hadfield, the well known dramatic director, has arrived at the Lasky studio, and is now studying camera direction under the supervision of Cecil B. DeMille. He will be several weeks before starting his first production. Mr. Hadfield recently produced "My Lady's Garter" in New York and has been considered one of the best stage directors in the country.

"The Corsican"

The Second Rise and Fall of Napoleon Is Pictured in Excellent Production Handled by Sun Photoplay Co.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "The Corsican," or "The Last One Hundred Days of Napoleon," the Sun Photoplay Company has acquired the rights to a valuable historical five-part picture produced in France and first shown in this country at the New York theater under the management of Al. Woods. Considered either as a popular attraction, presenting battle scenes on a generous scale and giving a fair idea of the lavishness of Napoleon's court, or taken as a faithful depiction of events in France one hundred years ago, "The Corsican" more than measures up to requirements. It is a picture that may properly be called educational without sacrificing the dramatic possibilities of the happenings following Napoleon's return from Elba in 1815. It probably offers one of the truest characterizations of the great French leader ever shown on the screen.

Scene from "The Corsican" (Sun).

Hector Mazanni in every respect fulfills the popular conception of the Corsican. In appearance and bearing he is truly Napoleonic, and he acts with a forceful authority that gives an abundance of life to his interpretation. Napoleon is introduced as he stands on the shore of Elba, dreaming of past glories. A few swift scenes present some of the important events of his career and then we are carried into the tragic drama consequent upon his return to France. His army of 615 men rapidly grows into thousands, his generals of earlier campaigns rally to his support and step by step, with nothing essential omitted, we follow his victorious advance to the field of Waterloo.

Even if audiences have become somewhat accustomed to realistic battle scenes they may be expected to respond to this French treatment of a famous conflict. Hundreds of men were used to good purpose; their movements were skilfully directed and well photographed. The picture closes with Napoleon's pathetic death on the island of St. Helena. Historical accuracy, convincing characterizations and elaborate settings all contribute to a production of exceptional interest.

"Her Painted Hero"

An Amusing Two-Reel Triangle-Keystone Supposed to Feature Hale Hamilton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN ACCORDANCE with the idea of getting the billboard value out of the reputation of certain theatrical stars, "Her Painted Hero" is manufactured on the usual Sennett lines, and that means that it is amusing during the roughhouse scenes, but the play is wholly unsuited to a comedian of Hale Hamilton's generally recognized ability. It is true that his genial and winning personality is not wholly lost—he pictures well—but he is given a minor role of no particular importance and no visible characterization, simply a chance to show himself now and then when the other players are not engaged in throwing missiles which hit the wrong persons, kicking one another, falling down and gamboling about like circus clowns.

The story is obviously one of those written on a cuff, probably the joint work of the director and the star between courses, more is the pity. Given a really fine role, Hale Hamilton has few superiors as a high comedian. There is a delightful spontaneity about his stage performance, that lack of straining for effect which is sometimes an exquisite art, but more often a matter of temperament. Hamilton has the temperament and the art, and in such successful combination that he should be cast for a suitable role in real comedy. As "Her Painted Hero," he is not featured—he is merely injected.

"The Dream Seekers"

The Last Picture of a Fine Actor—William Herman West Died the Night After Completing This Particularly Worthy Offering (Kalem Two-Reels).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

HAPPY WILLIAM WEST. His calling was to interpret human souls; his own soul shines beautifully through the last work he did for us ere he slipped away. It is his picture; he is the center of interest all through it. He has played many parts with marked sincerity and insight; but this last role of his, an old musician, is surpassing in the courage and tenderness with which the character's weakness and strength are faced and blended into one convincing human personality. That was William West's way. They tell us that his own soul was noble. We know that the characters that he drew, whether good or bad, were true and that he was most effective when he was picturing the redeeming traits of human kind. Notice his work in this last picture. It was a picture worthy of him and his acting in it of the best. When it was done he went home with no though of sickness and in sleep heard the call that closes a life well done.

There is nothing particularly great in the story, "The Dream Seekers," a Kalem two-reel offering; but the way in which it is put before us (the acting by William West and others and the direction by James Horne) gives it a thoroughly delightful distinction. People will love its central character and we believe it will be recalled often. It is one of those unusual pictures so completely well done and natural that almost all of it is convincing. Most of it is good, but William West's drawing of the way the old musician bore the lack of his violin is so particularly good that it is hard to get down to the other parts, such as Marin Sais's playing of his daughter, and the work of Frank Johnasson as his musician friend, and that of Thomas Lingham as the unscrupulous opium house Chink; yet all these are excellent. So too are Director Horne's sets and backgrounds and his management of the action. And the photography is good.

Scene from "The Dream Seekers" (Kalem).

The old musician's weakness is opium, and what happens after he is compelled to leave his violin with the Chinaman gives the picture its big human value.

"The Laurel of Tears"

A Story of Strong Human Appeal Is Given Forceful Presentation in Three-Reel Biograph Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A more suggestive title might have been selected for this three-part Biograph production, a title that would to some degree indicate a story of modern commercial and artistic life in a large city. "The Laurel of Tears" is one of the most sincere and altogether interesting of the pictures issued by Biograph in many months. In the first place it offers a human, reasonable story, deftly handled; then the acting is entirely natural and it would be difficult, indeed, to pick flaws in the production.

For the first two reels the picture depends upon normal situations that are never overdone for melodramatic effect. Esther is a young woman with literary ambitions who conducts a public stenographer's office in a commercial building. Among her friends is a critic who tells her that she must have lived and suffered before she can hope to interpret life. The story goes to show how Esther gains the needed experience, how she comes to meet and love a mining engineer and how her heart is wounded when a girl that she has befriended quite innocently steals the man's affection. There is nothing trite about the plot as it is developed through a series of seemingly natural circumstances. The two girls are like a hundred others that might be met in New York any day; the engineer is just the type in whom they would find a natural companion and the dishonest promoter surely has his place in the scheme of American business. That these people should meet and affect each other's lives is made to appear probable.

In the third reel the picture grows melodramatic, but not objectionably so; for here, too, the situation comes as a reasonable climax to the preceding incidents. All through the story the promoter has held to his determination to win Esther, regardless of the means used, and the plan that is so nearly successful is in keeping with his character. The girls are saved, one of them to marry the young engineer, the other to write a successful novel, for she has lived and suffered. Director J. Farrell Macdonald is to be congratulated on this picture, acted with sincerity and charm by Vera Sisson, Jose Ruben, Madge Kirby, Raymond Nye and Charles Mailes.

"Blackbirds"

A Lasky Feature in Which Laura Hope Crews Appears in Her Old Broadway Success.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is a tale of adventure with the scene shifting from the Orient to New York and from high society to the underworld. The plot is well developed, there is a strong and even thrilling climax and the ending is like that of any regular Lasky picture—thoroughly happy and satisfactory to the audience. There is a lot of fine photographic work in the feature. The settings too are almost without exception of the good Lasky type.

Scene from "Blackbirds" (Lasky).

Laura Hope Crews, while no longer in the first flush of youth, has the same magnetic personality and the same force that characterized her in the heyday of her success. She plays the part of an adventuress, who has become the tool and confederate of a gang of smugglers and criminals. She has visitations of conscience in spite of her crooked work. Love finally redeems her. It is the love of a man who is himself a criminal and who has also felt the stings of conscience. Neither knows the true character of the other. The revelation of the truth comes in a manner which is quite sensational and not without its tinge of humor. The part of the reforming criminal was taken by Thomas Meighan, who as usual gave a fine and convincing impersonation. The entire support was good.

"The Disciple"

A Powerful Five-Reel Triangle-Kay-Bee Giving William S. Hart the Role of His Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A POWERFUL story, admirably constructed, perfectly typed, of humanizing theme and skilfully handled, "The Disciple" sets a standard for subsequent Triangle Features, topping any of them recently shown in depth of feeling, consistency and pure artistry. One forgets the craftsmanship in nearly all the scenes, held by a straight line of profound interest, the exceptions being an occasional tendency to protract the psychology of closeups, sometimes a fault in the editing. Author McCormick and Director Ince deserve high praise for the splendid example of motion picture story they have created, their harmony of purpose resulting in a drama purely that of the screen, of emotional depth and of fine characterization.

So much for the invisible factors of success. To William S. Hart, of manly physique and face peculiarly suited to that highly expressive suppression of emotion so effective in screen portrayals, will be given spontaneous praise, most of which he fully deserves. He has worked earnestly in many plays chiefly remarkable for their scant opportunity and has held consistently to a style that is coming more and more into vogue, but he is talented enough to vary his style a little from the motionless and intense, and it might not be an error to take fewer closeups of his face expressing in successive pictures exactly the same mental state. He is fine, however, in sudden conversions, and has enough ability to seize his opportunities without having them thrown at him like so many bouquets.

Scene from "The Disciple" (Triangle-Kay-Bee).

The story is one of tremendous soul struggle in a strong man who has set up a partnership with his maker, working under an unwritten agreement to do God's will and bring the most heedless of mankind into recognition of Divine goodness. He is put to a heartbreaking test and his humanity bursts forth in violent reproach, amounting almost to enmity, of his God, the God for whom he has sacrificed so much. He renounces the silent understanding, declares his confidence in Divine Wisdom to have been a mistake and prepares to be the author of his own destiny. Yet he is humbled and softened in the end, a noble conception, one well worth the care bestowed upon its development.

Helen Gibson's Startling Stunt.

In "The Girl and the Special," a forthcoming episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series," Miss Helen Gibson lowers herself from the roof of a speeding Pullman and crawls inside the car via one of the windows.

Valli Valli's Big Set.

One of the most elaborate sets ever constructed for screen purposes in a studio in Manhattan was used at the Rolfe-Metro studios in West Sixty-first street in "The Woman Pays," in which Valli Valli is starred. The set was a ball room and every inch of the large studio floor space was utilized.

"Divorced"

An Absorbing Five-Reel Triumph Production for Release on the Equitable Program, Featuring Hilda Spong.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT IS a pity that the weaker side of human nature should have had the center of the stage in a production as absorbing as the above named. And it might be safe to say that had players of less magnetism, and a director of smaller ability been entrusted with the play, the result would have been less pleasing. As it is, the dignity and sincerity with which even the weakest character has been portrayed on the screen, causes the spectator to be drawn with a grip of iron, as it were, into the troubled atmosphere of a production that dwells too strongly perhaps on the fact that "to err is human."

Scene from "Divorced" (Equitable).

For Hilda Spong, who plays the role of the divorced wife and erring mother, "Divorced" is a triumph in emotional acting. She drags us with her into her sorrows, and moves us almost to tears in the courtroom scene where she is on trial for the murder of the man with whom she erred, and with her son called to testify against her.

In the cast beside Hilda Spong are Fred Eric, who, as the divorced husband, passes out of the story early in the game; Charles Hutchison as the son of the woman's marriage, standing almost alone as a type of morally responsible manhood, and Lester Chambers, the second and worst type who crossed and then stood on the woman's path, the first only an obstacle to her happiness, and the second adding degradation to unhappiness. There are others in the production who are well worthy of mention, notably the mother of Madeline, sweetheart of the woman's son, and the son of the second man.

The production will be tabulated as a medodrama in which situations of extreme delicacy have been handled with tact. The opening of the picture suffers somewhat from padding. This continues even into the second reel. But whatever faultiness of construction might strike the observer in the first stages of the story, is forgotten in the tremendous realism that pervades it as it approaches its climax.

"Alone in London"

Florence Turner Appears in Adaptation of English Melodrama—Released by Ideal Film Service.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

Practically all of the elements essential to a good melodrama of the old school are found in this five-part version of Robert Buchanan's "Alone in London," produced by Turner Films, Ltd., under the direction of Larry Trimble. There is the much abused woman to stir the sympathy of an audience, and to share the sympathy we find a poor boy who is made a cripple for life by the heartless leader of a band of criminals. Then there is the stalwart hero and by way of contrast the author introduces a thorough-going villain, without any redeeming qualities in his evil nature. With these characters and others that fit naturally into a story of the London slums, Director Trimble has produced an interesting melodrama, containing a number of exciting incidents more than ordinarily well acted.

In the role of Nan, Florence Turner gives a performance certain to please her many admirers in this country. We meet her as the trusting daughter of a lodge-keeper. Knowing little of the ways of the world and of men she is easy prey for the suave Redcliffe, who deserts her when it suits his fancy. Penniless and without friends, save the faithful cripple boy, Nan is forced to live in the most wretched of London dens and each time she attempts to escape Radcliffe and his associates devise some new form of torture. Her tribulations are many and varied before she is rescued by the faithful rustic sweetheart of her girlhood and returned to a peaceful life in the country.

Miss Turner's appealing personality and gifts for emotional expression are utilized to their full in this melodrama, and she is given excellent support by Edward Lindgard in the part of Redcliffe and by the actor playing the pathetic character of Chick. Another telling characterization is that of the player in the role of Redcliffe's chief confederate. The picture is artistically staged to carry the atmosphere of the London underworld. Night scenes at Trafalgar Square are notably well handled.

"The Chorus Lady"

The Well-Known Theatrical Success Filmed by Lasky with Cleo Ridgely in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE Chorus Lady" comes near being a classic of the light American drama with a comedy vein. The success of the play was due in the main to two causes: the personality of Rose Stahl, who really embodies the Chorus Lady, and the witty dialogue often skirting along the edge of slang. The Chorus Lady is not a part that lies within easy reach of the average actress. The part calls for the portrayal of a woman with warm feelings and lively wit. It is a difficult part to convey by means of the camera and Miss Ridgely has made a very earnest and conscientious effort to rise to her responsibilities. She had very able support in Margery Daw, whose rendering of Nora must be set down as splendid. Miss Daw's work was well conceived, well directed and well finished. There are but very few girls on the screen who could have given as good an impersonation of the wayward, selfish younger sister easily dazzled by appearances and heedless of well meant advice. In the play if I remember rightly the character of Nora was made almost odious by her shameless ingratitude; this part of Nora was not brought out in the film. We do not lose all sympathy for Nora. It is a good change.

In the early part the action lagged a little bit but after the preliminaries there is no cause for complaint. Photography and settings were fine throughout. The acting of Wallace Reid and of Richard Grey will not create any enthusiasm. Grey might have made something of his part but he is one of those screen artists who are moving picture actors first and last, showing a lamentable lack of force and variety.

"Nell of the Dance Hall"

A Three-Reel Romance of the Church and the Stage, Produced by the Western Lubin Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HALL CAINE was one of the first of the modern playwrights to realize the dramatic value of a union between a minister and an actress. John Storm and Glory Quayle, the lovers in "The Christian," have had many prototypes since, "Nell of the Dance Hall" and the Rev. Miles Justine being the latest film addition to these strongly contrasted characters. The scenes of the picture in question are laid out West. A dance hall is raided and the "among those present" are paraded to the lockup. Nell escapes, however, and takes refuge in the house of a minister who once saved her from the attentions of the dance hall proprietor. The Rev. Justine falls in love with Nell, but the girl's old employer confides her history to the trustee of the church. Nell starts working in a factory and, when the minister is taken ill with brain fever, goes back to the old life and earns money to send him to the mountains. The trustees have dismissed him and he is now penniless. The minister learns of Nell's fall from grace, and is heart broken, until the truth is revealed. A wedding follows.

While by no means an imitation, such a plot has many of the qualities that made "The Christian" so popular with both readers of the novel and spectators of the play. It does not seek to indicate character, at the expense of telling situations, and its emotional appeal is very near the surface. This condition guarantees a quick response from the greater portion of an audience, and explains the popularity of the Hall Caine school with the public and with writers for the screen.

Scene from "Nell of the Dance Hall" (Lubin)

The production of "Nell of the Dance Hall" reflects credit upon the producer and the members of the cast. Edythe Sterling, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Robert Gray and Adelaide Bronti have the important roles.

"For the Honor of the Crew"

A Broadway Star Feature Notable for Realism and Fine Characterization.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE great spectacular feature of this play is its main strength. The visualization of the boat races at Poughkeepsie is beyond all praise. It is correct down to the minutest detail. The spectacular splendor of the great sporting event has been transferred to the screen with most admirable skill. We not only see the races, but we feel that we are right at the spot with the spectators on the screen.

If this feature had no other merits it would class above the average. Happily it has other merits as well. James Morrison as Dick Morgan and Edward Elkas as Rosenberg, the gambler, give splendid renderings of their parts. Morrison had a most thankless role, but he made a good deal out of it. In spite of all villainies and weaknesses he never entirely forfeits the sympathy of the audience. The character work of Edward Elkas compares favorably with the best on the screen of today and his portryal of the gambler Rosenberg will surely impress itself on every man and woman who sees this picture. William B. Davidson gave a good impersonation of Robert Brent, the hero; Muriel Ostriche was not quite so convincing.

The scenes showing the activities within a college both in times of study and just on the eve of a great boat race were exceptionally fine. The work of preparation for the race was visualized with painstaking accuracy of detail. The trial spin which broke the record, the gayeties in the boat house, the gambling in Rosenberg's resort were all up to the best Vitagraph standard. The handling of the groups and masses added to the general excellent impression of this feature.

"The Soul of Broadway"

Valeska Suratt Plays a Cruel Courtesan in Five-Part Fox Melodrama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

VALESKA SURATT wears a great many gowns in this five-reel production and without exception they are startling. Some of them might serve for futurist or cubist models. Miss Suratt adapts herself to the gowns. She draws her hair back over her head in a style peculiar to herself, always moves with a studied sensuousness and never at any time so far forgets her mannerisms as to suggest a normal woman. In the last reel she is called upon to interpret a brainstorm, and for the first time disarranges her smooth hair. Not liking the reflection cast by a mirror, she hurls a chair through the glass, next descends with maniacal fury upon the occupants of her lover's gambling den and finally ends an unpleasant career by tumbling down a long flight of stairs.

Apart from the unconventional acting of Miss Suratt, "The Soul of Broadway" is a conventional melodrama, rather artificial in construction, but well handled by Director Herbert Brenon. The woman who typifies the soul of Broadway is in a fair way to ruin the life of a promising young man when he accidentally shoots her and is sentenced to jail for five years for attempted murder. He meets an eminently respectable girl, marries her and then is threatened with a resurrection of his unfortunate past. Under the circumstances it appears as if he might have explained the whole affair and let it drop, but for the purposes of the drama it was deemed necessary for him to respond to the notes of the woman, thereby paving the way for a number of unpleasant scenes in which his wife figures.

The effect of William E. Shay's portrayal of the husband is somewhat discounted by an unconvincing make-up. George Middleton, playing an old roué, is responsible for most of the comedy in the picture.

"The Eleventh Hour"

Three-part Melodrama with European Setting for Release on the Program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH the richness of setting and wealth of talent often employed in the film productions that come to us from across the water, "The Eleventh Hour," made by the Milano Film Company, lives up to what is expected of it. The story upon which the picture is based savors of high life in Europe, and deals principally with the love problem of a princess.

A matter of military honor is also involved, and a murder is committed in the dead of night, an incident which leads up to the climax in the third reel, providing ample opportunity for some very effective scenes, with plenty of suspense.

One of the things that is a most attractive point about the production is the wealth of beautiful exterior locations provided. Many of these give us mere glimpses of the sea shore, while again there are wonderful perspectives of the sea coast where a town dips down into the water's edge.

The story is also a fairly engrossing one, and the players are well equipped to handle the roles allotted to them.

"The Rights of Man"

Louis Reeves Harrison Presents the Principles of Democracy in Thoughtful Story Produced by Lubin.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE full title of this remarkable five-part picture, written by Louis Reeves Harrison, of the staff of The Moving Picture World, and produced by the Lubin Company under the direction of Jack Pratt, is "The Rights of Man; A Story of War's Red Blot." It probably is the deepest, the most significant and altogether the most impressive of photoplays inspired by the European war. Mr. Harrison is the first writer to look below the surface of spectacular horrors that he may find the cause and use it as the motif of a dramatic picture. He expresses the American viewpoint, the democratic viewpoint, as opposed to the autocratic and militaristic regimes primarily responsible for the present carnage in Europe. The photoplay is a living, contemporaneous illustration of the principles laid down in Thomas Paine's "Rights of Man," a work frequently quoted in Mr. Harrison's sub-titles.

Scene from "The Rights of Man" (Lubin).

Strong in scenes of subtle suggestion and free from obvious academic arguments, the picture drives home the splendid American contention that "absolute monarchies cannot stand in the light of growing intelligence because they continue the uncivilized principle of governments founded on conquest and the base idea of hereditary rulers holding property in man and governing him by divine right." The photoplay presupposes an intelligent audience, one with at least a superficial knowledge of governmental principles and capable of grasping the significance of the action on the screen. The story is personal, dealing with a sharply drawn group of individuals; but its meaning is general, as general as the mind of the spectator is capable of making it. Mr. Harrison seems to have written for two classes, those who think and those content to follow without question the progress of a romantic story. There is material for both in "The Rights of Man."

Scene from "The Rights of Man" (Lubin).

As an ominous indication of the events to follow, the first scene shows the muzzle of a cannon protruding through a clump of bushes; a scene that dissolves into a view of the room in which Princess Lorha is seated reading Paine's "Rights of Man" and marking the passages that appeal to her, for, despite royal influences, she has become a convert to socialism. Her father is Prince Sigismund, secretly in league with the militant socialists plotting to overthrow the weakling monarch who has plunged his people into a devastating war; her fiance is Dr. Carew, an American Red Cross surgeon.

The atmosphere of impending tragedy hangs over even the earlier passages. Suddenly we are plunged into a scene that carries the swift, unexpected horror of war. Princess Lorha and Carew have been married and are turning away from the altar when a shell from the enemy's guns crashes through the wall of the chapel. Sigismund is among those mortally wounded, and it devolves upon his daughter and the American to carry on the plan for the overthrow of the government that consistently ignores the rights of its citizens. How they find the treasure laid aside for the furtherance of the propaganda, how the Princess herself carries it to the headquarters of the socialists, how Carew eludes imprisonment and the Princess escapes worse than death at the hands of his Royal Highness, the picture shows in dramatic fashion. And every now and again there comes a cleverly arranged scene that is a legitimate part of the action and at the same time accentuates the deeper meaning of the story. Mr. Harrison's scenario is unusual in its strict adherence to the dramatic unities. All of the action transpires within twenty-four hours and in the same locality.

The Lubin Company has supplied an elaborate production in the matter of interiors and the glimpses of European battlefields are realistic enough to cause a shudder of horror. Equally creditable was the care exercised in the choice of players for the principal roles. Francis Joyner is an ideal choice for the degenerate monarch, Rosetta Brice appears exceedingly well as the Princess, Richard Buhler lends force and dignity to the character of Dr. Carew, and among others George Clarke and Charles Brandt deserve mention.

"The Mystery of Room 13"

An Edison Four-Reel Drama in Which the Suspense Is Maintained to the End.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE disentangling of a mysterious crime is always the source of columns of "live" copy for the daily press; patrons of the stage and the screen find the unraveling of a pseudo murder or perplexing misdeed equally engrossing. Lee Arthur, in writing "The Mystery of Room 13," has fulfilled the most important requirement of photoplays of this class—skillful use of the element of suspense. No solution of the murder problem, in the case in question can be given with absolute certainty until the playwright is ready to reveal the answer. To supplement this, he has introduced a number of interesting and well contrasted characters and woven a series of incidents about them of great dramatic value, while keeping within the bounds of probability.

Scene from "The Mystery of Room 13" (Edison).

A young heiress contracts an unfortunate marriage with a foreign gentleman who can boast of a title but not of his morals. The Count is mysteriously murdered, and events are so arranged that the wife is accused of the crime. The audience knows that she is innocent, but three other persons are brought under suspicion, and the greater portion of the spectators will find it extremely baffling to place the crime where it belongs.

Director George Ridgwell has shown that he is particularly well equipped for producing such a scenario. It has been accorded every benefit to be derived from conscientious and intelligent directing, and the work of a thoroughly excellent cast. Lillian Herbert is capital as the young wife, and Marc MacDermott makes a commanding figure of Clay Foster. The role of Guido Colucci and T. Tamamoto stand out prominently, and Lina Davril and Mrs. Wallace Erskine assist materially in the success of the picture. George Wright contributes another of the character studies that have earned him his enviable reputation.

"The Tables Turned"

A Metro Picture of Merit, with Miss Emmy Wehlen in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

A STRONG plot, plausible situations and many tense moments characterize this feature. The interest in the story is quickly created and well sustained. If one excepts one or two minor episodes which might have been handled to better advantage, little fault can be found with this picture as a desirable item on a good program.

The plot has the high merit of originality. To this fact are due two of the strongest dramatic situations. A worthless young man, Howard Sherbrook, abuses the affections of a trusting girl and to accomplish his end arranges to have a mock marriage performed. His friend, Dick, who himself feels great love for the girl, foils the villain's plan by getting a real minister, who performs a legal ceremony. The villain, however, is under the impression that the marriage was worthless and proceeds to marry another girl more worthy of his own social rank. He tells his supposed victim that she is not his wife and blames the presumed mock marriage on his friend. The girl writes a letter to the friend and as a result the truth comes out.

Scene from "Tables Turned" (Rolfe-Metro).

When the father of the second wife discovers the situation he threatens to send Howard to prison. Remorse and fear drive Howard to self-destruction. Dick now confesses his love for the girl, she forgives him for his share in Howard's plan and in the end she marries him.

Miss Emmy Wehlen took her part well, easily enlisting the sympathy of the audience. The value of this is of course apparent. To arouse interest and sympathy at the earliest possible moment is really the hardest problem of the playwright. Her support was all that could be desired with the possible exception of the "heavy man" who was, perhaps, a little bit too conventional.

The settings and the photography were splendid throughout, indeed, on the technical side of the play there is a distinct approach to perfection.

Matters in the Courts

Emil Erber Convicted of Fraud.

Emil Erber, originator of the Photoplay Coupon company, with offices in the Longacre building, has been convicted in the United States District Court of using the mails in a scheme to defraud. He was charged with conspiring with others in a scheme to buy goods on credit from persons and firms named, without intent to pay for them, the conspirators designing to procure the merchandise, sell it and divide the profits.

The men charged in the indictment on which the trial was had were, besides Erber, Morris Stvansky, Emil Zipper, Sam. Mandelbaum, Louis Wettstein, Nathan Nadelman and two others not arrested, but fugitives from justice. Stavsky and Zipper were acquitted by the jury; Mandelbaum, Wettstein and Nadelman pleaded guilty and were witnesses for the government. Erber was found guilty on three of the five charges; the maximum possible punishment may be two years in Atlanta on each count, or six years all told. He will take out an appeal.

The plan of operations, according to Assistant District Attorney Frank M. Roosa, who handled the case for the government, was a development of the photoplay coupon business, in itself a legitimate plan. This plan was to sell coupons which would entitle the holders to attend plays in designated "movie" houses. Tradesmen who purchased of Erber's concern, were to issue a coupon upon a certain value of purchase. The holder could go to the theater designated at his leisure and later Erber would redeem the coupons taken up by the various houses with which he had concluded arrangements. This is a legitimate business and Erber claimed to have made it quite profitable. In his defense, jealousy of another man who tried to set up a similar business and who was restrained in the state courts, caused the prosecution and arrest.

Erber and his co-defendants were charged with planning to make use of the Photoplay Coupon Company as a ready reference for the Manhattan Merchandise company, a newly organized concern and one so organized in furtherance of the scheme to defraud. Letters were to be sent out asking credit, referring to the various houses of the combination. Erber was to appear as the Manhattan Merchandise company. Letters were sent and delivered from Times Square station, as shown in evidence. The stories of the three squealers was so substantial in the minds of the jury as to bring about a conviction of Erber, but not sufficient with the other evidence to connect Stvansky and Zipper, who were discharged.

Erber is also under indictments in the Federal court on a charge of a similar nature under the direct name of the Photoplay Coupon Company. These are pending and will be set for trial at an early date. In addition to this, three indictments are pending in the State courts charging Erber with a scheme to swindle certain business houses by purchasing goods on credit without intent to pay therefor. In order to confer jurisdiction on the Federal courts the use of the mails must be set up and proved.

Tossatti Fails.

Frank Tossatti, of 409 West Broadway and 34th street and Fifth avenue, importer of foreign films and photoplay accessories, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. Tossatti gives his liabilities as $37.754 and assets of $25,237. Stock in the Salambo Film Company is listed as an asset of $25,000. The principal creditor is the Italian Union Importing Company, also a failed concern.

Atsco Schedules Filed.

Schedules in the bankruptcy proceeding against the Atsco Film company, incorporated, 220 West 42nd street, have been filed in the Federal District court. The debts are largely for films rented, etc. The Mutual and Alco Film companies are principal creditors. The assets are estimated at $13,559; liabilities, $16,960.

BEULAH POYNTER WRITES PLAY.

Miss Beulah Poynter, who plays opposite Arthur Donaldson in the Charles K. Harris feature picture, "School Bells," has written a play on heredity entitled "The Unborn," which is to be produced under the sponsorship of the Medical Review of Reviews in New York Nov. 5. The play is claimed to be still greater than the one of Eugene Brieux's "Damaged Goods," produced two years ago, and the names of some of New York's greatest scientists, doctors and social workers are attached to the list of sponsors. The play will be produced with a strong cast. It will also be published by the Review of Reviews.

Miss Poynter has been on the stage for about ten years, and has appeared in her own plays "Lena Rivers" and "The Little Girl that He Forgot." The scenes for both of these plays were laid in the south, from where Miss Poynter came, and she played the leading role in both of them for a number of years on the road. She is also a well-known stock actress.

"The Unborn" will establish the young writer as a playwright of exceptional ability. In "School Bells," which will be released through the World Film Corporation, Miss Poynter plays the role of "Mrs. Wagner."

PICTURE PLAYER PINCHED.

Eddie James, who has been assisting Perry N. Vekroff with the production of the Charles K. Harris feature picture "For Sale, a Baby," which was completed Saturday, was arrested in Brooklyn last week for stopping traffic.

Exteriors were being taken outside a pawshop in Brooklyn, Mr. James had his New York permit to take pictures on the street, but the school children crowded around watching the photographing and caused such a disturbance that a policeman requested Mr. James to come to court the next morning. However, the case was dismissed.

"For Sale, a Baby," has some wonderful scenes from the ghetto section of New York. Arthur Donaldson and Miss Sonia Massell play the roles of an old Jewish couple. Gazelle Marche, the ingenue, as the adopted daughter of this old couple, who is a gentile, is clever in her part.

Florence Hackett, the well-known vampire actress, Camille Dalberg, Dora Adams, Jack Johnston and George Henry are other members of the cast.

"For Sale, a Baby," will be released through the World Film Corporation.

COMEDIE FRANCAISE STAR HERE.

Paul Capellani, the former star of the Comedie Francaise, who is at present in New York, has been engaged by the World Film Corporation to play opposite Clara Kimball Young in the forthcoming great production of "A Modern Camille."

Mons. Capellani, who is an officer of the French Army, is in the United States on a special leave from the French Minister of War in connection with a special performance at the Metropolitan Opera House, in aid of the distressed French artists suffering from the effects of the European war.

"THEIR SINFUL INFLUENCE" (Selig).

"Their Sinful Influence" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, produced by Lloyd B. Carleton, from the scenario written by A. G. Isherwood and William H. Lippert. It will be released in regular service on Thursday, November 4. "Their Sinful Influence" carries a convincing lesson on certain evils connected with social frivolities, and features captivating Bessie Eyton supported by an unusual company of Selig players. The photography is clear, and the scenic investures worthy of more than ordinary mention.

Scene from "Their Sinful Influence" (Selig).

The Mesdames King and Croll are prominent among the Rev. Dr. Carr's wealthy congregation. Despite objections of the doctor, Mrs. Carr and Herb Bright, Rose's boyhood sweetheart, Rose Carr decides to accept a series of invitations for functions given by Mrs. King and Mrs. Croll. Earl Blayley, a wealthy society roue, eager to meet Rose, the minister's beautiful daughter, is also a guest at these social functions and they become very friendly.

At an indoor surf bathing tea given by Mrs. Croll, Blayley makes violent love to Rose. At that juncture Dr. Carr arrives at Mrs. Croll's home. He hears Rose's cries for assistance, and saves his daughter from the sinful influence under which she has been living. The following Sunday, the Rev. Dr. Carr, in a bitter sermon, denounces the women for their part in having attempted to pollute the mind of his innocent daughter.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE SECRET SIN" (Lasky).

Blanche Sweet, now appearing exclusively in Paramount productions of the Lasky Feature Play Company, will be seen in a role entirely different from anything she heretofore had done. In the "Secret Sin," a five part photodrama, written expressly for Miss Sweet by Margaret Turnbull, the star assumes the difficulties of a dual role. In this photoplay she appears as twin sisters and during long stages of the action on the screen, Miss Sweet is seen by the audience as two entirely different persons.

"The Secret Sin" gets its title from the theme of the story which probably is the most severe arraignment against the drug habit ever presented in film. In one of her characters Miss Sweet is addicted to the drug habit, having contracted a desire through ignorance and temptation. She eventually overcomes the desire, a struggle in which her sister assists her. In that the introduction of considerable heart interest is the basis of Miss Turnbull's photodrama.

The terrifying experiences of the two girls, trapped in a Chinatown opium den which is raided by the police, how one is taken to jail and the other robbed and left for dead in the street are but a few of the many thrilling incidents in this gripping story.

Weeks were spent, by the Lasky company, in making this photodrama. The scenes in Chinatown opium dens populated by drug fiends from all stations of life, the inner workings of the high class dealers in forbidden drugs and the schemes resorted to by the victims to secure the opiates are all graphically shown.

The Lasky company has surrounded Miss Sweet with a splendid cast for this wonderful play. Thomas Meighan, remembered for his splendid performance in "Kindling," "Out of Darkness," "Blackbirds," and other productions, plays opposite Miss Sweet, Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, is also a member of the cast as is Hal Clements, Alice Knowland, and other members of the Lasky all-star stock company.

MUSIC IN "THE COWARD."

Arranging music for a great five part film drama such as "The Coward," the Civil War play produced by Thomas H. Ince for the Triangle, is a most difficult task. William Furst, general director of the Triangle music, believes it has been accomplished with a great deal of skill and in fact marks a revolution in the accompaniment of screen drama.

The scenes of the play are laid in the South, the source of many beautiful melodies that have found a permanent place in the heart of a nation. Many of these melodies, however, are time worn and if not appropriately introduced would detract from the dramatic value of the story. Mr. Ince therefore instructed J. E. Nurnberger, the Inceville musical expert, to arrange the score that would carry the theme of the story and still retain the rare values to be found in the southern songs.

Mr. Nurnberger then adopted the plan of thematic music for the several hundred scenes of the piece, exactly as librettos are themed for operatic music. He spent more than two weeks in the projecting room and worked out the themes carefully. As a result "The Coward" music fits the varying emotions of the character and when effectively played adds one hundred per cent. to the power of the story.

"WHO'S WHO" (Cub Comedy).

On November 5 David Horsley will release on the Mutual program a Cub comedy, featuring George Ovey, under the title of "Who's Who?" The action is founded on the "mistaken-identity" idea. While many comedies have been based on this foundation, the idea has been so differently treated in "Who's Who?" that it takes on a new aspect and provides one of the funniest pictures ever turned out at the Cub studios.

The plot centers around girl twins so perfectly alike in physique and features that, being even for one second out of one's sight, it is impossible to tell one from another when they reappear. This lack of identification possibilities is strongest in the lovers of the two, and it serves to cause a series of humorous as well as serious complications, with the fun dominant throughout.

Scene from "Who's Who" (Cub).

George Ovey, as Jerry, is prominent throughout the play, and is supported by Louis Fitzroy, as the father; Janet Sully, as the mother; George George, as Jack; and the Newton Twins (Mabel and Maude)—twins in real life, too, as May and June. "Who's Who" is promised as the brightest and funniest comedy ever released under the Cub trademark.

EDNA GOODRICH'S FIRST LASKY PRODUCTION.

Famed for her beauty and recently the center of considerable attention by reason of her experiences in Europe as a red cross nurse, Miss Edna Goodrich will appear before the American public as a Paramount star for the first time in the Lasky Feature Play company's production, "Armstrong's Wife," which will be released November 18.

The action of the photoplay covers a wide range. Miss Goodrich is first seen as a young woman of society of the present day. She marries unhappily a professional gambler and by reason of her connection, innocently, with her husband's schemes she has a series of exciting experiences. A former suitor comes to her in her hour of trouble and takes her away from the city into the Canadian wilds. She discovers that the man who she thought her husband was married to another. This leaves her free to marry her old time sweetheart, which, however, she refuses to do, although she accepts his name for protection.

Scene from "Armstrong's Wife" (Lasky).

Out of this situation the dramatist has contrived some novel scenes, including a chase after the gambler fugitive, his rescue by the very woman he has wronged and his subsequent capture. Through all of this Miss Goodrich appears in the central role. Among those who appear with her are James Cruze, Thomas Meighan, Hal Clements, Ernest Joy, Raymond Hatton, Horace B. Carpenter and Mrs. Laurance McCord.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE SEA" (Equitable).

A new note has been struck by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation in "A Daughter of the Sea," in which dainty Muriel Ostriche takes the part of a wild, ragged, uneducated fisher girl, who, through saving the life of a wealthy woman who has been wrecked in a motor boat, becomes acquainted with her family, and finally wins her son, their honeymoon being spent in her father's cabin on the shore of the island where his mother was saved. In her transition from the costume and deportment of the fisher girl, to the dress and surroundings appropriate to the wife of a rich young man, Miss Ostriche displays a many sided effectiveness and a thorough appreciation of the possibilities of the character she is portraying which make her work a revelation of ability which will be greatly gratifying to her many friends.

Scene from "A Daughter of the Sea" (Equitable).

The snobbishness displayed by the sister of the man who has fallen in love with her forms a perfect foil to the girlish naturalness of the fisher girl, and her heroism in taking the blame for the death of the sister's lover in order to save that misguided girl from the results of her mistaken actions, strikes a note which carries the character to unexpected heights. Miss Ostriche has in this piece of work alone won an enduring place among screen favorites, and while the others in the cast have done excellent work, Clara Whipple and William H. Tooker being especially noteworthy, her place at the head is unquestioned.

Charls W. Seay, who directed the work, has brought out all the beauties of the plot and the locations, and has made the Equitable name a houshold word among the people of Block Island, where most of the seashore scenes were located. In addition to this he won the hearts of his people completely, which is a feat not always accomplished by directors.

"A WOMAN'S HONOR" (Great Northern).

The next release of the Great Northern Film company entitled "A Woman's Honor" is a modern society drama in four parts. With absorbing interest it tells the story of the marriage to Captain Ross of Hilda Thurmer, whose father, estimated to be immensely wealthy, is bankrupt. Believing his daughter to be well taken care of Thurmer ends his life. The suicide soon reveals the true state of the deceased's finances and scandalous circumstances are exposed. The captain is enraged and, at the advice of Prince Albert, abandons his wife. Hilda is quickly turned from an innocent, trusting girl into a bitter, vindictive woman, whose life henceforth is to be devoted to getting revenge upon the man who has abandoned her in the hour of her trouble. She obtains an engagement to appear upon the vaudeville stage and at the premier performance the Prince occupies a prominent box. Fascinated by Hilda's beauty he seeks to renew the acquaintance and Hilda is quick to grasp the opportunity thus presented. She ensnares the sensuous Prince, who purchases her former home and presents her with it.

Scene from "A Woman's Honor" (Great Northern).

At an evening reception given by the Prince at Hilda's home among the guests bidden is her former husband. It is on this occasion that Hilda obtains the revenge she has been seeking. After that she breaks her relations with the Prince.

To gain surcease from her wretchedness she takes to drugs. But out of the depths of vice a glorious love comes to her in the devotion of Paul Davis, an artist, who brings her consolation for the sufferings and disappointments of her early life. The character of Hilda is admirably portrayed by Miss Rita Sacchetto, the famous Great Northern star.

GAUMONT TO MAKE NOVEL COMEDIES.

The Gaumont Company is going to introduce an innovation in the way of comedy. In the near future the Gaumont Comedy Company, releasing the Casino Star Comedies on the regular Mutual Program, will produce a series of original burlesques. These burlesques, instead of parodying well known plays and books, will be amusing and overdrawn take-offs on the serious dramas which the Gaumont Company has already released. Edward Middleton is at the head of the Casino comedies, and will be responsible for the burlesquing of the dramas. There is one story—not a Gaumont drama—which Mr. Middleton wants to burlesque. That is the time-worn and honored story of "Red Riding Hood." This will probably be done in the near future.

"HEIGHTS OF HAZARD" (Blue Ribbon Vitagraph).

Much that is exciting happens in the five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "Heights of Hazard," picturized from Cyrus Townsend Brady's story of the same name by Eugene Mullin. Tangled threads that reach as far back as the Seventeenth Century and extend from New York to Colorado converge to form the climax of the story that pictures a situation so pregnant with dramatic force as to touch the top note of sensational denouement. The scenes and situations working up to this climax embody a story that for cleverness of conception ranks it as one of the most vital and absorbingly interesting of Dr. Brady's stories that have yet been adapted for the screen. "Heights of Hazard" was enacted by a super-excellent cast of Vitagraphers, among the most distinguished of whom are Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff and Charles Kent.

Scene from "Heights of Hazard" (Vitagraph).

"THE WHIRL OF LIFE."

In "The Whirl of Life," the six-part subject featuring Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, produced by the Cort Film Corporation and released by the Authors' Film Company, the interest depends upon the personality of the two famous dancers rather than upon any dramatic merit. It is difficult, in fact, determining in just what branch "The Whirl of Life" falls—whether it be drama, melodrama, comedy or burlesque. There would seem to be an attempt to make it more or less biographical; and in so far as it is successful in this respect there is the accompanying feeling that we are looking in on two sure-enough lovers—sort of compelled to look in the window, as it were.

There are one or two approaches to real dramatic moments. One of these is where the couple, in Paris following their marriage, decide to spend the few remaining dollars at a cafe. Incidentally they dance, and the hit they make will not be confined to the spectators on the screen. One of the factors that will make for interest is the frankness of the titles. These admit that the Castles had their gray days as well as bright ones. The titles, however, betray unskillfulness. At times they are flippant, and when the situation would otherwise seem to be serious they convert melodrama into farce; at others they are couched in what some one chooses to consider rhyme, but really are most amateurish.

The picture is not well acted, considered even from the standpoint of amateur dramatics. It probably will have considerable vogue, on account of the fame of the principals as leaders of dancing and also on account of the large element of the population interested in the pastime of which the Castles are exponents.

HARMO ORGAN IN 77TH STREET THEATER.

One of the Harmo pipe organs has recently been installed in the new 77th Street theater on Broadway. This location is a desirable one for the convenience of exhibitors who contemplate the purchase of an organ, being quite convenient for a practical demonstration of the instrument. The management of the 77th Street theater speak in high praise of the Harmo pipe organ, and declare themselves extremely satisfied and pleased at the favorable comments passed upon the beauty of the tone and quality of the organ, by their many patrons.

MISS MINTER GETS OVATION.

An unusual tribute was paid a screen artist when Mary Miles Minter, the dainty Metro star, dropped in with a party of friends to see her latest picture, "Emmy of Stork's Nest," run off at the Eighty-first Street Theater in New York. The manager of the theater observed Miss Minter and her party as they entered, and soon the word was passed around that the charming little actress was in the audience. Immediately after the first reel of the picture was run off there were cries of "Miss Minter" all over the theater. The operator found her with a spotlight and she arose and bowed in appreciation. After the picture was completed there was a rousing ovation for Miss Minter and she was obliged to appear on the stage. Niles Welch, who played lead opposite Miss Minter was in her party, and she drew him along with her as the applause continued.

"DESPAIR" (Essanay).

Essanay has produced an unusual story with an unusual plot in "Despair," in three acts, written and directed by J. Charles Haydon. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn play the leading parts, and the popular Essanay actress wins the sympathy of every spectator by the pitiful picture she presents when disappointed in love. "Despair" is the story of a pretty girl who, brought up among crooks, quite naturally joins in their criminal exploits. One night the gang plans to rob the house of Robert Spurier, a newspaper editor. The girl is caught in the act, but Spurier, attracted by her beauty, gives her a position in his office. She falls in love with him and strives valiantly to live honestly, and succeeds until one day she sees Spurier come out of a church with his bride. Heartbroken, she goes out to end her life, but is prevented by her former crook admirer, who induces her to go back to the old life. Spurier's home again is picked for a robber, and once more the girl is caught. This time, however, she is shot as a burglar and dies in Spurier's arms, just as he kisses her, to his bride's dismay. "Despair" is full of intense moments, and it reveals that one—be that one man or woman—can live honestly despite a shady past. It shows, also, what havoc disappointment in love can cause.

WIDE INTEREST IN ARGUS ANNOUNCEMENT.

Since the announcement by H. D. Ashton of the formation of Argus Films for the production of high class Travel Scientific and Industrial motion pictures he has received letters from several exhibitors in different parts of the country commending the plan and asking through what exchanges they can obtain the Argus product. One exhibitor writes:

"I have often wondered why some of the big film companies didn't seriously go into the making of real educationals—industrials which really show how things are done, scientific films which are explained to the audience and travel pictures which show by maps or explanation, in what part of the world they are taken. The public want this sort of pictures and will pay for them. * * *."

Two colleges have expressed interest in the plans of the company and have offered to co-operate in the making of scientific subjects.

Mr. Ashton said that the first two releases have been well received and that the company is at work on three more subjects which will be released before Nov. 1st. One subject now under way required the complete remodeling of the camera and the building of a special stand with lights, condensers, etc.

"THE WASP" (American).

"The Wasp" is an altogether pleasing two-reel "Flying A" drama, in which Vivian Rich and Walter Spencer play the leading roles. It is the story of a young girl steeped in crime who is led to reformation and a life of usefulness by the kindly advice of a man of affairs who eventually falls in love with her. There are a number of remarkable scenes in "The Wasp" which afford Miss Rich excellent opportunity for use of her exceptional dramatic powers.

Scene from "The Wasp" (American).

In the supporting cast Walter Spencer and Roy Stewart are extremely likable, both filling the roles assigned them with complete satisfaction. The story is entirely logical and it is ably directed by Reeves Eason.

"The Wasp" will be released November 1, on the regular Mutual program.

"MINE OWN PEOPLE" (North American).

Excitement runs at white heat in the closing chapters of "The Diamond From the Sky," the continued photoplay, consisting in all of thirty chapters. Chapter 27, subtitled "Mine Own People," is marked by excellent dramatic action on the part of Luke Lovell, played by George Periolat, and Quabba, played by William J. Tedmarsh. These two take the parts of Italians, and their Latin comedy, pathos and straight dramatic portrayals, have added much to the success of the picture.

Scene from "Mine Own People" (American)

Chapter 27 is the beginning of the end. It is the denouement of the story. It is a chapter which, aside from the twenty-six chapters which have gone before, makes in itself an excellent two-reel release.

MARGUERITE CLARK AT BEST IN "STILL WATERS."

Marguerite Clark will make her next screen appearance in "Still Waters," a story of circus and canal boat life, written especially for the little Famous Players star by Edith Barnard Delano, the well-known novelist who recently wrote "Rags" for Mary Pickford, in which she scored a triumph.

As Nesta in "Still Waters," Miss Clark has been called upon to do the most dramatic work of her motion picture career. Beginning as a quaint comedy with a very delightful little romance, the story gradually develops into a thrililng drama which reaches a big climax in the rescue of Nesta from a burly ring master who has trapped her in a deserted canal-boat cabin whither she has fled to escape his importunate attentions.

Scene from "Still Waters" (Famous Players)

In order to obtain the proper atmosphere for the production, Miss Clark and a company of players, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, were sent to Easton, Pa., for several weeks. The beautiful Pocono Hills, the Delaware River and the famous Water Gap were used as the background for the action which gives Miss Clark the best opportunity which she has had to display her versatility as a comedienne and as a dramatic actress.

Harry La Pearl, one of the New York Hippodrome's most celebrated clowns, was especially engaged for the circus scenes which play such an important part in the story. His comic antics form a delightful contrast to the dramatic scenes in which little Nesta plays such an unwilling part.

In addition to Miss Clark and Harry La Pearl, the cast includes such well-known stage favorites as Robert Broderick, Robert Vaughn and Arthur Evers.

"Still Waters" will be the Paramount Picture for November 4th.

"KIDDING THE GOATS" (MinA).

Harry (one goat) is in love with Rena, but she won't let him butt in, though Pa and Ma favor the match. She is partial to Russ (another goat).

A reward is out for the capture of a certain notorious rascal and Harry decides to make use of the fact. He bribes a village loafer to assume the garb of a desperado and hold up Russ and Rena while they are out buggy riding. He then comes along, saves the girl and puts Russ' cowardice to shame.

Later Russ learns that he was the goat and decides to turn the tables. The village has heard of Harry's trick on Russ and scare Russ by holding him up, posing as a bunch of masked bandits. Then when Harry is sufficiently frightened, Russ makes goats of the whole bunch by coming on the scene disguised and waving a revolver. All think he is the real highwayman and run for all they're worth. But he whispers a word to Rena who remains behind—and all ends in a happy lover's kiss.

"MY OLD DUTCH" (Universal).

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, so impressed was it on viewing "My Old Dutch," the photoplay version of Albert Chevalier's world-renowned song of the same name, that it bought outright this great ideal exclusive Turner film, and will soon release it on the Broadway Universal Features program. It is in five parts, and the leading roles are enacted by Mr. Chevalier as Joe Spudd, while Florence Turner, the international motion picture star, is Sal, "My Old Dutch." It is a great pathetic and intensely interesting drama, which should become as famous as Mr. Chevalier's coster song. It was written by Arthur Shirley and Mr. Chevalier and produced by Larry Trimble.

Scene from "My Old Dutch" (Universal)

MARIE EMPRESS WRITES OWN PART.

Marie Empress, the versatile Continental actress, who was featured with Edward Brennan in "The Woman Pays," a five-part drama produced by Rolfe-Metro and starring Valli Valli, has written the scenario for a feature picture in which she hopes to be starred. Miss Empress has written a role for herself that calls for the delineation of six distinct characters. In each part she has been starred in previous stage productions on the other side of the Atlantis. While Miss Empress is, perhaps, best known in this country for her marvelous portrayal of vampire types, she is equally as good in boy parts and appears to advantage as a male in evening clothes.

EDISON TO BURN SIX-STORY BUILDING.

One of the most spectacular fire scenes designed for motion pictures has been staged to occur at Fort Schuyler next week, when a six-story brick building constructed especially for the purpose will be given over to the flames. This big scene will be used in the Edison Feature "Children of Eve," scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service November 10th.

EUGENIE FORDE'S REMARKABLE CHARACTERIZATION.

Hagar Harding, the Gypsy in "The Diamond from the Sky," to which Miss Eugenie Forde offers such a remarkable characterization, has returned to her own. The current chapters of the big North American photonovel show her completely restored in mind and body and determined to gain for Esther (Lottie Pickford) the place in Richmond society to which she is entitled by right of birth.

The great bond of sympathy and love uniting these two characters has grown stronger through mutual sorrow. Esther's search for Arthur—her one and only love—has been futile and her life is empty. Hagar's loss of her boy-child almost before she had warmed his face with her own — the crowning sorrow of motherhood—made these two hearts a common one united through common affliction.

Hagar now has one aim in life—to establish Esther as mistress of Stanley Hall, but she realizes that society will never accept the girl if her sponsor be Gypsy, so she decides to return to her wandering tribe and carefree life of the open. The scenes between these two characters are unusually strong for the girl whose path of life has been beset by constant peril and lined with disappointments is reluctant to give up the only mother she has ever known, even though it be to permit her entrance to society's exclusive circles.

Eugenie Forde and Lottie Pickford.

The return to the cast of Hagar and the tear trimmed heroism she displays in her love for Esther is a splendid dramatic offering and is only equaled by the deft touch Miss Pickford puts into the girl role, enabling a two-character climax wondrously convincing and with a heart interest all compelling.

THANHOUSER WILL FEATURE AUDREY MUNSON.

From the quiet lanes of New Rochelle comes the news that an art sensation is due in moving pictures. Edwin Thanhouser has engaged Andrey Munson, who is known in the world of the palette brush and claypile as "The Venus of Washington Square," also as "The Panama-Pacific Girl" and "The Exposition Girl." Miss Munson has done some startling work among painters and sculptors, and Edwin Thanhouser considers her the logical subject for a new kind of film production which he has long had in mind. Not content with causing stage celebrities to migrate "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," he has now saddened the hearts of the Washington Square soft collar and flowing tie contingent by snatching from their midst "Divine Audrey," and he promises that in "Inspiration," which is the title of her first release, he will give the pro-and-con-ers of motion picture something to talk about. But the supports of things filmic need have no fear—for the Thanhouser ideal is a lofty one, and he can be trusted to the most delicate task carte blanche.

Audrey Munson in "Inspiration."

"THE FEUD" (Reliance).

"The Feud," Reliance feature, is a dramatic story of life in the northern Kentucky mountains. The effective story is well acted by a strong Reliance cast which includes Marguerite Marsh, sister of Mae Marsh, William Hinckley, Raymond Wells, Porter Strong and Kate Toncray.

The feud lies between Bill Cass and Jim Janey and develops after Cass wins the favor of Joan Sawyer, a southern Kentucky girl who has gone to the mountains for her health. Janey is disappointed in his aim to marry the girl and Cass becomes her husband. Janey carries on the feud after Cass' marriage. Four years after that event he comes to Cass' home in the mountains. In the darkness he seriously wounds Cass. Cass staggers into his cabin, falls unconscious, and is hidden by his wife in the closet at the approach of Janey. The latter searches ineffectively for Cass. Then he proposes to Joan that they cut the cards. If she wins, he promises to go away. She wins, but Janey disregards his oath.

Scene from "The Feud" (Reliance).

Cass, however, revives and hears Janey insult Joan. Cass crawls to his rifle with difficulty and shoots Janey. Then he and Joan leave the section for a new life far from feuds.

The scenes in "The Feud" are unusually effective. Director F. I. Butler found it necessary to build several villages of rude structures. The scenic beauties of the San Bernardino Mountains furnish the settings for the wilder parts of the story.

"THE MORNING AFTER" (Knickerbocker).

With "The Morning After," the Knickerbocker Star Features releases a three-reel comedy, which is a rare style of photoplay. The story is a clean-cut, interesting tale with not a bit of slap-stick. It depends upon its funny situations, its capable cast and its skillful directing to put it over.

Heading the funmakers is Smiling Bill Parsons as Mr. Henry Pike, who, in pursuing a man who owes him a long standing debt, gets into heaps of trouble and complications with Mrs. Lane (Rena Rogers), a pretty grass widow, and Pike has some job squaring the affair with his own wife the morning after.

Scene from "The Morning After" (Knickerbocker).

Others in the cast are Constance Johnson, who plays the part of Mrs. Pike; Harry Fisher, as a French massageur; Russ Powell as Mr. Lane. This feature will be released on Oct. 27.

"THE REFORMER" (Casino Star).

In line with its policy of presenting a different American star in each of its releases, the Gaumont Company announce Miss Alice Dovey in "The Reformer," a one-reel Casino Star Comedy released on the Mutual Program Oct. 24. Miss Dovey should prove an excellent drawing card, since she is well and favorably known throughout America as a light opera and musical comedy ingenue.

As developed by Director Edwin Middleton, the story has an unusually comic twist through the efforts of a bride to conceal the fact that she is on her honeymoon. Her faithful negro maid plunges her into trouble by the stories she relates in her efforts to keep secret that the attractively gowned young woman and her gallant companion have been newly married.

Scene from "The Reformer" (Casino Star).

Miss Dovey appears as the bride. Her enthusiasm over the part may be judged from the fact that she resigned her important part in the big musical revue, "Hands Up," to spend some time at Flushing, N. Y., in filming the comedy. Miss Dovey is supported in her congenial role by "Budd" Ross, James Levering, Jules Cluzetti, Mildred Warren and Marcia Harris as the all-important reformer.

KULEE FEATURE SHOWS BIG STARS.

Take twelve big Broadway stars, two guinea pigs, several swans, a dope fiend dip, and no end of plot and personality, and there you have the recipe for the newest, latest motion picture piece de resistance, "How Molly Made Good." Burns Mantle, dramatic critic on the New York Evening Mail, found the proper ingredients and mixed them all together. Then the Kulee Feature Film Corporation cooked up the idea, and for all its novelty it isn't in the least bit "half baked." What's more, although there is a gratifying dash of pepper in the plot, for once the public doesn't have to take its footlight favorites with a grain of salt.

"How Molly Made Good" carries the onlooker straight into the homes and privacies of Leo Ditrichstein, Henrietta Crosman, Julian Eltinge, Lulu Glaser, Robert Edeson, Julia Dean, Charles Ross, Mabel Fenton, Cyril Scott, Henry Kolker, May Robson and Mme. Fjorde, each in turn. And before the six reels of film land Molly back in success and safety at the newspaper office from which she started, she and the movie fans have had a chance to get a pretty good glimpse of these twelve star favorites right at home and sitting under the shadow of their own family trees.

The first public showing of "How Molly Made Good" was given Tuesday morning, October 19, at the Broadway Theater, by the Kulee Features, Inc.

LAMBART GOES WEST FOR MIRROR.

Captain Harry Lambart, of the Mirror Films, Inc., accompanied by Jack Cunningham, publicity representative of the same organization, left this week for Chicago, where, it is said, he is to take care of some important business which has to do with the future activities of the corporation.

There was a report that Captain Lambart might go through to the coast before he returned to New York, but he would not confirm the rumor. It is known in the trade, however, that the Mirror Films, Inc., is reaching out after certain talent and there is speculation as to whether the Captain's trip west may not have something to do with the signing of contracts which cannot be closed by mail.

The corporation is also said to have its eye on certain properties in the west which are necessary to the future plans which have been made, and important announcements are promised when the director-general of the organization returns.

EDISON'S "VANITY FAIR" SHOWS AT 50c PRICES.

The Miles Theatre, Pittsburgh's big, new playhouse, opened a nine-day engagement with "Vanity Fair," starring Mrs. Fiske, October 6th. The prices were 25c., 35c. and 50c., and the presentation of the great Edison drama was accompanied by a splendid orchestra and pipe organ. The production was widely advertised in the smoky city and played to record houses.

"Vanity Fair," released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service on October 6, is playing to capacity business and in many cities at increased admission prices. The Harper Theater, one of the largest and newest houses in Chicago, broke its own flattering records at 25c. admission prices last week, booking a return engagement.

"THE SINS OF SOCIETY" (World).

In World Film's forthcoming photodrama, "The Sins of Society," in which Robert Warwick plays the part of a manly young soldier who heroically suffers many hardships for the sake of the girl he loves, there is a striking series of exciting scenes to punctuate the action of the story.

These include a military review, racing scenes, river scenes and a houseboat, drilling on a troopship, a troopship torpedoed, the sinking of the troopship with men on board, a ladies' pet dog's luncheon party and church scenes, and a wedding—probably a greater diversity of striking situations than in any other photoplay now being released.

"SILVER THREADS AMONG THE GOLD" RIGHTS.

James Hicks, manager of the Tri-State Film Exhibiting Company of Ashland, Kentucky, has secured the booking rights for the state of Kentucky on "Silver Threads Among the Gold," from the K. & R. Film Company.

E. T. Peter of Dallas has also secured the booking rights on "Silver Threads Among the Gold" for Texas and Oklahoma."

Notes of the Trade.

VITAGRAPH Director Harry Davenport smashed a seven-passenger touring car to smithereens in a scene in "One Night," in which Robert Edeson is playing the leading character. Harry Morey and Eulalie Jensen were in the car just a few minutes previous to the staged accident, a head-on collision that demolished the car. The players jumped to a place of safety when the approaching automobile was only fifty feet away.

Baby Gene Frazer, aged three years, appears in all the glory of screen credit in the forthcoming Selig Red Seal Play, "Sweet Alyssum," to be released through V-L-S-E on November 15. Baby Gene enters into the spirit of the play with complete abandon.

Lynn Reynolds is staging a two-reel Universal drama by F. McGrew Willis entitled "His First Case." Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Val Paul and Olive Adair appear in the leading roles.

Kate Price and John T. Kelly will be reminded of the time when they were headliners in the "two-a-day," in the Vitagraph production of "Oh, For the Good Old Days," a typical old-time Irish sketch. The two comedians will be seen as prototypes of the characters that made them popular fifteen or twenty years ago.

Exhibitors' Ball Coming

Massachusetts Exhibitors' Third Annual Ball to Be Held December 1—Many Celebrities Will Be Invited to Be Guests—Film Favorites Will Attend—League Working Hard to Make It Surpassing Event.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE work for the third annual ball of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which will be held in the Boston Arena on Wednesday night, December 1, has been started. The ball of last year was the greatest social event witnessed in New England. Over 8,500 persons attended the ball and over 5,000 others were turned away, because the police prohibited the management from selling tickets after 9 o'clock.

A large number of film favorites and manufacturing executives will be invited as guests of honor. It is planned to have them leave New York on the day of the ball, on the Knickerbocker Limited on the day of the ball, arriving in Boston at 6 o'clock at night. They will be met at the South Station by automobiles and driven to the headquarters at the Copley Plaza Hotel.

It is up to every member of the league to work untiringly for the success of this affair. The large amount of free publicity that is to be obtained through the American contest will aid each and every one. Order your tickets from Sam Grant as early as possible.

MURPHY EXTENDS TERRITORY.

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film of New England, has now opened branch offices at Buffalo, Syracuse and Albany, N. Y. This makes six offices altogether. In addition to the three new branches, Mr. Murphy, whose headquarters are in Boston, has offices in Springfield and Bangor, Maine.

The opening of these three new exchanges makes Mr. Murphy the biggest independent film exchange man in the country. He first branched out for himself less than a year ago, when he purchased the New England franchise to the output of the United Film Service. He is supplying a special service to exhibitors and in addition has a special feature department.

The managers of the branch exchanges are Samuel Moscow, Boston; William, F. O'Brien, Springfield, Mass.; H. A. Palmer, Buffalo; John J. Courtney, Syracuse; Charles H. Barolet, Albany, and Earle B. Tinker, who was formerly connected with the General Film, Pathe and World exchanges, will succeed Mr. Barolet as manager of the Bangor office.

On a recent visit to New York, Mr. Murphy purchased the many feature picturizations of the works of Charles Dickens. These were made by the Hepworth company of England and are meeting with the approval of the New England picture patrons.

HIPPODROME OPENED BY KEITH.

The Boston Hippodrome on Tremont street, Boston, formerly the National, will be opened on Monday, October 18, by the Keith interests, after having been closed for over a year. This house has a larger seating capacity than any house in the city and was opened only four years ago. Feature picture programs will be used, in conjunction with Creatore and his famous band. The success of the Boston theater was brought about by the use of the Fadettes orchestra and feature pictures. This policy ought to prove successful at the Tremont street playhouse.

MIRACLE THEATER OPENS.

The new Miracle theater at North Easton, Mass., which was recently built by Frank Young, was opened during the past week. The house is modern and up to date in every detail and has a seating capacity of 250 persons. A new Powers' 6A machine has been installed and shows will be run four nights a week. Mr. Young will manage the house and has contracted for the use of United Film service.

GOLDSTEIN BROTHERS PLAN TO REBUILD BURNED THEATER.

The Strand, owned by the Goldstein Brothers Amusement company, proprietors of the Broadway theater in Springfield, Mass., was destroyed in the fire which swept Hampton Beach, N. H., recently. Nathan E. Goldstein, president of the company, will rebuild at once a larger and more modern theater. The theater was estimated to be worth $30,000.

New England Exhibitors—New Openings and Change—Among the Exchange Men.

A. L. Wood, of the Globe theater, Pawtuckets, R. I., was a Boston visitor during the past week. He reports business as booming in his house and states that he plans to erect a new playhouse in the near future. Negotiations are under way for the purchase of a location upon which the house, which will seat 2,500 persons, will be constructed.

The Hippodrome at Providence, R. I., which seats 3,000 persons and has been reopened by the Allen Amusement company. This house is one of the largest picture theaters in the state.

Walter Cooper of the Cooper Brothers Amusement company has closed the Park theater at Attleboro, which has been under his management for the past few months.

The Mirror theater at Springfield, which for some time ran noon-day shows for the employes of the Indian Motorcycle company, has been forced to discontinue these performances on account of labor troubles at the factory. At these shows the employes would eat their lunches while they saw the picture program.

Frank West, formerly of Roberts and West, proprietors of the Three Star theater, Holyoke, Mass., has purchased the Lyric at Springfield.

Joseph L. Brockhouse, who has been the pianist at the Nickel theater, Providence, R. I., for the past year, now has returned to the Globe, Pawtucket, R. I. Mr. Brockhouse, who has been pronounced one of the best pianists in the state, was with the Globe for five years prior to his connection with the Nickel.

John Farrell has disposed of his interests in the Subway theater at Springfield to J. M. Ryan.

Two new roadmen have been added to the sales department of the United Film Service of New England. They are Walter Nelson, who was formerly connected with the Mutual exchange, and R. W. Cobe, formerly of the Picture Playhouse company.

The five reel German war picture, which was made under the direction of the New York Staats Zeitung, is being handled in the New England territory by Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service of New England. This picture bears the stamp of approval of the police president of Berlin and contains many interesting war scenes.

Charles Williams, who was formerly connected with the Salem theater at Salem, Mass., has been appointed manager of the Plaza in that city.

The Academy of Music, the stock playhouse of Northampton, Mass., is now running the Hearst-Selig weekly between the acts. B. Harrison is manager of the house.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Martin of the World in Motion, Burlington, Vermont, were visitors to Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England office of the General Film.

Hurst's theater on Broadway, Somerville, Mass., will be opened on November 1. This is a new playhouse and will seat 1,200 persons.

S. J. Brodie, who has recently been the Boston manager of the Gustave Frohman exchange, has resigned and accepted a road position with the World Film corporation. He is well known to all exhibitors.

L. H. Raymond of the New England office of the World Film corporation has returned from a very successful trip through Maine. He reports business conditions among the Pine Tree State exhibitors as booming. During his trip he signed many of the exhibitors on yearly contracts for World and Equitable features.

A. Kessel of the Triangle Film corporation and Harry Palmer, manager of the Buffalo office of the United Film service, were the guests of Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England United Film service, at the two Boston games of the world's series.

The New Yorker Staats Zeitung war pictures, which are being booked by Fred B. Murphy of the United Film service, played the Empire theater, Lewiston, Maine, on October 20 and 21. The state grange was in convention during the engagement.

Chandos St. J. Bernon, who has been connected with the New England office of the Fox Film corporation, has gone to Montreal to open the first Fox office in Canadian territory.

Many improvements have been made in the shipping and poster departments of the Boston office of the World Film corporation. These departments are now considered among the most complete and most systematic in the city.

The old Universalist Church on Cross street, Somerville, Mass., has been sold for a picture theater. The license has been granted to George T. Horan.

Manager Stanley W. Hand of the Boston office of the World Film is anticipating a visit of Assistant General Manager Harry C. Drum and Eastern Division Manager George J. Schaefer. Manager Hand has sent Hyman Fine, a salesman, on a trip through New Hampshire and Vermont.

Picture programs now are the center of attraction at the Blivens opera house at Westerly, R. I. This house formerly played road attractions.

The new Woburn theater, at Woburn, Mass., which was recently completed, has been opened. This house is one of the most beautiful of the smaller city houses in the state, and seats 1,000 persons. The theater is under the management of John T. Watt. The program consists of Fox features and two serials, "Who Pays?" and "Neal of the Navy."

Traveling Auditor Viebrock of the Pathe company is visiting Manager Bernfield of the New England branch of the company.

HONE'S TROUBLES HELPED ALL MAINE EXHIBITORS.

By J. P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITOR JOHN J. HONE, of Presque Isle, Maine, whose fight against censorship which threatened to drive him out of business in his home town, has not only helped himself but other exhibitors in the state, is a man to whom every moving picture exhibitor in the state of Maine owes gratitude.

Mr. Hone built several moving picture theaters in Presque Isle and kept prospering in spite of the fact that fire was a persistent enemy, burning down two or three of his houses. His latest is a $50,000 brick opera house, the finest of any small town in the state. Then Presque Isle ministers and a few well intentioned ladies started out to tell Mr. Hone how to run his moving picture shows and succeeded in getting a town censorship act passed which would exclude almost all pictures except those strictly educational and also provided that no children should be admitted under sixteen years of age except once a week. Mr. Hone was so hampered by these restrictions that he nearly went out of business, but he is a man with a square jaw. The reform people had it on him because they were able to persuade the town authorities from reissuing a license to Mr. Hone unless he complied with their requirements.

Exhibitor Hone.

Mr. Hone went to the root of things and took the train for Augusta, where the legislature was in session. There, although without political influence he had a law passed which not only rid the moving picture exhibitors of Maine of the bugbear of censorship but also reduced their license fees in all parts of the state from $90 to $40. Briefly, the provisions of the law that brought about these two reforms are summarized in these paragraphs:

"If the municipal officers of any town after written applications to them for a license UNREASONABLY REFUSE OR NEGLECT to grant it the applicant by giving them ten days' notice and a bond to pay all cost arising thereafter, may appeal to the county commissioners, who after a hearing of the parties may grant the license or not, as they judge reasonable. A fee for such license not exceeding Ten Dollars shall be fixed by the municipal officers."

In plain English, town officers may not withhold licenses from exhibitors merely because they feel that they are the censors of what should be shown at the local moving picture house. Furthermore, the license fee for motion picture houses, which has in the past varied from $25 to $100 in different parts of the state, now cannot be more than $10 a year. And the thanks of the motion picture men of Maine are due to John J. Hone of Presque Isle for this!

Rev. Clifford Snowden, of Portland, Me., acting under the impression that the motion pictures of the Frank case exhibited at the Jefferson theater at Portland contained features that should be expunged, called upon the mayor of Portland and the county attorney to make protest. It was found by the gentleman that the picture had been endorsed by duly recognized censors and the local authorities informed him that there was nothing in the incidents pictured that could be matters of objection.

NEW DOWNTOWN HOUSE IN PITTSBURGH.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

IT has been announced that a company of eastern business men, backed by a big capital, are negotiating for a site on which to build a large moving picture theater in the downtown section of Pittsburgh. It has been rumored that a site has already been selected, but the location has not been divulged by the promoters. It is also rumored that the consummation of the proposition is contingent upon the securing of the Paramount service.

HALL-DAVIS.

J. E. Davis, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Metro Pictures service, joined the ranks of the benedicts Wednesday, October 6. He married Miss Olivette Hall, a popular young society girl of Beaver, Pa. Miss Hall was formerly a stenographer in the offices of the General Film Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa. Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom left for a honeymoon trip which will take in Philadelphia, New York and Washington. During Mr. Davis's absence, General Manager Skirboll will have charge of the Metro office in this city.

MAX STERN AN EXHIBITOR.

Max Stern, formerly connected with a number of film exchanges in Pittsburgh, is now manager of the Diamond theater in East Liverpool, Ohio, owned by the Diamond Amusement Company, which is negotiating for the purchase of theaters in Beaver Falls, Pa., Steubenville, O., and Morgantown, W. Va., which will also be manager by Mr. Stern.

THE BEECHVIEW SOLD.

At Beechview, near Pittsburgh, Pa., property at 1541 Beechview avenue, near Seventh avenue, has been sold to John Kohler. The lot has a one-story brick moving picture theater, known as the Beechview. The property is said to be worth about $12,000. Mr. Kohler owns and operates the Olympic theater at 1532 Beechview avenue, and has a monopoly of the business in that district. For the present, at least, he will operate both theaters.

BELLE GOLD RECOVERING.

Mrs. Al. W. Cross, wife of the manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis in New York, is now convalescent. Mrs. Cross will be remembered as Belle Gold who played with Eddie Foy as Ophelia in "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway," and with McIntyre and Heath as Desdemona in "The Ham Tree." Klaw & Erlanger are now holding an important part for her and it is likely that she will appear before the public this winter.

PITTSBURGH ITEMS.

Houses Change Hands—Business Notes —Improvements—Personals.

A new $7,000 instrument, a pipe organ and concert orchestra combined, was installed at the Thomas theater in Sharon, Pa., last week.

The Kathlyn theater in Sharpsburgh, Pa., has been repainted and redecorated and presents an improved appearance.

James & H. Wallace, owners of the Arcade theater, in Connellsville, Pa., purchased a Wurlitzer theater orchestra last week and immediately had it installed. The Wallace brothers' mother, who plays in one of the Connellsville churches and who is a well-known organist, will play the organ at the theater.

W. A. Kay, formerly booker at the Mutual exchange in Pittsburgh, is now on the road for the General Film Company of this city.

Dr. Stybr's new theater in Perrysville avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been named The Atlas. It is expected that this house will be opened in a few weeks.

An elaborate and handsome electrical sign has been ordered for the latest addition to the Rowland & Clark theaters, which is The Strand, now in the course of construction in the Oakland district of Pittsburgh.

The Luna in Brackenridge, Pa., has been closed for a short time in order to make repairs. It will be reopened by the new manager, T. P. Westboy, of Oakland, Pittsburgh, who recently purchased it from Ralph Lardin.

The Palace in Homestead, near Pittsburgh, has been repainted and redecorated and presents an otherwise improved appearance. Ralph Meyers is now manager of this theater, which is owned by Henry Polk.

James Steele, general manager of the Famous Players Film of Pittsburgh, was in New York last week attending the regular monthly meeting of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The Colonial in Swissvale, Pa., has contracted for the entire series of seven Griffith subjects booked by the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh.

The Peerless in Sharpsburg, Pa., has been sold by H. M. Kopp to Feldstein Brothers, the new owners having taken charge last week.

The Vitagraph theater in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, recently put in a new silver screen, made by Mr. Zerbe, which is giving excellent satisfaction.

W. F. Rogers, manager of the Pittsburgh Triangle office, announces that his company's first release will be made on October 24. This company is located at 414 Penn avenue and these rooms are being remodeled.

David Thomas, owner of the Beaver theater in Beaver, Pa., recently had a Wurlitzer orchestra piano, Style CX, installed in his theater.

G. E. Warden, of Wheeler & Duseberry, a wholesale lumber concern, is opening a moving picture theater at Endeavor, Pa., a small town of about 500 inhabitants in the lumber region, just north of Oil City.

The Universal Movie Ticket offices, which have been located in the Lyceum building, Sixth street, Pittsburgh, has been moved to the Jenkins Arcade, rooms 5144 and 5145. Preparations are being made by the new manager, David Simon, to wage a vigorous advertising campaign.

Analyzes Local Business

Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina Conditions in Interesting Analysis Made by Manager Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, of Fox Washington Branch—Small Towns and Big—Prices Asked—What Crandall Says.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BRANCH Manager Lieut. Jim P. Anderson of the Fox Film Washington branch has just completed a census of Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina. In September he sent out postal cards to postmasters of the different towns in those states wherein he stated that "We are informed that it is permissible for you to fill in and return the attached card with information desired relative to your town. The Post Office Department states that you are at liberty to supply the data which we desire to complete a list of moving picture theaters in your state. We will greatly appreciate your filling in and returning the attached reply card by return mail. Thanking you in advance, we are, yours truly, * * *"

On the return card blank spaces were left for the name of the town, its population, number of moving picture theaters located there, the names of the owners, the admission charged, the number of days operated per week, whether the audiences are white or colored, and whether the town has electric light.

In explaining this action to the representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, Mr. Anderson stated, "As we are desirous of having our pictures exhibited in every town of 1,000 or more people in the States of Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, and finding that the trade lists do not contain all of the towns, we conceived the plan of sending out these postal cards to the postmasters of all such towns. Out of 189 cards so sent, we have had returned more than 150, each containing the desired information.

Towns That Ought to Have Shows.

"Upon tabulating this information we were indeed surprised to find that there were quite a number of towns averaging from 1,500 to 2,000 in population, supplied with electric light, that had no motion picture theaters. Another surprising point was the fact that of the cards returned to us there was shown to be fully ninety per cent of the houses operated as straight ten-cent propositions, and a good twenty-five per cent of these charged as high as twenty cents. These are motion picture theater prices only, as no information was asked for or given on vaudeville or road show houses.

Prices Asked in Larger Cities.

"It must be remembered that the foregoing information applies to towns of 5,000 population or less," continued Mr. Anderson. "I have just returned from a personal visit to the larger cities where I found that the ordinary programs were bringing ten and fifteen cents, while the exhibitors are demanding fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cents for the feature productions. This is true even where there are two and three houses in close competition with each other. It shows that the exhibitors are awakening to the need for higher admission prices and the fact that their demands are being met with good grace on the part of the public has led them to book higher grade productions. It would be suicidal for a man to charge first class prices for third or fourth rate exhibitions. The difference between the price of films with respect to grade is not nearly so great as results from a charge of say ten cents instead of five cents and there naturally results a greatly increased percentage of profit to the exhibitor.

Analysis of the Situation.

"Analyzing cards from Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina, it is seen that 159 houses have been reported on. Of the forty-one theaters reported on in Virginia, four charge five cents, while two charge fifteen cents and the rest are ten-cent propositions. In addition, five postmasters stated that there were no motion picture theaters in their towns, while two others refused to comply with our request and failed to furnish any information.

"In Maryland, of the 34 houses reported upon, there were four houses charging five cents, one other house has prices scaling from ten to twenty cents, with all of the rest charging ten cents. Two towns have no theaters and one postmaster refused to supply the desired information.

"In North Carolina, 84 houses were reported upon. Of all of these there is but one that charges five cents. Two houses get ten and twenty cents, while three others charge fifteen cents. Ten of the towns reported upon have no motion picture theaters within their borders."

Admission Prices in the Capital.

Referring to the situation with respect to admission charges in Washington, Harry M. Crandall, who operates Crandall's theater, the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, said, "There is a very noticeable tendency on the part of the exhibitors in this city to demand ten cents as admission to their houses. It was not so long ago that the exhibitors in many instances declared that if they attempted to charge ten cents except when they were running something 'big' it would drive them out of business. However, there have been so many things come up in the last year or two that have increased the operating or overhead charges of the exhibitors that they have been forced to raise prices if they wanted to keep in the game. I can count fully twenty houses that have gone from five to ten cents.

A Higher Price Experiment.

"Just as the houses in the residential sections tried ten cents on feature nights before adopting that as the regular admission, I am trying fifteen cents on a few first-class productions that I have booked for exhibition during the coming few weeks. If I find that my attendance does not fall off by reason of this increase, I will gradually add to my fifteen-cent days until before the first of the year that sum will be the regular admission and I will be getting twenty and perhaps twenty-five cents for such films as will bring the price.

A Long Tedious Matter.

"Educating the public to paying higher prices for the amusement offered by the motion picture exhibitors is a long tedious matter. They have been given the best there is for so long at five and ten cents that they have become accustomed to paying those amounts and naturally do not care to pay more, but the Savoy theater on Fourteenth street, the Penn Gardens and one or two others, including my own theater, have gotten twenty-five cents for certain features and had a line of people waiting to get into the houses, and now the Columbia theater is getting as high as twenty-five cents daily, so I believe I am safe in saying that it will not be long before the Washington theaters will be getting as good prices as any city in the country."

COSMOS ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Cosmos theater, of which A. Wolf is the president, was held in the office of the company, at 307 Ninth street, Northwest, this week.

PHANTOSCOPE COMPANY ADDS TO ITS CAPITAL.

The stockholders of the Phantoscope Company, at a special meeting held last week at the Raleigh Hotel, voted to increase the capitalization of that company from $100,000 to $250,000 and to change the name thereof to the Graphoscope Company.

The meeting was presided over by C. Francis Jenkins, the inventor of the projection machine which the company is marketing. He explained the special business for which the meeting was called, and this was quickly disposed of under the supervision of Judge Charles S. Bundy and Fleming Newbold.

The new machine is in constant operation at the Circle theater. Its use was explained by Dr. William P. Herbst, president of the Circle Theater Company, and ex-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia. Other speakers who participated in the meeting were L. W. Estes, Wellstood White and J. Roger White. A buffet luncheon was served at the conclusion of the meeting.

WILLARD-JOHNSON FIGHT FILMS.

The Supreme Court of the United States has been asked to advance for early argument the case involving the power of the United States customs officials to exclude from this country the motion picture films of the Willard-Johnson prize fight at Havana, Cuba. As previously noted in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, this case arose in the State of New Jersey, where the owners of the film obtained an injunction from the Federal district court to compel customs officials to admit the films and to hold the law of 1912 unconstitutional. Similar cases have also arisen in the states of New York and Maine.

LEO GARNER ON THE ROAD FOR UNITED.

Leo Garner, who for the past two years has been booker at the Washington branch of the United Film Service, is now on the road. The business of this concern, located at 903 E street, Northwest, was recently taken over by Sidney B. Lust. Upon assuming control of the business Mr. Lust decided to give Mr. Garner a real opportunity in Virginia and North Carolina. He is making good according to all reports and will be permanently assigned to that territory. Mr. Lust will personally cover nearby points in addition to the Washington trade.

CRANDALL REDECORATING.

Crandall's theater, at Ninth and E streets, Northwest, is being redecorated in anticipation of a good fall and winter business. That is the way Mr. Optimist Crandall puts it. However, something of a record has been set in this case for the entire interior was redecorated without any inconvenience to the management or its patrons. At the conclusion of the day's business on Wednesday last fourteen men were put to work with quick-drying paint and were it not for the added appearance of the auditorium and a very slight odor of turpentine upon entering the theater for the first morning performance on the following day, one would not have known that a most disagreeable job had been accomplished.

SENATE THEATER REOPENED.

William Oriana, who for the past two years has been employed as operator at the Leader theater, on Ninth street, Northwest, and Frank Newman, employed by the same house and for the same length of time as an usher, have opened the Senate theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest. This house has been dark for some weeks.

WHAT IS "AD VALOREM" OF FILMS?

The new duty imposed by Great Britain on cinema films, according to the London Times, is cordially approved by British film producers. Experts in the business, however, are puzzled to know how the revenue authorities will interpret "ad valorem." "The value of a film, one expert pointed out," says the newspaper, "does not lie in the negative itself—most films are imported as negatives—but in the money the owners can get for the copies made here from that negative. Will the revenue authorities accept the intrinsic value—say 1½d. (3 cents) per foot—or the real value? 'Some negatives of 3,000 feet,' the expert said, 'might be reasonably valued at £200 ($975). On the other hand, there is the film 'The Eternal City,' produced by an American company. At least £20,000 ($97,500) will be made out of the hire of this negative. As a valuer I should say that the value of that negative is £10,000 ($48,665), and therefore the duty on it should be £3,333 ($16,220).' "

EARL REESE AND GEO. SMILEY VISIT PHILADELPHIA.

Earl E. Reese and George W. Smiley visited Philadelphia last week on business connected with the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Booking Agency of which they are officers.

VIRGINIA LETTER.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Lynchburg's National Starts Voting Contest.

A POPULAR voting contest has been inaugurated by Manager W. L. Holt, of the National theater, Lynchburg. Votes are to be given with each admission ticket to the theater for a period of thirty days, at the end of which time the three persons receiving the highest number of votes will be awarded the prizes. In an advertisement in the local papers, telling of the contest, a nomination blank good for one hundred votes was printed.

The National, located on Main street, is one of the newest and handsomest houses in this territory. It is built "backside-to" as compared with other theaters as the 650 seats contained therein face the street or front exits. The exterior of the house is very attractive, being made of large marble slabs inlaid with blocks of green and brown. Above the roof on either side, the building is finished with a dome electrically illuminated at night and surmounted by flag poles.

Both the lobby and the auditorium are elaborately decorated. The former has a wainscoting of marble above which are poster display cases with mahogany frames. It is well lighted by an ingenious arrangement of globes. Inside the theater it is possible for one to read a newspaper with ease by a subdued light which in no way interferes with projection, but allows the patrons to move about minus the timidity that is occasioned by a poorly lighted auditorium.

The lower side walls of the auditorium are of brown and green material. Radiators and fans provide heat and cool air in the proper seasons. The seats are large and roomy with plenty of space between rows and between the aisles. Everything possible has been done to insure the comfort of patrons. There are six ceiling lights in ornamental globes.

On either side of the proscenium arch are mechanical musical instruments, a large pipe organ on the one, a pianola on the other. The operator's booth is equipped with two Power's 6-A machines, motor driven.

C. A. Goebel Buys Stocks in Gaiety at Roanoke.

F. O. Webber, of Roanoke, Va., who, with H. L. Rockhill, has been operating the Gaiety theater, in Lynchburg, has disposed of his interests in that house to C. A. Goebel. Mr. Goebel was formerly located in Briston, where he operated the Eagle and Fairyland theaters, which houses he recently disposed of to L. Morse, giving the latter full control of all the houses in that place. Mr. Goebel has had long experience in the motion picture business and will probably do much toward adding to the success of the Gaiety.

T. A. Brannon to Cover District for Universal.

Thomas A. Brannon, who was formerly employed as traveling representative of the Washington, D. C., branch of the General Film, has secured a similar position with the Universal Film & Supply, of Charlotte, N. C., and will cover North Carolina and Virginia, boosting Universal. As Mr. Brannon has been traveling through this part of the south for the past three years he is very well known among the exhibitors and he has gained many friends, all of whom wish him success in his new undertaking.

Pryor Bros. Open New House in Danville.

Pryor Bros., who have been operating the Bijou and Majestic theaters in Danvilleville and the Bijou theater in Greensboro, N. C., have just opened a new house in Danville, which they have named the Strand. Modern in every particular and very attractively decorated, it has two Power's 6-B machines in use and a Gold Fiber screen.

Retiring rooms have been provided for both men and women patrons and everything possible done to insure the comfort of all. One of the main features of the new playhouse is the seven-piece orchestra. This is stationed on a low stage, specially constructed for that purpose, which is equipped with very beautiful settings.

Pryor Bros. are counted among the most successful business men in this section of the country. Not only are they enterprising, but far-seeing. They have discerned the trend of the times and in charging an admission fee of fifteen cents to all performances, are giving their patrons the highest grade pictures obtainable. Each exhibition consists of a multiple-reel feature, an educational reel and Pathe News.

Harry Webber, of Roanoke, Weds.

Harry M. Webber, who has been associated with his father, F. O. Webber, of the Comet theater, Roanoke, last month went to Norfolk, accompanied by Miss Ida Clingenpeel, also of Roanoke. While in Norfolk they decided to give the folks a surprise so they slipped over to Elizabeth City, where a minister soon performed the ceremony which joined their beating hearts as one. Upon their return to the home town they were given a warm reception by their many friends. Young Mr. and Mrs. Webber left soon thereafter for Salem, where Mr. Webber is now to be found at all hours of the day in the office of the Grand theater, the management of which he has just assumed, working up new schemes to draw big business.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

Masons Attend at the Alpha.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER FOWLER of the Alpha theater gave an exhibition of the moving picture version of "Are You a Mason" at his theater Saturday afternoon, in honor of forty masons, members of his Masonic degree class of the Scottish Rite. There were also seventy-five friends of Manager Fowler present. G. R. Sparr, grand worshipful master of North Georgia, was among the Masonic guests.

Col. Smith of V-L-S-E Talks to Ad. Men.

A rare treat was enjoyed by that crowd of good fellows, the Atlanta Ad Mens' Club, at their regular noonday luncheon, Thursday, at the Ansley Hotel, when a moving picture film was flashed before them, showing President Boehm of the club at a hurried luncheon, depicting the many trials, tribulations and pitfalls of a real progressive advertising man. The film—a complete surprise—was arranged by Col. B. Lee Smith, publicity manager for the Atlanta office of the V-S-L-E, with the aid of the Scenic Film Company, and followed Col. Smith's talk to the Ad Men on "Motion Picture Advertising."

Taking the Atlanta branch of the industry Col. Smith declared that the pay roll here in film exchanges is $598,000 a year; express charges nearly $300,000 yearly, while that of telegrams and telephones is about $100,000 yearly.

Manager Hughes Returns.

Manager Hughes of the General Film Company's local office, has just returned from a business trip to New York.

Exchange Men Smiling.

The prosperity wave which is sweeping over the South is having such an effect on the exchange men, that every one of them are not only wearing broad grins, but stacked with orders. Some are compelled to employ additional help to hold up in their shipping department.

College Folk Crowd to See Film.

At an enthusiastic meeting Saturday of the college presidents, and others connected with the various schools of Atlanta, it was agreed to have a second run of the Georgia motion picture film in Atlanta on October 23d, especially for the benefit of the college students of Atlanta and the surrounding territory. Every college and school was represented. Previous to the close of the meeting President Mattison, of the School of Technology, reserved 600 seats; Agnes Scott college, 250 seats; Cox college, 250 seats, and Georgia Military college, 250 seats, besides those reserved for schools over the city. Two thousand additional feet of film have been added since the moving picture was shown at the auditorium, and it is stated that this footage contains some of the most interesting scenes yet shown in the picture.

Old Films Fail to Draw.

It is rumored, though not as yet confirmed, that two moving picture theaters are about to make an assignment, and the reason is dull business. If this proves true there is always a reason, and an analysis might be gone into very profitably by other theaters in Atlanta who have been running the same films several times within the past month under new titles displayed in their lobbies. The public is long bearing and patient, but will finally turn to other theaters where new films are being shown, even though the admission is a trifle higher, and once there will remain. Especially is this true of several down town theaters who enjoy the patronage of young people during the noon hour, and who see the same picture twice in ten days.

Frances Parks in Films.

Word has been received from friends of Miss Frances Parks, a former Atlanta girl, who last summer moved to California, that she will soon, if all goes well, be seen in films put out by the Essanay Company. "Broncho Billy" has given Miss Parks a try out in a little girl's part, and a contract is all but signed. Miss Parks while in Atlanta was prominent in amateur theatricals, and comes from a theatrical family.

Bad Ventilation Loses

Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World Overhears Conversation on Films and Theaters—Two Patrons Argued Advantages of a Good Film and a Comfortable House—The Latter Won.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

APPARENTLY the days of the poorly-ventilated moving picture theater are limited since the larger, well-ventilated houses have come into existence. It is a well known fact that the poorly-ventilated theaters no longer draw good crowds, regardless of the class of films which are being shown. Good films and poor ventilation will not equalize each other, as was demonstrated a few days ago in a casual conversation heard on one of the busy thoroughfares in Louisville.

Smith met Jones on the street and said: "Come on, let's go over to the Strand and watch the show for a while; it's a peach of a good film. Jones answered: "Let's go over to the Monarch; the film is nothing like as good, but the air is fit to breathe, and after being cooped up in my stuffy office all morning I don't feel much inclined to spend an hour in an ill-smelling moving picture theater."

Of course the latter argument won, and the ventilated theater got the business. The competing theater (which, by the way, is not the "Strand," nor is the other the "Monarch") at one time handled a very nice business, but has fared rather poorly since well-ventilated theaters came into existence.

FEWER PICTURE SHOW SOLOISTS.

It is interesting to note that the moving picture theater singers have given away to better and longer films. Up to within a few months ago the leading moving picture theaters of Louisville all employed expensive singers who appeared at each performance. For the past few months not a single theater in the city has employed singers of any kind, that is among the leading downtown houses, although some of the outlying theaters employ local talent from time to time. It is understood that the majority of the patrons of moving picture theaters prefer a straight film program, and become irked during the intervals taken up by the singers. At any rate the managers of the theaters have been enabled to save considerable money on the singers, and have been in position to give their patrons better film service.

THEATERS BITTEN.

The Crystal, the New Novelty and the Hill Top theaters were among Louisville concerns which were giving away "travel slips," at the time the American Travel Slip Company was proceeded against in the bankruptcy court by local creditors. These travel slips were redeemable for moving picture theater tickets, or transportation on railroad, steamship or trolley lines. It was the second trading stamp organization to be involved in the city inside of a few months, and in both instances a number of moving picture concerns were caught with supplies of stamps on hand.

FALLEN TO HARD TIMES.

The Columbia theater, formerly the Bijou, and one of the earliest moving picture theaters in the city, which has been closed for several months following a fire in the operating room, is being utilized by a fruit concern at this time. The theater has not been changed, the fruit people are using the lobby as a salesroom, and the interior of the building for storage purposes. The Board of Public Safety refused to allow the theater to be used as a moving picture house, due to the fact that the building did not comply with the law in that it did not have rear or side entrances, and such entrances could not be installed, as the building is in a well built up section of the city. This action was taken after two or three small fires occurred in a short interval of time.

KEITH GETS LOUISVILLE RIGHTS TO FOX FILMS.

Louisville theater men were considerably surprised to hear of the recent deal signed by J. J. Murdock, representing the B. F. Keith interests, with William Fox, of the Fox Film Corporation, whereby the Keith theaters assume the exclusive rights to exhibit Fox features. According to Lee Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, the contract gives the Keith interests the privilege of showing these features in Louisville, Jeffersonville and New Albany. Under the new contract the features will never be shown at other than a Keith house unless a special arrangement is made between the exhibitor and the Keith interests.

A few days ago a good deal of interest was taken in an announcement that "The Wonderful Adventure," the Wm. Farnum success, would be shown in no Louisville theater but the Mary Anderson. No one knew the deal was on, and it was generally thought that any theater could later get the picture.

The success of the big production in Louisville is shown in a published apology of the theater which lamented over the necessity of turning away over 3,000 patrons of the theater on the first day the film was shown in Louisville.

ADVERTISES STARTING TIME FOR ALL FILMS.

One of the leading moving picture theaters of Louisville has been using a new stunt in advertising the time that the shows start. Instead of stating merely the time at which feature shows start, it includes times when the program shows begin. The big congestion at the regular starting hours is relieved to some extent. This system is only employed in the late evening and nights when there is generally a shortage of seats.

BEGIN CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

The first of the 1915-1916 children's shows began at the Mary Anderson on Saturday morning, October 16. The performance consisted of "Pimmochio," a three-part comedy, the George Kleine travel pictures, "Busy Cupid" and "The London Zoo." These pictures were all viewed by the Louisville Board of Women and Children's Moving Picture Censors. A box of candy was given as a souvenir to each child who attended the opening performance of the season.

THE NEW SHUTTER COMPANY TO START.

It is understood that the new Commonwealth Invention Syndicate, a concern which will handle the new Fullenlove motion picture machine shutter, will shortly start operations in the city. W. H. Fain and Fred Sheldon, formerly connected with the Kinemacolor Company's Louisville office, will be connected with the new concern. Mr. Sheldon was formerly a salesman for the Kinemacolor Company, while Mr. Fain handled the installations. The two men will work together as they did for the Kinemacolor Company, Mr. Sheldon handling the selling end, while Mr. Fain will attend to the installations. Mr. Sheldon has been connected with the S. & P. Film & Supply Company for some time past, while Mr. Fain for the past six months has been with the Novelty Theater Company.

Kentucky Business Notes—New Theaters—Programs.

The Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, O., manufacturers of handsome brass poster frames, recently made deliveries on about $500 worth of frames which were purchased by the Keith interests for use at the Mary Anderson theater of Louisville.

John Sebree, of Decatur, Ill., was recently in Louisville, where he called on some of the local film exchanges. Mr. Sebree stated that he is now operating three theaters in Decatur, and is planning to erect a new five-cent house shortly.

E. W. Conant, manager of the Children's Feature Film Corporation, of Louisville, reports that bids have been received for remodeling the studio building in South Louisville, but that the work is being held up for the time being. It is probable that the company will produce its first picture shortly in the East, and will not be ready to use the local studios for some time to come.

The Walnut theater, of Louisville, a five-cent theater, has contracted for the first run of the regular Mutual Program in the city. The service started on Monday, October 17.

The new moving picture theater in the Colored Knights of Pythias building, at Tenth and Chestnut streets, has finally been opened to the public, and is reported to be handling a nice colored business.

Harry Barder, chairman of a special committee of the Suburban Lodge, A. F. & A. M., recently reported that the organization would erect a brick moving picture theater at Third and Central avenues. The new building will cost about $10,000.

CHATTANOOGA THEATER SOLD.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made in Chattanooga, Tenn., of the sade by Stair & Havlin of the Bijou theater to John C. Twinam. The sale was brought about after several months' negotiations. Fred Sheperd, former manager of the theater, resigned following the sale. The theater changed hands for $37,000. Announcement was made later to the effect that Howell Graham, manager of the Quality Way shows in Chattanooga, would assume management of the Bijou. Arrangements have been made whereby the theater will be devoted to moving picture shows four days out of each week, and the other two days will be used for legitimate plays. A contract has been made for a $10,000 organ to be installed and used in connection with the moving pictures.

TRAVELING FREE SHOW ADVERTISES BREAD.

At Memphis, Tenn., considerable interest has been attracted by the free moving picture show of the Memphis Bread Company, which has been visiting various neighborhoods in the city for the past month. The bread concern has inaugurated an interesting and novel means of advertising its products, and is well satisfied with the results. An automobile truck has been rigged up like a circus wagon. This truck carries an Edison projection machine and a self-playing orchestreon.

CANDIDATE GIVES FREE SHOW AFTER SPEECH.

Reid's theater, a picture house of Morristown, Tenn., was recently used by Congressman Kenneth D. McKellar, aspirant for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, as an auditorium in which to deliver an address to the people of Morristown. At the conclusion of the address the audience was invited to remain seated and see moving pictures as the treat of the Congressman. This is a new form of stump speaking in Tennessee, and it is probable that hereafter politicians will have very little trouble in gaining good audiences if they arrange beforehand to give free pictures following their addresses. A large number of ladies were present at the theater. Mr. McKellar's talk lasted for about an hour and a half.

EXPECTS BIG THINGS FROM GRIFFITH FILM.

Howell Graham, manager of the Bijou of Chattanooga, Tenn., is expecting to handle almost capacity business at each of the five performances at which the "Birth of A Nation," the great story founded on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman." With the opening of the box office for the advance sale of seats at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2 a seat there was a good rush.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall is a member of one of the old Mississippi families. Mr. Griffith, personally, is the son of a brigadier general in the Confederate Army. Miriam Cooper is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence.

RECENT FEATURE HITS.

The Alcazar of Chattanooga, Tenn., recently showed Hazel Dawn and John Mason for the first three days in the week in "The Fatal Card," a remarkably strong feature by C. Haddon Chambers. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the same week Miss Pauline Frederick was seen at the Alcazar in a return engagement of the thrilling drama, "Zaza," a film which went well at its first showing in Chattanooga, as well as in every other city where it was shown.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Theada Bara, supported by William E. Shay, of the Fox Film Corporation, made an impressive hit at the Strand of Nashville, in her recent appearance in the Fox production, "Sin." Miss Bara is also booked to appear shortly at the same theater in the Fox production of "Carmen." Miss Bara has become very popular with Chattanoogians, who saw her in the big production "A Fool There Was."

The seven-reel Red Seal Selig production of "The Rosary" was recently played as a return engagement at the Crescent theater at Nashville, where it drew almost as well as at its initial booking.

The Edenland of Franklin, Tenn., is handling some high class feature plays just now which are going exceptionally well with the popular theater. A recent week's bill at the theater included "The Eagle's Mate," a five-reel drama, featuring Mary Pickford; "The House of Temperly," the Arthur Conan Doyle drama, filmed in five reels; "Checkers," a five-reel drama, featuring Thomas W. Ross; "Paid in Full," a five-reel drama, featuring Tully Marshall, William Farnum in the five-reel drama "Samson," and on Saturday a mixed bill.

Nashville theaters and moving picture lovers are considerably interested in the new Jesse L. Lasky production of "Carmen," in which Miss Geraldine Farrar made such a tremendous success in Boston. The picture was booked for the Alcazar at Chattanooga, on October 18, 19 and 20, where it drew nicely. It is understood that the picture will shortly be shown at one of the Nashville theaters, but it has not been announced as yet what theater will show the production, although it will probably be shown at the Fifth Avenue.

Runey's Camera Auto

Cincinnati Motion Picture Company's Cameraman Took Recent Races with Exceptional Apparatus—Has a Ford Specially Built for Camera Work and a Specially Adapted Camera.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT IS not strictly correct to say that the ubiquitous moving-picture cameraman, in search of material for the news weeklies, has crowded the old-fashioned news photographer off the map entirely, but it is true that the former is now on the job whenever there is anything exciting taking place, and he gets the cream of it. This was the case at the opening of the fall horse races at "fair Latonia," otherwise known as Death Valley, last week. There were several cameramen there, and inasmuch as the finish of the feature handicap was of the hair-raising variety, they got some extra good stuff.

Clarence Runey, chief of the camera staff of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., had some very interesting new equipment in service for the first time, including a camera, made especially for his use by the American Cinematograph Co., with which either moving pictures or straight snap-shot photographs can be made. Several other attachments of his own invention, for which patents are pending, make the machine one of the handiest ever manufactured. Moreover, the trip over was made in the new "movie car," built to the order of the company. It is a Ford, fitted with special reference to use in taking moving pictures of parades, races and other events in which the subject is moving along a given course. Mr. Runey believes the machine, which is equipped so that pictures may be taken from any of several different levels, will be especially useful for such purposes, and he is longing to try it out during the racing at Latonia, if the management and the horses will stand for it. He feels confident that he could keep up with a field running a mile in 1.39 or thereabouts, and at the same time get a good picture. However, he secured some good stuff at the opening and on several succeeding days, for use in one of the weeklies, and the special picture can wait.

KOLB BUYS SUBURBAN THEATER

Dr. George C. Kolb, of Cincinnati, one of the largest individual owners of moving-picture houses in this section, has added to the list of houses which he owns or controls, one of the most capacious suburban houses in Cincinnati. He purchased last week from J. S. Glassmeyer, owner of two-thirds of the stock in the Imperial, on McMicken avenue, his controlling interest in the house, which is valued at about $50,000, and has a seating capacity of about 1,000. The other houses owned by Dr. Kolb include the Woodward, the Norwood, the Fairview, the Empire, at New Albany, Ind., and the Orpheum, the new house which he is building at Huntington, W. Va., which is also to seat 1,000 people.

ONE DOES SEE BAD ENGLISH IN SOME LEADERS.

A new charge has been made against moving pictures by Cincinnati teachers, the indictment being brought forward at a meeting of a council of teachers of English held last week. A high school teacher asserted that the extent to which incorrect English is used in the "leaders" and conversational matter shown in moving pictures has become a serious matter, in view of the wide patronage accorded photoplay houses. A committee was appointed to confer with the national organization of teachers on the matter, with a view to making representations to manufacturers and producers of moving pictures and securing a greater degree of care in the matter indicated. Authorities interviewed on the point do not regard the point very seriously, pointing out that while much of the English used is of a colloquial nature, it is therefore neither better nor worse than that heard and read by most people, and that the remainder is unexceptional.

NEW WAR FILMS GO WELL.

A new set of war pictures taken on the various German fronts by Edwin F. Weigle, of the Chicago Tribune, held the boards at Music Hall all last week, and demonstrated that it is possible, under favorable conditions, to draw good-sized crowds to the big house, even with an admission charge of twenty-five cents, which is about the top figure in Cincinnati.

The pictures, it was announced, were taken under the direct auspices of the German and Austrian governments, and were exhibited with the provision that one-half of the receipts be donated to a fund for the benefit of crippled soldiers of the Teutonic allies. This provision, no doubt, helped the local attendance largely, as there is a large German population in Cincinnati.

SAMUEL WALLACH OVERCOME AT TELEPHONE.

The quick action of a telephone operator at the Havlin Hotel probably saved the life of Samuel Wallach, a well-known New York theatrical man who is handling the business end of the Chicago Tribune's German war pictures. Mr. Wallach did not hang up the receiver of his room telephone after a long-distance conversation with his wife in New York, the operator noticed, and she called the clerk's attention to the matter. When entrance was gained to the room, Mr. Wallach was found unconscious, where he had fallen, and prompt medical attention no doubt saved his life, following the sudden seizure which caused his collapse.

LOCAL METRO OFFICE PROBABLE.

Prospects are good for the establishment in Cincinnati of an office to handle Metro interests in this section, according to H. M. Berman, of Pittsburgh, who covers this territory. Mr. Berman was in the city last week, largely for the purpose of arranging for poster display space to advertise the Metro program, and stated that the desirability of having a local office in order to do business on an equal basis with other leading film concerns struck him strongly. Two of the biggest successes of recent Metro productions, according to reports from exhibitors to Mr. Berman, have been Ethel Barrymore in "The Last Judgment" and Emily Stephens in "The Soul of a Woman."

STRAND ASKS AUTOMOBILE PRIVILEGE.

That the Strand, the magnificent new moving-picture house in Akron, O., is getting the high-class business was demonstrated rather peculiarly last week, when eleven of the best-known people in the city were presented in police court on the charge of parking their automobiles without authority in the vicinity of the Strand. They were given a suspended fine of $2 and costs. As a result, the management of the Strand and of the Black Whale Inn, a popular restaurant have presented special requests to the city to allow parking at the Strand, and the city council will probably grant the request.

Competition and Business

Detroit Theaters Furnish Interesting Business Exhibit When Four Big Features, "Carmen," "Trilby," "Zaza," "Little Gypsy," Play in Competition—Good Attendance At All—"Carmen" Widely Advertised.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.), Correspondent of Moving Picture

THE week of October 10 was probably one of the best in the history of Detroit so far as big features were concerned. All of the four week-stand theaters had unusual attractions. At the Washington Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" was featured, while Dorothy Barnard in "The Little Gypsy" was at the Broadway-Strand, and Clara Kimball Young in "Trilby" was at the Majestic; then Pauline Frederick in "Zaza" was at the Liberty. With such a splendid assortment of pictures in competition, the question is naturally asked, "Which did the business?"

Investigation shows that all of the four theaters mentioned had excellent business, much better than usual, which goes to prove that competition is a good thing and that the better the picture the better the business. The Washington theater had the advantage of an unusual amount of free newspaper publicity. Miss Farrar sang at the Arcadia Auditorium on Monday evening, October 11, to 5,000 people, and many hundreds were turned away owing to the limited size of the hall. All of the papers published column after column about Miss Farrar previous to her coming, also many columns regarding her concert and even after she left. All of this publicity helped the picture. In this connection, it might also be stated that the Washington theater management spent considerably more money in advertising the picture than did the impresario who arranged for Miss Farrar's personal appearance here. M. Harlann Starr, manager of the Washington, too large display space in all of the newspapers the entire week, sent out many thousands of personal invitations, and used hundreds of window cards and tack cards.

"Trilby" at the Majestic played to about 25,000 people the first week and the engagement was extended a second week.

EFFECT OF BETTER PICTURES ON MUSIC.

Miss Bertha Sicklesteel, buyer of sheet music for Willard Bryant Co., 218 Woodward avenue, Detroit, told the World correspondent the other day that motion picture theaters were playing more semi-classic music than ever before and that the better grades of theaters were getting away from the ten-cent popular music. "Go into the moving picture theaters today and you can hear all of the best music," she said. "Better grade of pictures demand better music. The motion picture theaters are also hiring better musicians than they formerly did. In fact, many of Detroit's most talented musicians are playing in motion picture houses."

J. H. KUNSKY ON WORD "MOVIE."

John H. Kunsky has issued a four-page pamphlet captioned "Why the Word Movie." Mr. Kunsky is emphatically opposed to this word; he prefers the caption "motion picture or photoplay." He says the business has gone beyond the "movie" stage.

CLOCK FACE SHOWS TIME OF NEXT SHOW.

In front of the Liberty theater has been permanently placed a sign imitating the hands on a clock. There are two hands, and the purpose of the sign is to let the patrons know when the next show starts. As soon as a new show starts, the hands are arranged to tell when the next one will start. At the top of the sign is painted the words "Next Show." It is a great convenience to Liberty patrons who want to come in at the beginning of the performance.

BAY CITY'S STRAND LIKE A METROPOLITAN HOUSE.

L. H. Gardner, manager of the new Strand in Bay City, Mich., writes to our Detroit office: "Since we opened a few weeks ago we have played to capacity business and everyone is more than pleased with the house and the program. I really think, "without any joking," that this is one of the swellest theaters in a town of this size in the state. Everything is worked out in a metropolitan way. I am using the best features with a musical program of the highest caliber. One of my newest features is a solo, using a Victrola accompanied by a pipe organ. It goes over big."

The Strand was formerly the Jeffers theater and was operated with vaudeville. The transformation of the theater is so complete that it is scarcely recognizable as the old Jeffers. The interior represents the appearance of a Parisian garden. The aisle at the rear of the seats is made to resemble a beautiful garden walk, the carpet being in a black and white pattern and the walls latticed in white. An electric fountain on the stage makes a big improvement. The lights have the subdued effect and harmonize with the house decorations. The boxes have been decorated in rose color drapes.

SAFETY FIRST SOCIETY USES LOCAL THEATERS.

Safety-first principles will be taught Detroiters through the use of motion picture films. The Safety First Society of Greater Detroit is negotiating with local motion picture theaters for the use of safety first films.

A HISTORY OF DETROIT'S PICTURE BUSINESS.

The Detroit News in its issue of Oct. 7 devoted two first-page columns to the development of the motion picture industry in Detroit. Attention was called to the fact that one man who invested $3,000 originally in the business could today write a check based on his assets for $750,000. The article also stated that Detroit theaters were unusually beautiful. Mr. Al W. Weeks, dramatic editor of the Detroit News, several days previous to the article, phoned our Detroit correspondent and said: "Say, Smith, can't you furnish us the stuff for a good article on the moving picture industry in Detroit, how it has developed, etc?" The result was a front page two-column story.

DETROIT ITEMS.

Prudential Film.

The Prudential Film Corporation, Detroit, has been incorporated, capital stock $30,000; principal stockholders, Andrew H. Green, Jr., Simcoe Weingarden and William H. Goodfellow. Mr. Goodfellow was formerly connected with the Artone Film Company.

---

Fishman Comes to Detroit.

J. C. Fishman, special road representative for the Standard Film of Cleveland, has been transferred to the Detroit office. His future territory will be Michigan and Northwestern Ohio.

Mellon Believes in Second Runs.

Frank Mellon, manager of the Norwood theater, is another manager who says he can do more business with a picture after it has been run in the Majestic, Washington, Broadway-Strand and other large downtown houses. Mr. Mellon has experimented with first-run pictures, and finds that the features draw better at the Norwood, or, in fact, any outskirt house, after they have played other theaters.

A Universal Exhibitor.

C. M. Orth, proprietor of the Parkview theater, is the oldest customer that the Universal has in Detroit, and he has been the most steady. Mr. Orth started to buy Universal films when he first started in business. He has used them regularly ever since, never dropping Universal films a single week out of the year.

---

J. C. Ratty to Assist Shapiro.

J. C. Ratty has been appointed assistant to Manager A. I. Shapiro, manager of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Ratty was formerly special representative in the east. H. W. Black is traveling representative for the Fox in Michigan.

TRIANGLE FILMS IN ILLINOIS.

Service Booked by the Gaiety at Springfield, the Majestic at Kewanee and the Hippodrome at Peoria.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Triangle Film Corporation has landed contracts with two big Illinois houses. President W. W. Watts of the Vaudette Amusement Company, at Springfield, booked the service to start October 24 at the Gaiety theater with "The Lamb" and "My Valet." Manager W. J. West of the Majestic at Kewanee will give the first Triangle shows early in November. The service also has been booked by West for his West theater at Galesburg. He has been conducting a contest, offering $2.83 and $2 for the best 100-word articles on what the Triangle symbol stands for, referring aspirants to the Chicago papers. The Hippodrome at Peoria also will use Triangle films.

WHAT?

The Elgin board, which has been censoring pictures, wants to have its powers extended. The committee of the Woman's Mission Union and allied organizations, which is represented on the board, made its report as to photoplay conditions. This evoked a discussion as to the propriety of allowing bare-legged chorus girls at local theaters and bare-backed boys in the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool and it was decided to seek this wider field.

ILLINOIS SHOWMANSHIP.

The Gem at Edwardsville was one of the few Illinois houses to observe Columbus Day, October 12, showing Selig's three-reel feature, "The Coming of Columbus." "The Spoilers" was the opening attraction October 12 of the new Lyric theater at Winchester.

Friday is now bargain day at the Lyric theater and the Star theater in Lincoln. Patrons are given a coupon good for five cents at the other house any Friday afternoon. "The Master Hand" was popular enough at the Gaiety in Springfield for a rebooking. "Tom's Return," a local photoplay, was made at Cairo for exhibition at the Kimmell.

The Washington at Madison has installed a new electric orchestra. "Almost Mayor," a film made for the Elgin Courier, was shown by the Star theater in Elgin. Balcony seats in the New Grand at Aurora have been covered with old rose cloth.

The Columbia-Turner hall will start the 42 reels of the "Pearls of Pauline" November 3. Neighborly interest of its patrons led the Gem at Edwardsville to run "A Collinsville Romance." "The Dollar Mark" played a return engagement at the Princess in Canton. The Empress at Galesburg featured the Essanay "The Whirlpool," as Miss Bernice Hunt, of Galesburg, made her screen debut in that picture.

Manager Davis of the Photoshow at Mt. Sterling had Charles H. Dodge of the Dodge Theater Company, Keokuk, Ia., film the merchants' picnic in that city. The Maywood theater at Maywood has changed its name to the Maywood Hippodrome and added two acts of vaudeville to the pictures.

AGREED TO REPAIR PROJECTOR —ESCAPED WITH IT.

A man claiming to be a traveling representative of a large varnishing concern heard the machine at the Orpheum theater in Savanna was not in good working order. He went to Manager Loyal Law and after an investigation of the machine he told him to have it delivered to his room in the Cottage Inn, where they were boarding. He said when he had the repairs completed he would return the machine to the theater. Time passed and Mr. Law did not get his machine. An investigation was made and it was learned that the fellow and his female partner had left town. Their board and room bill was unpaid and the machine was also gone. Upon inquiring at the Savanna railroad stations, it was learned at one of them that a couple had left in the direction of Dubuque.

REPORT REELS STOLEN.

A press report from Brocton said: "Officers were here from Danville looking for G. D. Phillips, who, it is claimed, stole 16 reels of moving picture films from the Pathe exchange of that city one day last week. Phillips showed the films in the opera house here, but left for Casey.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SHOWS.

Alfred Hamburger has started a Saturday morning "Children's Hour" at his Strand theater at Evanston. The public library at Ottawa is experimenting with Saturday afternoon picture shows for children, using one story film and one travelog.

EXHIBITOR KNOCK WINS.

The injunction asked by J. F. Knock against the city of Lewistown has been granted by the circuit court and the city clerk was compelled to issue him a license to run a moving picture theater.

Months ago Knock purchased a brick building formerly used as a canning factory, fitted it up with opera chairs and later added a moving picture machine. He made application for a license, but before it was presented to the council an ordinance was passed which provided that electric theaters could not be operated except inside the fire limits. The show was opened after making the tender of the license fee to the city clerk, but Exhibitor Knock was promptly arrested for running without a license. He was tried and cleared by the court. This same thing happened again.

The last move was the filing of a petition in the circuit court asking for an injunction to prevent the city from interfering with his business. The court granted the injunction and Knock was advised to make a tender of the license fee, which he did, and the council authorized the clerk to take his money.

FILMS IN CHURCHES.

A Japan travelog was given by the First Congregational church at La Salle.

The First M. E. Church of Aurora used at a service a moving picture, showing the return of a prodigal son.

The fire marshal ordered more safety requirements for the booth used by Grace M. E. Church at Elgin.

"The Adventures of a Boy Scout" was shown by the Congregational church at Ottawa.

The Y. W. C. A. at Elgin plan to use educational moving pictures in the auditorium two days and evenings each week.

NEW INCORPORATIONS.

Secretary of State Stevenson at Springfield issued charters to the following: The Advertising Motion Picture Company of Chicago, capitalized at $2,000; incorporators: James D. Woley, Fred D. Silber and Martin J. Isaacs; the Baba Amusement Company of Chicago, $5,000 capital, incorporated by John Baba, John Tamraz and Joseph L. Toohey, and the Northwestern Amusement Company, also of Chicago, incorporated by Joseph S. Samuels, L. Goldstein and T. Behr, $2,500 capital.

EXPERIENCE FOR $3 A WEEK.

The Hoddy Photo Players Company advertised in a Joliet paper for fifty people to prepare for moving picture work. A reporter was offered a ten weeks' course of instruction for $3 per week. He failed to get satisfactory information in regard to studios and the photoplay experience of the "professor of expression." The business office of the newspaper "killed" the ad.

CHANGES IN ILLINOIS THEATERS.

H. R. Bartlett has sold the West Chicago theater at West Chicago to Peter Schuchman of Oak Park.

Following the merger of four houses in Streator as chronicled in The World, the Dawn theater has been closed except on Saturdays and Sundays.

Hoffman & Phillips have sold the Colonial theater at Delavan to W. S. Mhoon, of Oklahoma.

Stanford Remington is now in charge of the Gaiety theater at Kankakee. His mother, Mrs. Julia Remington, who has been manager, has gone to LaFayette, Ind., where she will have charge of the Victoria, a legitimate house.

Lynn Shope is now manager of the Star theater at Pecatonica.

Children As Patrons

Duluth School Authorities Give Out Interesting Figures Showing Attendance of School Pupils at Picture Shows—Some Astonishing Facts Brought Out—Only Fifteen Children Attended Every Day.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

ONLY fifteen children in Duluth attend picture shows seven times a week. Interesting figures are provided in a survey made by City Superintendent R. E. Denfield to ascertain the effect of moving picture shows on savings bank accounts and the morals of the school room. The figures follow: Number attending once each week, 2,621; number attending twice each week, 1,065; number attending three times a week, 188; number attending four times each week, 61; number attending five times each week, 16; number attending six times each week, 2; number attending seven times each week, 15; number attending occasionally, 1,044; number attending once per month, 248.

REWARD FOR DILLEHAY'S MURDERER.

The people of the village of Ellsworth have offered $500 reward for the capture of the murderer of Charles Dillehay, moving picture owner of Ellsworth, who was murdered and robbed of $300 in money after closing up his theater for the night. Two suspects have been arrested in connection with the case.

DULUTH ACCEPTS NON-POLITICAL CENSORSHIP.

There is no need of moving picture censorship in Duluth declared Commissioner of Public Safety Silberstein in an open letter to the Woman's Council. "I was told by several women," said the commissioner, "that the 'Isle of Regeneration,' shown at the Orpheum-Strand theater had many objectionable features which should have been eliminated, and that parts of a recent production at the Rex should also have come under the ban.

"I decided to investigate, so attended the performance at the Orpheum-Strand and came away satisfied that there was nothing offensive or suggestive shown on the screen."

Later he decided to co-operate with the National Board and lists of films run in Duluth will be checked against the lists of the national censors.

Minnesota Exhibitors—New Openings—Changes.

WISCONSIN NOTES.

Pathe List Aids Pastor.

"For want of the right kind of films" the machine of the First Congregational Church in Racine lay idle, recounts the pastor, Rev. J. T. Chynoweth. "I began to very greatly fear that it would have to be relegated to the region of the useless as far as our church work was concerned. Imagine my pleasure when the Pathe Freres sent out circulars saying that a committee of Y. M. C. A. secretaries in conjunction with their firm had outlined a series of five motion picture entertainments which were to be 'ideal'—ideal in the sense 'that, while all objectionable features had been eliminated, coarseness dropped and only art retained, yet they were to be so full of snap and humor as to surpass even in the estimation of the motion picture business the best program shown in the leading theaters.'

"Now I am well aware the Y. M. C. A. secretaries are no more infallible than are preachers or doctors or any other kind of men of high moral principles; and I have learned by bitter experience that 'passed by the National Board of Censorship' is no real evidence that the picture is worth showing. Yet such is my faith in the personnel of the International Y. M. C. A. secretaries' board that I should be very ready to accept these programs as pretty near the ideal."

PRAIRIE STATES NEWS LETTER.

Oskaloosa Managers Arrested on Sabbath Charge.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANAGERS of all the theaters in Oskaloosa were arrested on a charge of violating the ordinance against Sunday shows. All the defendants appeared in person and by attorneys pleaded not guilty. The question of the validity of the ordinance was raised by attorneys, and arguments presented as to the power of Mayor Harrold to enforce it, etc., but the mayor held the ordinance valid and enforced the same. A fine of $5 and costs was assessed against W. I. Neagle, manager of the Princess theater. The Neagle case will be made a test case, the outcome of the cases against the other defendants resting upon the determination of the test case in Judge Talbot's court.

Children Pay One Cent in Davenport.

Fred Strong has leased the opera house at Orient to W. A. Sprague and R. B. Farquhar.

Roth & Ramsey, of the Star theater, at Washington, had the big festival there filmed.

A teacher of folk dances appeared recently on the stage at the Princess theater at Iowa City in connection with the moving picture program.

The Garden, at Marion, showed pictures of the Marion fair.

"The Eternal City" was shown at both the Pastime and Lyric theaters in Maquoketa.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

Mutual Exchange Opens in Fargo.

THE Mutual Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, will open a film exchange in Fargo, N. D. It will be temporarily located at 11 Broadway until its building on Fifth street is completed. The new branch will be under the management of B. E. Reed, former manager of the Fargo Film Exchange. After moving into the new quarters, the branch will be under the supervision of the New York office.

To Open Shows in Small Towns.

Kenneth Gardner and John Robinson, of Dickinson, N. D., plan to open a number of houses. The first has been started at Halliday, N. D., L. J. Willis, of the Lyric, at Dickinson, assisting in the opening. Another will be opened at Golden Valley, and others in towns where electric light plants are established. Jerry Dryer succeeds Robinson at the Midget theater, in Dickinson.

Personal Notes.

So popular were the "bumper harvest" moving pictures at the exposition at Bismark, N. D., that many visitors asked the gateman where they could be found. Eight reels taken throughout the state were exhibited.

Roy Wheeler has sold his moving picture theater at Hayti, S. D., to Charles Olston, of Arlington.

A new opera house will be erected a Hurdsfield, N. D.

IN NEBRASKA.

Omaha Newspaper Starts a Picture Department.

THE Omaha-World-Herald has established a Sunday "Film Dramatic Art" page in charge of Ross H. Chamberlain. In announcing the new department the paper says: "Notice we say 'film dramatic art.' The World-Herald believes the day of the 'movie' is over. The filmed drama nowadays is superior, as everyone knows, to anything of the sort ever before attempted. We believe the motion picture theater has progressed to the point now where it is entitled to recognition just the same as the vaudeville or legitimate stage.

"Damaged Goods" Shown in Omaha.

The Mutual exchange, at Omaha, through C. W. Taylor, had a private showing of "Damaged Goods" at the Strand theater to a select group of ministers, doctors, lawyers and laymen.

A new opera house is under construction at Clarkson.

George Smith has purchased the Elite theater, at Stapleton, from E. L. Sayre, Jr.

Carl Tholen has sold his moving picture theater at Shelby to Bert Bull.

Chris Thompson has opened a new moving picture theater at Ravenna.

COURT FREES SUNDAY PATRON.

Michigan Supreme Court Gives Decision on Technicality.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

CONVICTION of Charles Dixon for violation of the statute in attending a motion picture show on Sunday has been reversed by the Supreme Court at Lansing. Dixon with thirty or forty others attended the theater at Belding a year ago. Dixon was arrested and a test case was agreed to. Reversal of the lower court's decision was ordered, according to the opinion, because prosecution was not begun under the proper act.

A DISINFECTANT FORMULA.

A Michigan exhibitor had been paying $8 a gallon for a disinfectant for his theater and at his request the local druggist procured the following formula from a pharmaceutical journal: Tymol, 1 ounce; oil of eucalyptus, 4 fluid ounces; oil of lavender, 4 fluid ounces; alcohol, 100 fluid ounces; water, q. s. ad., 1 gallon. Dissolve the thymol and the oils in the alcohol, add enough water to make one gallon, and filter if necessary.

The manufacturing cost is stated to be between $5 and $6 a gallon. By substituting for the thymol, lavender and eucalyptus some of the aromatic oils related to turpentine, and which possess deodorant and disinfectant properties, the cost of the preparation could be lessened materially.

MICHIGAN SHOWMANSHIP.

Pictures of different fire departments in the upper peninsula were used by the Majestic at Hubbell for a benefit to the fire department of that city. The Temple, at Jackson, now under the management of Robert De Noyelles, started its career with an all Griffith week, using "Home Sweet Home," "The Battle of the Sexes," "The Great Leap" and others. The Princess, at Buchanan, has made Monday and Friday feature nights. The Colonial, at Jackson, played a return engagement of "The Spoilers." During "Prosperity Week" in Kalamazoo, industrialogs were shown free at 10.30 o'clock every morning. The Majestic had the International Harvester Company's "The Dawn of Plenty" and the Elite films of the Ford motor plant and the celery fields near Kalamazoo.

J. H. Underwood bought the Virginia theater at Marcellus, following the disappearance of Edward Bergen, former manager of the showhouse. The theater has been managed by Mrs. Bergen since her husband left.

Kansas Keeps the Pieces

State Censor Orders All Eliminated Scenes Filed in His Office—Films Spoiled for Exhibition in Nearby States Where the Eliminations May Be Wanted by Everybody—Seems Pretty Tyrannous for Kansas.

Special from Kansas City News Service to Moving Picture World.

REV. W. D. ROSS, superintendent of Public Instruction, as such head of the Censorship Board of Kansas, has sprung a new one on the exchanges. His latest order is that all eliminations from films ordered by the censors must be filed in his office. Heretofore the exchanges were allowed to make the eliminations and "save the pieces." Now, however, if the Kansas censored films from which eliminations have been ordered are to be shown in any other state they will either have to be shown as the Kansas censors desired, with eliminations made, or the exchanges must get new copies.

CHANGES AT TENTH STREET THEATER.

E. J. Maloney is a new man in the moving picture business in Kansas City, although he is favorably known among the business men of the city. Mr. Maloney has leased the Tenth Street theater and has installed E. E. Ennesser as house manager. The house will run features exclusively, charging ten cents for adults and five cents for children. It has a three piece orchestra. The first attraction was Rose Coghlin in "The Sporting Duchess." The Standard Amusement company has no connection with the house, except that .J H. Gilday is doing the booking. The theater has been closed during the summer. F. G. Curth, formerly director of the Willis Wood orchestra, has charge of the music.

CAPT. BORDEN MANAGES PALACE

Captain Borden, house manager of the Tenth Street theater for many years, whose face and hearty greeting are familiar to thousands of patrons of Kansas City theaters is again in the harness. He is presiding at the Palace theater, near Ninth street, on Main.

KANSAS CITY JOTTINGS.

Business Notes—Exhibitors and Exchangemen—New Openings.

The Mutual is exciting a great deal of interest in "Damaged Goods" in Kansas City and vicinity and the prospects are that it will be placed in first class theaters and will draw big business.

A. S. Kelso, formely with the General of Kansas City, landed in the town October 9 as the first step toward placing the Geo. A. Dorsey Travel Pictures in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma for the United Photoplay Co. of Chicago.

A. W. Howell, auditor of the Metro, came to Kansas City last week for a few days. He had just been in Des Moines and was on his way to Chicago. The local books were in fine shape and he got through his work quickly and satisfactorily.

M. E. Williams, manager of the Metro exchange of Kansas City, was laid up for two days last week, but is again on the job.

Jake Schlank, who runs the Hip at Omaha, with Chas. Shartow, owner of the Farnham of Omaha, and Morris Miltenberg, who manages the Farnham, were visitors in Kansas City recently.

Kansas City must be getting a reputation as a picture show town. A few days ago an enterprising Omahan, Mr. Watts, was here looking for a location He has not been in the picture business before, but is evidently eager to get his feet wet. He called on some of the local managers.

The Triangle Co. has opened offices at Nineteenth and Main street with J. M. Cummings in charge. Mr. Cummings was formerly a Mutual manager in Canada.

P. J. Hall has established himself at 315 Gloyd building, and is handling the Tribune pictures and some Charlie Chaplin material.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

The Barrymore theater, Thirty-ninth and Summitt streets, is getting fine service from its $4,000 Wurlitzer, installed a few weeks ago. People are commenting as much on the music as they do on the pictures.

The Glory theater, Thirty-ninth and Troost avenue, is one of the first in Kansas City to get a Bartola orchestra. The Glory had been using a three and four piece orchestra. The new instrument will be installed shortly. The "first" Bartola in Kansas City is in the new theater started by J. H. Goldstein, on Grand avenue.

Mr. Fred Aiken, formerly district manager of the West for the General Film company, was a visitor in Kansas City October 12; and he met many good friends among the boys.

Mr. Charles W. Harden, manager of the Fox agency in Kansas City, has returned from a two days' visit in Salina, Kansas.

C. A. Jewell has sold the O. K. theater and airdome of Paola, Kansas, to Lloyd Long, of LaCygne, Kansas. Mr. Long is now in charge.

J. C. Stimes, of Perry, Kansas, has made arrangements to use a new building now being erected, for a picture show house, and perhaps a skating rink.

C. A. Dodge and Walter Pratt are the new managers of the Isis theater at Russell, Kansas.

F. E. Turvey has sold the Electric theater to C. F. Ferm, of Marion, who is now in charge.

Michigan Theater Changes.

E. B. Wixom has moved his moving picture theater in Bancroft to a new location.

Bert Silver purchased the interest of Bates & Bates in the Bates theater, at Greenville.

Short Notes.

Dreamland, at Cadillac, has booked "Lady Audley's Secret" for Nov. 8-9, "The Plunderer" for Nov. 15-16, and "Two Orphans" for Nov. 22-23.

The State Knights Templar parade and competition drill at Jackson was filmed by the Metro Film Company of Detroit.

C. F. Groves, of Greenville, drove a screwdriver through one of his hands while working on a moving picture machine, paralyzing four fingers.

Free open air moving pictures were so popular at Morrice the Boosters' Association plans to rent a hall and continue this form of entertainment indoors two nights a week all winter.

Grand Central Sold

St. Louis Old-Time Theater Changes Hands for First Time in Its History—Will Be Called the Central—A. T. Koch, the New Owner—Some Changes in the Property Will Be Made.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Grand Central theater, at Sixth and Market streets, has changed hands for the first time since its completion. The house is one of the oldest all-picture theaters in St. Lous, and was established by Wm. Sievers and managed by him in person until he erected the New Grand Central, at Grand and Lucas avenues, when Edward Stevison assumed the active management of the house. This theater is a very popular place, and has always maintained the Sievers standard of program of all pictures and the best and most artistic that can be had.

A. T. Koch, who has bought the Grand Central, while a native of St. Louis originally, has been absent for some time. He is well known in exhibition and producing circles, and has had much experience in managing theaters. Mr. Koch was manager of the "Elks," a big all feature house in Santa Fe, New Mexico, before coming to St. Louis. The new management will make some changes in the house, and will change the name of Grand Central to Central, which is a good idea, since to have the two Grand Central theaters was often times confusing to strangers in the city.

PAGEANT THEATER SOLD.

The Pageant theater property at 5851 Delmar boulevard was sold last week by the Halwe Investment company, to the Bushnell-Pommer Realty company for $107,500. The property consists of the Pageant theater, under lease to the Pageant Amusement company for a term of years, four stores and a garage, all under lease for a number of years, and fourteen bachelor apartment rooms with single bath, above the theater. The building is of fireproof construction, and the theater seats 1,500 persons. The district is a new and very beautiful one in the west end of the city, and is rapidly becoming a good business center.

A NEW $50,000 THEATER FOR ST. LOUIS AVENUE.

A moving picture theater to cost about $50,000 is to be erected this fall by Ferd Warner, on the north side of St. Louis avenue, just west of Grand avenue. The theater will have a seating capacity of 2,000. The adjoining lot of the same size is to be used for an airdome, which will be built next spring. This theater will be added to a chain of moving picture theaters under the management of Mr. Warner, who is now operating the North Grand, at Grand and Natural Bridge avenues, and the Queen, at Maffit and Marcus avenues. Mr. Warner also plans for other theaters to add to his chain in the near future.

THE CINDERELLA OPENING.

A capacity crowd attended the formal opening of the Cinderella theater, on Cherokee street and Iowa avenue, on October 9. The Cinderella is one of the most completely appointed show houses this side of New York, with its handsome furnishings, lounging and smoking rooms for men, rest rooms with maids in attendance for the ladies, and a nursery where mothers may leave their little ones while they take in the show.

The 6,000 lights in variegated colors made the place look a veritable fairyland on opening night, and the 2,500 seats were filled to capacity during the first performance, while the wide promenades were filled with people waiting for the second show.

Eugene Freund is owner of the Cinderella, and the program of all moving pictures will be changed daily, with many large features as special attractions. After the second performance the audience is invited to remain to dance for an hour or so.

MRS. J. W. CORNELIUS RETURNS.

Mrs. J. W. Cornelius, who with her husband operates the two Lyrics in St. Louis, one downtown and the other in the west end of the city, has just returned from Chicago, where she has been on a week's vacation, the first she has had in years, she says.

RESERVED SEATS.

Beginning October 17, the Pageant theater, 5851 Delmar boulevard, will issue regular reserved seat checks for all reserved seats. This is an innovation in the moving picture field for St. Louis. The seat system will be arranged just as are the seats in the regular first-class legitimate theaters.

BLANK CHECK TO PUT ON "CARMEN."

Miss Hattie B. Gooding, manager of most of the operatic engagements that come to St. Louis, has received a blank check with instructions to fill it out for whatever she needs to direct a moving picture of "Carmen" featuring Geraldine Farrar, for one week at the Princess, Grand and Olive streets, beginning October 30. A symphony orchestra will give the incidental music as arranged by Farrar herself.

INDIANA WORLD FILM ANNOUNCES THREE A WEEK.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

MANAGER W. A. RATZ of the Indianapolis office of the World Film corporation, the first large exchange to open an Indianapolis office, announces a change of one to two releases a week with a prospect of three-a-week after January 1. It has been necessary to enlarge the offices of the World company in Indianapolis, which are in the Willoughby building, one of the few buildings in the downtown district where films can be handled. The entire third floor of the building has been leased and will give about 3,500 feet of floor space. The World also is figuring on a projection room.

The Willoughby building is the film hub of Indianapolis, the World, Blache, Pathe and Empress exchanges all have their offices in it.

MONTGOMERY TO TRAVEL FOR MUTUAL.

G. N. Montgomery, who was recently sent to the Indianapolis office of the Mutual from New York, as a special representative to take charge of Mutual Masterpieces, has been appointed a traveling representative of the World in Indiana.

VANDAWALKER GOES TO WORLD FILM.

D. W. Vandawalker, Jr., who has been assistant to Robert Lieber, with the General Film company's Indianapolis office for the last three years, has been appointed assistant manager to Mr. Ratz of the World's Indianapolis office.

INDIANAPOLIS THEATER SOLD.

The Alhambra, located next the busiest corner of Indianapolis, one of the largest theaters running high class features, has been bought by S. V. Barton and Charles M. Olsen from Dickson and Talbott. The Alhambra is near Illinois and Washington streets, the transfer corner for all car lines, and charges fifteen cents admission, the only house in town to charge so much, though other houses have charged as high as seventy-five cents for photoplay productions.

The house is always filled. On Sunday standing room is at a premium. Paramount service, Big Four, Kleine-Edison, Fox and Metro films will be shown. Under the former management the Paramount service was run exclusively. The program will be changed every other day. Two new Power 6A machines have been installed and a five piece orchestra is to be added. There will be special instrumentation for picture purposes and particular attention given to the subject of appropriate music. A professional singer will be an added attraction each week.

BOOKING IN LITTLE TOWNS.

J. C. Conner, representing the North American Film, with headquarters in the Indianapolis Mutual office, says that he has placed "The Diamond from the Sky" in most every town in Indiana that boasts a picture show.

"I am now giving my attention to towns not on the map or connected with railroads," he said. "Last week I booked a small town in the northwestern part of the state by the name of Bringhurst, population 150. Passenger trains did not stop there, all express being handled by freight trains. In order to supply service in time for showing and without great loss on each shipment I made special arrangements with the Pennsylvania railroad to have the morning local passenger train take care of the shipment each week, which greatly pleased the managers of the house, Messrs. Lane and Platt."

LEAGUE HEADQUARTERS REDECORATED.

The headquarters of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at Indianapolis has taken on class. The offices in the Saks building have been redecorated, refurnished and remodeled. Partitions taken out, now throw it all into one large room. A state campaign has been started to get every exhibitor in the state to join the state association.

Among Indiana Picture Houses—Personal Notes—New Leases—Business Items.

The Moon theater, Vincennes, has booked the Mutual Masterpictures and the Gold Rooster plays.

The John W. Ruskin pictures are playing a return engagement at English's, Indianapolis. The wild animal life has a repeat pull that is filling the house.

The Crystal theater has entered into a contract with Superintendent of Schools C. E. Spaulding, Decatur, Ind., to show the Chicago Herald travelogues and photoplay films free twice a month.

F. E. Perryman has opened the Moneta theater, Sweetwater, Tenn., running continuous from three till eleven p. m., Saturdays from one p. m. to eleven p. m.

Allardt Brothers, of South Bend, Ind., operating about thirty theaters in the Allarde circuit, have taken a lease on the Boyer theater, Kendallville, Ind. The change became effective October 11. Ralph Rainier of South Bend will manage the Boyer.

Will Metcalf has leased the Tell City opera house, Tell City, and will run a picture program.

The Lyric, Royal Center, Ind., has contracted for General Film.

The Star theater has opened at Carmel, Ind. The management puts it squarely up to the Carmel folks to turn out if they want a jitney show in town.

The new Lyric at Vevay, Ind., opened to packed houses. The Vevay citizens have been getting boat shows in the past and have taken to the Lyric program with spirit.

The Gem theater, Hobart, is closed for repairs.

Manager Sehutte of the Cinema theater, Cynthiana, Ky., will go to Matoka, W. Va., to manage a house there.

The Michigan theater, Indianapolis, has been sold by E. P. Hunter to J. Warner. Mr. Hunter bought the house only recently from J. O. Bragg.

T. E. Chapman is the new manager at the Colonial theater, South Bend, Ind.

E. T. McGibben has sold his lease and equipment in the Princess theater, Huntingburg, Ind., to Roy E. Gaines, of Dale, Ind., who has taken charge. Mr. McGibben goes to Sullivan, Ind., to take charge of a house he has been operating there for some time.

A. L. Dunevant of Upland, Ind., is to open a house at Swayzee, Ind.

Charles Kruse has leased the Star theater, Whiting, Ind., from C. H. Miller.

The Lyric, Michigan City, Ind., has been remodeled and christened the Franklin theater. It opened October 16.

Fox and Keating, Terre Haute, have leased the Orpheum, Terre Haute, to Alfred J. and Hilton Schloss of Cincinnati.

Griffith and Sons, La Grange, Ind., have added 100 new chairs to their seating capacity.

Manager Bob Masslick of the Alcazar, New Castle, Ind., treated the newsboys of the city to a free show recently, running "Just Jim" for their benefit.

Manager Maurice Taub of the Gem, Indiana Harbor, Ind., married Miss Sophie Mansfield of Chicago without notifying his friends in advance.

A new house has been started in Decker, Ind.

Carothers and Carrier, Wolcottville, Ind., have installed a new Power's 6A machine. Shows are given every Wednesday and Saturday.

Morris Wohl of the Cosmo theater, Gary, Ind., is conducting a prize letter contest, $5, $2 and a month's pass, for the best answer to the theater's slogan, "best in everything."

J. E. Whitley, proprietor of the Colonial theater at Kokomo, Ind., is enlarging the seating capacity of his theater to take care of about fifty more people.

Mrs. S. C. Ager, proprietor of the Ideal theater at Kokomo, is running feature photoplays exclusively now and has increased the admission price to ten cents. "I can't get the kind of films my people want," she says, "at the old price of admission. Higher rentals mean higher prices at the ticket office."

Larue Disher, owner of the Electric theater, Lapel, Ind., has closed except Saturday night on account of the Tabernacle revival meetings.

The manager of the Edisonia, Johnson City, Tenn., signs all his advertising "Mickey, the Newsboy," and Mickey's copy has a flavor all its own.

The Family theater, Elkhart, Ind., is being remodeled. A new front and foyer decorated with marble, mosaic and mirrors will be built in, and the seating capacity increased with new and better seats put in service. The wall decorations are of unique design.

Charles Grogg has purchased a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A from G. A. Metcalfe of San Francisco for use in Grogg's theater, Bakersfield, Cal.

The Bakersfield opera house, Bakersfield, Cal., has been opened as a vaudeville and moving picture house by H. B. Vollmer. A Powers Cameragraph No. 6A has been installed.

The Best theater, formerly known as the Swastika, Sausalito, Cal., has been taken over by Mr. Elliott of the Princess theater and closed.

The Majestic at Tulare, Cal., is being enlarged and improved by its owner, M. Reardon. The roof is being raised and the capacity of the house increased.

Contracts have been let for alterations in the American theater on Market street to cost approximately $25,000. A fireproof balcony will be installed.

"Carmen" at Imperial

San Franciscans See Geraldine Farrar Film in Record-Breaking Numbers—Manager Partington Worked Hard to Make an Adequate Presentation and with Success—Music with the Film—May Extend Run.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Jesse L. Lasky production, "Carmen," featuring the incomparable Geraldine Farrar, is now being shown at the Imperial theater and the returns of the first few days indicate that a record-breaking engagement may be expected. Manager J. L. Partington has been working for weeks preparing for this event and the presentation of the picture is on a scale of magnificence never before attempted here. The services of six artists from the Lombardi Opera company were secured and a fifteen piece orchestra added to render selections from the opera. A special curtain was also made showing the entrance to the Plaza de Toros, Seville, Spain.

The program has been arranged in two parts, one consisting of selections from the opera by the orchestra and the singers, and the other consisting of the picturization of the operatic masterpiece. The musical numbers are rendered under the direction of Maestro Luigi Di Roccia and consist of an introduction by the orchestra and the "Habanera," the "Recitative," the "Toreador Song" and the "Duetto Finale" by the singers. These artists do not appear while the picture is being shown but "Carmen" music is played throughout the screen entertainment, this having been arranged by C. W. Melville, leader of the Imperial theater orchestra.

Manager Partington has arranged for a two week's run and it is likely that this will be extended. The prices are 10 and 20 cents for matinee performances, and 20, 30 and 50 cents for evenings, the latter being for box seats. The demand for reserved seats has been so great that arrangements have had to be made at the last moment to accommodate those desiring special accommodations. A very attractive souvenir program has been put out for this occasion, containing a portrait of Miss Farrar, a short sketch of her artistic success, and a brief history of the opera "Carmen."

JINKS ATTRACTS CROWD TO SCREEN CLUB.

A stage jinks and banquet was held in the rooms of the Screen Club on the night of October 9 and the greatest crowd ever gathered there made merry until a late hour. Many invited guests were present and not a few of these took advantage of the opportunity to join the organization; which is growing rapidly. President Sid Grauman acted as chairman of the evening, and following the attack upon the solids heaped upon the tables, called upon some of the city officials who were present for remarks. Dainty dancers from some of the leading theaters and from the Exposition were presented, together with other talent, and the entertainment was closed with the presentation of moving pictures, a Motiograph having been temporarily installed in the club room.

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY.

Articles of incorporation of the Pyramid Film have been filed and this concern will shortly engage in the production of comedy films in a studio to be fitted up at San Francisco. The capital stock of the new concern is placed at $100,000 and sufficient funds are now on hand to enable it to proceed with the work that has been outlined. Those interested in the enterprise are Walter V. Crone, of the Sierra Film Manufacturing company; Walter T. Stenberg and Willis H. O'Brien. Pending the fitting up of a studio offices will be maintained at 948 Market street.

PROGRESS THEATER REMODELED.

The work of remodeling the Progress theater on Fillmore street has been completed and the Kahn & Greenfield circuit has again opened this popular moving picture house. The interior of the theater has been redecorated and changed, making it virtually a new house, new seats have been put in, a huge electric sign installed in front, the lobby remodeled and a $10,000 organ added to the equipment. Many leading exchange men of the city, as well as prominent exhibitors, were on hand to witness the reopening of the house and some fine floral pieces were received, among these being handsome sets from the Fox Film corporation and the V-L-S-E exchange. Some choice vintage was uncorked to mark the re-christening of the theater and to launch it forth as a 10 cent house. The opening program included a Fox film featuring Theda Bara and a Chaplin comedy.

PHYSICIANS AND EXHIBITORS SEE "DAMAGED GOODS."

Through the courtesy of the Mutual Film the members of the San Francisco County Medical Society were recently enabled to witness an advance presentation of "Damaged Goods," adapted from Eugene Brieux's novel of that name. The films were shown at the German House and about one thousand professional men were present. Later another showing was made to enable exhibitors to see the production. The attraction is booked for an extended engagement in this city.

TRIANGLE RELEASES.

The San Francisco branch of the Triangle Film will start its regular releases on October 25, according to present plans. No film or advertising matter has arrived as yet, but everything is in shape to commence business as soon as the stock is received. A fireproof vault has been constructed in the basement under the direction of Manager C. M. Simmonds and an exhibition room is also located there where films may be shown to interested exhibitors. Considerable difficulty was experienced in securing quarters for the Seattle branch but these were finally arranged for and the entire Coast is now covered.

EXPOSITION CITY BRIEFS.

William Alexander, a special traveling representative of the Fox Film, visited the local offices of this concern last week and has since left for Seattle.

H. R. Rand, of Salt Lake City, is in San Francisco to enjoy the Exposition and to tour northern California, having brought his automobile here by train for this purpose.

Dan Wolf, a leading exhibitor of San Luis Obispo, Cal., was here recently and announced that he had closed his theater at Santa Maria.

The Port theater, Ellis and Fillmore streets, is to be given over shortly to moving pictures, after having been conducted for some time as a stock house.

Otto Roeser, who conducts the Railroad Avenue theater at 1111 Railroad avenue, has added a Powers Cameragraph to the equipment of the operating room.

Motion pictures taken of the Lincoln Highway are now being shown in the moving picture theater coaches of the Pennsylvania Railway system in the Transportation Palace at the Exposition. At the close of the Exposition these will be shown throughout the country to stimulate interest in this highway.

SPOKANE THEATER CLOSES.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

UNABLE to make a success of his new venture in opening the Spokane theater as an entirely motion picture house, J. W. Allender closed after running about two weeks and is showing the Cort Film production, "The Melting Pot," for the entire week at the Auditorium theater this week. He continues to operate the Lyric.

LIBERTY CLOSED THREE DAYS.

Due to the sudden death of Mrs. May Arkwright Hutton, who with her husband was one of the heavy stockholders of the Liberty Amusement company, the Liberty theater was closed three days. The theater reopened with Charlie Chaplin in "Shanghaied," which was held over. "A Desert Honeymoon," featuring Romaine Fielding, was also a part of the bill which was completed with the Pathe Exchange weekly.

WHO WILL SHOW TRIANGLE?

While there has been much talk among Spokane film exhibitors and some dickering with Triangle service men that service still goes begging in Spokane although reports are that it may go to the Liberty theater. Lee S. Forbes, manager of the Class A theater, contemplated taking over the service and running it at the American theater which was to have been rechristened the Knickerbocker but let his option slide last Friday.

Frank T. Bailey of the Liberty Amusement company and George H. Gombacher, his associate, spent a day in Seattle conferring with the northwestern Triangle manager. According to authoritative information it is Mr. Bailey's intention to bring the Triangle service to the Liberty and increase the price of admission to 25 cents. The deal has not been consummated at the time of this writing but some action is expected almost daily.

HITS IN SPOKANE.

Cyril Maude in "Peer Gynt" was shown to large audiences at the Clemmer. "The Fox Woman," with Seena Owen (Miss Signe Auen of Spokane), proved a great success at the Class A, as she played to capacity houses each day. William Farnham as hero in the "Wonderful Adventure" made a hit at the Casino. "The Darkening Trail," with Enid Markey in the leading role, drew well at the Lyric. "The Nigger," with William Farnum in the leading role, proved a profitable attraction at the Majestic.

SPOKANE PERSONALS.

Harry G. Robinson, organist at the Clemmer and Casino theaters for the past three and one-half years, has resigned to take up similar work in North Yakima.

Dorothy Murphy, a Spokane girl, well known in dancing circles and a relative of Theodore Roberts, Lasky photoplay star, has left for Los Angeles to find a place with the players in the Hollywood studios.

Mr. Alexander Gordon, formerly with the Exhibitors' Film of Seattle, has just returned from a Southern Oregon trip, booking the "Sins of the Parents," and reports good business. He has joined the forces of the Celebrated Players Features of Seattle and will make an extensive trip through Montana and Idaho.

Mr. E. J. Lipson, with the Celebrated Players Features, has just returned from a four weeks' trip, booking the "Melting Pot," and also reports the moving picture houses doing a nice business.

Joe Bloom of the Celebrated Players Features is leaving for San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Denver and Omaha on his way to New York picking up new features for the Celebrated Players Features of Seattle.

Mr. George Endert of the World Film is making extensive preparations, preparing for the big fall business in the World Film corporation's offices in Seattle. The World is enjoying good business in the Northwest. George Endert has been with the company about two years and is one of the most successful managers in the Northwest, well liked by exhibitors and always on the job.

OREGON MUSICIANS' UNION OPPRESSIVE.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND exhibitors have received notice that the Musicians' Union is contemplating revoking the minimum man law. This will, of course, revoke all the rulings that have gone with it and lay the matter again open to discussion and perhaps disagreement. All the controversies that have arisen seem to have been instigated by the unemployed union musicians and the exhibitors advise that the men in their employ are satisfied with their present agreement with the union.

It is proposed by the union to promulgate a rule whereby whenever two men are added to an orchestra, a deduction of 15 per cent. of the present orchestra's wage can be made. This, it is presumed, is to induce the employers of union music to employ some of the idle union men who now congregate at the union headquarters. The men now employed are not, of course, in favor of such a ruling and the theater managers granted them time to attend the union meetings and vote against the proposed measure.

CENSOR BOARD NEWS.

The September report of the Portland board of censors has been submitted to Mayor Albee and shows that 643 reels were viewed, 2 subjects condemned and eliminations ordered in 31 reels. The committee selected to investigate the feasibility of a central viewing place had not completed its report.

F. T. Richards was appointed a member of the censor board, Vice Mrs. Sol Hart, resigned, and "The Frank Case" films were the first viewed by him in his new capacity. Mr. Richards is assistant manager of the Troy Laundry of Portland and a man who has taken much interest in Portland's films. The resignation of Mrs. Hart was due to ill health which she has suffered for some time and and to increased social duties demanding her attention.

The present system of censoring pictures has required viewers to work Sundays in many instances and the board is trying to work out a plan whereby this Sunday work will be obviated.

NEW MUTUAL MANAGER.

With the resignation of C. J. Kerr as Portland, Oregon, branch manager for the Mutual Film, Portland has been honored with the presence of J. S. Woody, who has come from Seattle to fill Mr. Kerr's place and to supervise the northwest offices. Mr. Woody has been connected with the General Film for several years, traveling all territory west of Denver for the company's Pacific Coast sales department, now obsolete, and working out of Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Recently, however, Mr. Woody has filled the position of branch manager, serving a year each at Butte and Seattle.

Mr. Woody is assuming his duties at a time when there seems to be considerable stir among the Pacific Coast exchanges and many changes in film activity and he has taken hold of his work with a vigor that presages big business for the Portland Mutual.

INNOVATIONS.

Mr. James advises that he has booked Fox's "Carmen" to show at his house soon and has arranged special music for the feature.

E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia, has arranged something new in the line of lobby display to advertise "An Alien" to show at his house. He has decorated his entire lobby with roses of which Portland has a profusion even at this time of the year and has tinted all his lights rose colored. The interior of the house has also been decorated with real roses. The Columbia is included in Jensen and Von Herberg's Greater Theater company recently organized in Seattle.

ACROSS THE RIVER.

Chris Engleman, the genial proprietor of the Palace theater at Vancouver, Wash., braved the perils of a ferry trip across the Columbia the other day to tell the news from the Washington shore. Vancouver boasts of two houses, he says, and one of them sometimes shows ten reels for ten cents, occasionally substituting a few vaudeville acts for as many reels. But even at that, Mr. Engleman says, business could be a little better in both houses.

SOUTHERN OREGON NOTES.

The Joy theater, North Bend, Oregon, was destroyed by fire recently, the building being a total loss. Like a number of other business houses in North Bend, the theater was of frame construction and built on piling and was an easy prey for the fire which started in an adjoining mercantile establishment. Denny Hull, the owner, has moved his equipment into the Star theater building which has not been occupied for some time. He is preparing plans for a new house on the site of the old one and contemplates erecting a building seating 600.

At Coquelle, also in the Coos Bay country, the Grand theater, Hattie Bledsoe, owner, was burned to the ground a few weeks ago. Percy Leaver has opened the old Scenic theater there which is now the only house in the town.

C. C. Burgess has sold the Star theater, Medford, to E. L. Sherits.

Frank Hull, who controls a picture theater circuit in southern Oregon, is arranging to open a new house at Jacksonville. Mr. Hull, who is a newspaper man at Central Point, is a firm believer in advertising and his efforts in handling picture theaters has met with more than ordinary success.

CODE IN PORTLAND.

C. H. Code, representing "The Diamond From the Sky" in the Pacific Northwest States, is passing a few weeks in the territory served by the Portland office of the Mutual. Mr. Code recently returned from southern Oregon, where he has been looking over the territory and boosting his picture.

ALASKA MAN VISITOR.

Fred Simpson, who has large motion picture holdings in Juneau, Alaska, spent a few days in Portland recently en route to California and the Exposition. Business is good in Juneau as his long trip indicates. Mr. Simpson was formerly a resident of Portland.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

Ye scribe has been advised that M. Rosenberg of the Northwest Feature Film company is passing around the cigars these days having become the proud father of a bouncing baby girl. The sincerest felicitations are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Rosenberg.

A. H. McDonald of Eugene was a visitor in Portland en route to New York City via Seattle.

William Alexander, special representative for the Fox company, was a visitor in the city.

W. A. Ayers, recently of the Grand theater, Dallas, Oregon, has purchased the Sunnyside, Portland, from C. W. Batcheller.

EDISON.

THE PARSON'S BUTTON-MATCHER (Nov. 3).—The cast: Raymond McKee, Julian Reed, Bob Walker, Charles McGee and John Sturgeon.

The parson's congregation is made up of a mighty mean bunch. They blow in all their money on autos, and when the collection box comes around on Sundays, they heap it full of —buttons. That's enough to make any decent tramp mad—especially when he is the parson's protege. Besides, the parson's horse needs new harness, and the parson needs a barrel of other things, but the congregation won't even pay him his salary. "Revenge!" cries Algy, and off he goes to get even. The harness-maker is napping, and Algy spots a familiar button on his vest. Any good deetectuff knows that there is nothing like real evidence, and so Algy snips off a corner of the harness-maker's vest, and of course this is only incidental, takes a new set of harness.

Sunday comes, and the congregation gathers at the church. The shooting you hear comes from the congregation's autos. By heck! Vintage of '76. At church, Algy gets lots of clues. He sees all kinds of familiar buttons and so he gets busy. On his way home from church, he shows the congregation a thing or two. Algy's middle name is Speed, and so he drives the parson's horse in first, while he leaves the congregation behind, their cannons bursting, sputtering, spitting fire and falling apart by the wayside. Another hard day's work and Algy heads for home, but not empty-handed, for, with him he brings cows, chickens and most everything you can think of. When the rightful owners come to claim their goods, Algy just starts in to match buttons on their clothes with those he found in the collection box. Away they sneak, their heads bowed in shame, and no one has the nerve to claim a thing as his. Algy has shown them all. "Parson," says he, "if you ever need a button again why—you'll have to buy it."

FRIEND WILSON'S DAUGHTER (Special—Three Parts—Nov. 5).The cast: Gertrude McCoy, Robert Brower, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Lillian Devere, Lawrence White, Harold Meltzer and Bigelow Cooper.

Friend Wilson, a stern Quaker, decides that his daughter, Phoebe, shall become the bride of his friend, Jacob Haas. Phoebe, however, has given her heart to Burke Richmond, General Lafayette's aide, and in defiance of her father, accepts his attentions while she rejects those of Haas. The wily Haas, known to all as a merchant, is really a spy in the employ of the English King. Burke Richmond is commissioned to carry important messages from Washington, at his headquarters, to Lafayette. While Burke stops on his return to speak to Phoebe, Haas secures the envelope containing the important message and substitutes another in its place. Upon opening the envelope, the contents cause Lafayette to suspect Burke of being a traitor. He is arrested, tried and sentenced to be shot. Phoebe, however, maintains her belief in Burke's innocence. Her loyalty to him compels her to defy her father and leave his house.

She goes to Lafayette to plead for Burke. While awaiting him at his headquarters, Haas enters, and under pretence of taking her to see the prisoner, leads her to his own home. His ugly advances cause her to lock herself in his bedroom. Here Haas leaves her while he hurries to call Friend Wilson. Lafayette, meanwhile, has become suspicious of Haas and so goes forth to search his house. He releases Phoebe from the room and a search of the house reveals sufficient evidence to support his suspicions. On his return home with Friend Wilson, Haas is confronted with the damaging evidence and arrested. Burke Richmond is liberated, returned to rank in the army, and once more united with Phoebe, firm, true, loving unto the end. In face of such circumstances, what else can Friend Wilson do but see the error of his ways and agree to the union of the young people?

WAIFS OF THE SEA (Nov. 6).—The cast: Richard Tucker, Grace Williams, James Harris, Ralph Williams, John Sturgeon, William Wadsworth, Charles Sutton and Florence Stover..

Hiram and Martin, two whole-hearted fishermen, bring in a raft which they find being tossed about by the waves. On it are two little babes and the body of a dead man. Under pretense of aiding in the rescue, Mark Vale, a beach comber, steals some papers from the body of the man. That night, however, he is killed by a bolt of lightning and the secret of his papers is lost. On arriving home with the rescued babies, Hiram and Martin decide to adopt them, Hiram taking the boy, and Martin the girl. "Let's call them Jack and Jill," they say, and so they are christened.

Twenty years pass by, and with these years, grows up an ardent love between Jack and Jill. Luke Vale, the son of Mark, forces his attentions upon Jill, but is spurned and so, takes to drink. Reeling about the cabin one day, he dislodges a loose stone in the chimney and finds the papers, stolen by his father, twenty years ago. "You cannot marry Jack," he screams to Jill, "for you are brother and sister." Jack rushes to Luke's cabin to demand proof of his statement. A fierce fight ensues, and again this fateful stone is loosened from its place in the chimney.

Attracted by the sounds of the struggle, the village folk rush to the cabin. The old priest reads the stolen papers, and denounces the villainous Luke. Jack and Jill were merely children of friends, returning home on the same luckless ship. They are now free to follow the dictates of their hearts, and we see them, seated on the beach planning the future, dreaming of the days to be.

LUBIN.

THE SACRED BRACELET (Nov. 1).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Adda Gleason.

John Gault of the 25th Company U. S. Marine Corps meets his sweetheart, Helen, the daughter of Colonel Rand, the commanding officer, and presents her with a bracelet. This is observed by Pedro Ramno, a Filipino outcast. Waiting until Helen is left alone he attacks her, wrests the bracelet off her wrist and flees right into the arms of several approaching marines. After Helen identifies Pedro as her assailant, he is taken before the commanding officer and there he discloses the following history of the bracelet.

Pedro's mother was dying and having no money with which to buy food and medicine he yielded to temptation and stole the very same bracelet from the arm of the image of the Virgin Mary. Meeting John Gault on the way, he finally persuades him to purchase the bracelet and with the money in his pocket he hastens to his mother's side but too late, for she is dead. Overcome with remorse he confesses the theft to the priest, who excommunicates Pedro from the church.

After hearing Pedro's story, Helen returns the bracelet to Ramon who replaces it on the arm of the Virgin. He is then taken back into the fold of the church, and is forgiven by Father Felipe.

UP AGAINST IT (Nov. 2).—The cast: D. L. Don, George Egan.

Wilson and Barrett, a small time vaudeville team, are out of work and up against it. Their landlady patient for three weeks demands payment or her rooms. The boys pack their grips preparatory to leaving, but friend landlady decrees that their baggage must be left as security. A great idea strikes the mind of Wilson and Barrett—how millions can be made and the board bill jumped. They scheme to go to Hankeville, open a barber shop, one to be the manicure and the other the French barber.

Wilson, dressed as the manicurist, steals from the house, rings the bell and applies to the junior boarding house mistress for room and board. "She" is invited to inspect the rooms and occupies the landlady's attention while Barrett slunking exits with their grip.

The landlady occupied in the kitchen, Wilson answers the bell, the applicant for lodging mistakes Wilson for the landlady. He improves the error and gets some easy money. The room accepted the "two weeks in advance money" is gathered in by Wilson, who hurries to meet Barrett at the railroad station. They hit Hankeville, open their barber shop with the ill-gotten "room advance" and do a thriving business. Soon, however, my-lady "Wilson" wrecks too many loyal husband's hearts and unceremoniously the shop is wrecked, and the vaudeville team of "Wilson and Barrett" mysteriously disappears.

A WESTERN GOVERNOR'S HUMANITY (Special—Three Parts—Nov. 3).—The cast: Present Governor of Arizona, W. P. Hunt, Romaine Fielding, Jack Lawton, Audell Higgins, Roscoe Karnes, Elsie Burns, Vinnie Burns, Pinky Bell, Ludwig Ilfield, Eleanor Mason, George Loebe, Noble Johnson, Arthur Minium, Monroe Johnson, Henry Russell.

Upon a mighty desert pioneers constantly toiled, clearing the ground and erecting homes, planting seed and conserving their little stream of water; and out of their efforts was born a fertile valley, and God's handiwork stands today as a monument represented by the children of Arizona. Then Statehood came and their Governor built a stupendous dam, which backed up the waters of plenty, that the children of the coming ages might look upon this great work and with faces raised toward heaven, devoutly thank him who had made all this possible. We see Governor W. P. Hunt, the present governor of Arizona, seated at his desk, ruling wisely and charitably. The sheriff enters, speaks to the Executive, and with a hearty laugh bids him goodbye. Coming to his own office, he finds his deputies much perturbed that the horse thieves, with White-Mask, their leader, have again stolen and escaped. The sheriff determines to permit no one excepting his faithful deputy to know of the still-hunt which he takes up after this notorious gang.

They finally come upon the rustler's camp. Monte Red, one of the rustlers, shoots and kills the deputy. The sheriff attacks them, getting the drop on the body of the men, who are assisted by their outlaw leader, the Mask. The sheriff calls the leader to his side, and drawing the mask from over his head, discovers it to be his own son. Robert, the son, is accused by Monte Red of the shooting of the deputy. He is tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The boy's mother, his sister, Beth, and his baby sister, Pinky, in turn visit the Governor, pleading for the life of the one they hold most dear. The Governor, gently but firmly resists the mother's heart-breaking words, also those of the big sister Beth, but when the little Baby Pinky calls upon him, and in her innocence throws out to the Governor the spiritual warning of truth, this man of the people listens with kindly attitude, and as the innocent child goes on with her chatter, telling of her "Bruvver Bobbie," the Governor calls his car, and with the child hastens to the penitentiary, arriving just in time to save the son who is being hanged by the sheriff, the father's hand. He reprieves the boy and five minutes later a deputy sheriff rides madly into the jail yard, and delivers to the sheriff a signed confession of Monte Red. Thus "A Western Governor's Humanity" proved the saving of an innocent life, and in the after days, rounded by charity and truth, he gave unto his people health, happiness and success.

ing place of his spies at the laboratory of Beltros, the inventor of a wonderful new ray. Beltros's daughter, Selene, tells Nami she will get the treaty, as the British Ambassador's secretary, Stream, is her abject slave. She thereupon visits Stream at the Embassy, and learns the combination of the safe by looking in a hand Mirror as Stream turns the combination.

That night the Ambassador gives a reception, and Robert is present to see that all goes well. Selene arouses his suspicions, and he watches her closely. Stealing into the office, she opens the safe, and has the treaty in hand when Robert enters. There is a short struggle, and she throws the treaty out of the window to her confederates. Robert rushes out after them. He loses trail near Myra's home. Myra tells him of having seen the men enter a house up the street. He is about to follow, but she makes the suggestion that they watch from her window through a pair of field glasses. The plan works until the spies pull down the shades of their windows. Then Robert determines to get into their house. Myra tells him that she will watch, and if he gets in any danger to signal from the window. Robert is captured by the spies.

Nami consults a moment with the old chemist, Robert is tied to a post in the laboratory, and the powerful ray is turned on his eyes. Nami tells the captive the ray will blind him within an hour, and that he can never identify them. The spies then leave Robert and start to pack in the next room. Robert manages to free one hand, is barely able to reach the shade, and soon Myra sees him bound to the post.. He has an idea—"Perhaps she can read my lips!" And thanks to the powerful light shining on his face, Myra is able to read his message through the field glasses. She notifies the British Embassy, and Selene is caught as she is about to board a train for New York. Myra herself leads the police to the spies' house, where Robert is rescued after a strenuous fight. The treaty is safe and all danger of war is averted.

THE URCHIN (Nov. 5).—The cast: Francis Joyner, Brooks McCloskey, Edith Ritchie, Eleanor Dunn, Charles Ebbinger, Richard Wangemann, Jack Lamb.

The urchin lives in a poverty-stricken attic with his old grandfather, a musician. The boy is passionately fond of the old man's violin and has become a student of it after the old man's heart. Unable to get money or food, the old man finds they are facing starvation. The boy learns the truth and gets the violin away without his grandfather's knowledge. He sells it for little or nothing and buys bread. Upon his return he finds it is too late; his grandfather is dead. He manages to sell back the bread, though his empty stomach demands food, and buys back the violin from the kind-hearted dealer. He makes a few pennies by playing in the streets and falls asleep on a park bench. A tramp steals the violin and when the boy awakes he tells his troubles to a policeman, who laughs and sends him on his way unbelieving.

Broken-hearted, he uses his few pennies to buy newspapers and starts out to make a living. The tramp sells the violin to a little girl, who, with her mother, is just coming away from the conservatory of music. Later the little girl's auto runs down the urchin and he is taken to her home. There recovery seems slight because the boy has lost his desire to live. The little girl taking her violin lesson awakens the boy's consciousness to things around him. He recognizes the tones of his old violin. The lesson over, he crawls downstairs and getting his beloved violin in his arms, starts playing. The others return and his story is told. A happy future opens before him, now that life again holds out alluring arms, and the prospect of a real home is outweighed only by the return of his old violin

THE CELLAR SPY (Nov. 6)—The cast: Billie Reeves, Mae Hotely, Billy Potter, Ferd O'Beck, Patsy DeForest, Nancy Barring, Flora Williams, Dorothy Foy.

When a man gets jealous of a bill collector he is jealous-minded indeed; but Bill was even worse than that. The worst of it was that he could never verify his suspicions. Try as he would, he could not get the least evidence, but an alert detective agency added a fine line of periscopes to its complete stock of dictagraphs, and Bill bought one of the best of each. Then he had them connected to the coal bin in the cellar, laid in a stock of provisions and some water and prepared to make the hackneyed trip out of town that really means around the block and back again.

But Mrs. Bill and her neighbors discovered the scheme. They salted the water and the food and then borrowed men's clothes and staged a very brisk little drama that ended in a murder of one rival by another. Then they all stole away, leaving Bill to bitter thoughts and salted commissary until the following afternoon, when he was glad to get out even though it was to face a charge of murder—and they found the gun on him, too. He never was so glad to see his wife in all his life.

LETTERS

TO

No. 3

New York City, Oct. 21, 1915.

My Dear Bill:

Glad to hear that you are finding business good. Keep on the job and continue to pay attention to your knitting, and, I'll venture, you'll always find picture patronage coming your way—for the picture business is well worth while from the exhibitor's point of view, calamity howlers to the contrary notwithstanding.

I think that the increase of which you wrote me may be ascribed to some extent at least to the new RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN which you have installed.

Don't know what screen you were using before, but I do know that whatever it was it wasn't as good as the RADIUM—for "there ain't no such animal."

I knew the installation would be easy for you, as it has been my experience that the Radium people are always thinking of their customers. You were probably surprised to find that the California Redwood Frame and Stretching Device were included with the screen—and without any extra cost. I've been hooked on that old frame and stretching device swindle myself—but RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, INC., don't do business that way.

From your enthusiastic letter concerning the screen, am sure that you will do just what I have been doing for a long time, namely, boost the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN at every opportunity.

Always glad to hear from you. Keep me posted.

Yours,
DAD.

BIOGRAPH.

BETWEEN FATHER AND SON (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 2).—The cast: Jack Drumeir, Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Herbert Barrington, Gretchen Hartman, Laura La Varnie, Edward Cecil, Gus Pixley and W. J. Butler.

Dan McGrane, contractor, leader of the political ring, holds his position by hard methods. The reform party, headed by Banker Blake, tries in vain to defeat him. McGrane loves a fight, whether with his hands or with the edged tools of political chicanery. The one soft spot in his heart is occupied by his son, Tom, and by Mary Malone, his ward. Jenkins, leader of the opposition, tempts Alderman Dobbs, who is a henchman of McGrane, to throw the latter at the next meeting of the board by pretending to be sick. This, it is figured, will kill a certain franchise and queer McGrane with the traction people. But on the appointed day McGrane, learning that Dobbs is not at his post, visits the latter and, after urging him to get out of bed, calls an ambulance. Dobbs is carried to the city hall on a stretcher and made to vote.

Unable to beat McGrane at his own game, the opposition tries to put his son against him. This is achieved by Ada Blake, wife of the banker, who infatuates Tom and plays into her husband's hands. Tom has saved her life when on the golf course, she unwittingly approached too near a blast set by his father's men. On being appointed reform candidate, Tom is disowned by his father. Blake gives him a job in the bank as his private secretary.

On the night of the election Tom's victory is celebrated at Blake's home. Ada Blake has been losing heavily at bridge, and one Mrs. DeLong threatens to tell her husband unless she pays up. Tom, on learning of this, offers to get the money from the bank. His father chances to see him making this untimely visit, and follows. A burglar enters the bank and, after holding Tom up, backs into the vault. With the remark that his can of nitro-glycerine is now useless, he sets the can on the floor. At this moment McGrane enters, pistol in hand. The burglar points his gun at the can and threatens to blow all hands into eternity with the explosive. McGrane fires; the burglar fulfils his threat and is killed by the explosion. McGrane places in his dead hand the money Tom had stolen. Then he hustles Tom home. Under Mary's ministrations the two are reconciled.

DORA THORNE (Special—Four Parts—Nov. 3).—The cast: Lionel Barrymore, William Russell, Millicent Evans, Thomas Jefferson, Isabel Rae, Charles H. Mailes, A. C. Marston, Betty Gray, Marie Newton, Alan Hale and William Jefferson.

Dora Thorne, daughter of the lodge keeper at Earlescourt, the ancestral estate of Lord Earle, is sought in marriage by Farmer Holt. This forces the hand of young Ronald, heir to the title, who has secretly engaged himself to Dora. He tells his parents of his love for the girl, and they at once take steps to remove her from his path. She is secretly spirited away by her father, and Valentine Charteris, a girl of Ronald's class, is brought to Earlescourt to divert him. But his love for Dora is genuine, and, having discovered her hiding place, he goes to her, waves away her scruples and marries her. She is to remain in seclusion until he comes for her; meanwhile he returns home and confides in Valentine. She urges him to tell his parents, and at length he confesses the situation to his enraged father. Told to choose between his family and this unfortunate alliance, he turns back upon Earlescourt and goes abroad with Dora.

In Italy he pursues his art studies and wins a little success. Two girl children are born to the happy couple, and a photograph of the twins is sent to Earlescourt, but fails to evoke a response from the stern old lord. Commissioned to paint an allegorical picture for the Prince Borgezi, Ronald wishes to use Dora as a model, but she is too engrossed in the babies to appreciate what he wants of her. This is the first rift in the lute of their happiness. At a reception given by the prince, Dora with her country manners is entirely out of place, and Ronald begins to realize his matrimonial blunder. Working on the picture, he paints from memory Valentine Charteris. She is visiting in Italy, and her resemblance to the painting is remarked. This leads to a renewal of acquaintance with Ronald. Dora becomes bitterly jealous and, after a scene in the Borgezi grounds, whither she follows her husband to a meeting with Valentine, determines to leave him. She goes, taking the twins. Lady Earle visits her and provides for the children in secret.

Years pass, and Beatrice and Lillian reach womanhood. Beatrice is betrothed to Hugh Fernely, a sailor lad. The old lord dies lamenting his harsh treatment of Ronald, and Lady Earle brings Dora and the girls to Earlescourt. Ronald, notified that he is heir to the estates, returns home, but refuses to be reconciled with Dora. Young Lord Airlie pays marked attention to Beatrice, and she begins to forget Hugh Fernely. The latter returns from a voyage and is told by Lillian that Beatrice will never see him again. He pleads for a last interview, and Beatrice, stung by his scorn, is drowned in the lake in an effort to escape him. Over their dead child Ronald and Dora are reconciled at last.

THE PASSING STORM (Nov. 4).—The cast: Alan Hale, Claire McDowell, Zoe Bech, Charles Bennett and Vola Smith.

The young wife of the village blacksmith is discontented, notwithstanding that she has a good home, a beautiful child, and the love of her husband. Chance brings her the opportunity to seek the career for which she has secretly yearned. A theatrical manager, passing through the village, stops at her home to telephone his office. Learning his profession, she implores him to give her a chance on the stage, and he tells her to call at his office. She goes, leaving no trace of her whereabouts. Heartbroken, her husband moves to another place and begins life anew. A young girl of the neighborhood takes a fancy to his child, and the intimacy thus begun ripens into love. Then, on a night of storm, a strange circumstance occurs. The theatrical troupe, on its way to the West, passes through the town on a train. The wife, taken ill, is put off the train in care of the local doctor. Deranged by fever, she escapes and wanders through the storm.

Fate brings her, like a homing bird, to the threshold of her husband's door. He rescues her from the elements and, having put her to bed, enlists the aid of his neighbor. In the morning, the wife, her brain cleared, seeing the girl's intimacy in the house, believes her husband has married again, and attempts to steal away; for guiltily she feels that the least she can do is to leave him alone in his newfound happiness. But her flight is discovered, and she is followed. The trail leads to a precipice, at the foot of which the husband finds his wife's mangled body. In his grief it is the girl who comforts him again, as in the past she has made him forget his sorrows.

THE MUSKETEERS OF PIG ALLEY (Nov. 5—Biograph Reissue No. 22).—The cast: Lillian Gish, Walter Miller, Elmer Booth, Lionel Barrymore, Jack Dillon, Alfred Paget, Robert Harron, Harry Carey and W. C. Robinson.

On her way to the sweatshop the girl is accosted by the gang leader, but will have nothing to do with him. Returning home, she finds that death has released her mother from long illness. The young musician whom she loves is too poor to marry her, and goes away to better his fortunes. A girl friend takes the little lady to a ball, where a gangster attempts to dope her, but is foiled by the rival gang leader.

This precipitates the long-impending gang war, which culminates in a raid. The musician, returning home flushed with triumph, is blackjacked by the gang leader, who robs him and later, to avoid arrest, returns the money after the girl has lied to save him from the police. This remarkable picture of the underworld includes every phase of the elemental life of a great city, and has never been equaled for its mastery of detail.

SHOO FLY (Chapter 2 of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center"—Two Parts—Oct. 25).—The cast: Martin Kinney, Fred Carufel, William Hutchison, John Lancaster, Lee Morris, Sidney Smith, Ralph McComas, Martha Mattox and Lyllian Brown Leighton.

When Prof. Trapp and his wife arrive in Bloom Center to sell fly traps and fly swatters to the people, a "fly-swatting" campaign is immediately decided upon. Prof. Trapp and his wife give a stereopticon entertainment in Melodeon Hall, showing the dangers of the common house fly. It is decided that prizes be awarded to the catchers of most flies. Jim Billings, commercial traveler, arrives in Bloom Center and suffering from an attack of indigestion, he is given paris green by Phil Pickle, the druggist, through mistake.

The judges in the "fly-swatting" campaign leave their work and rush to Jim Billings' aid. While they are reviving him, the clerk dumps all the dead flies into a garbage can. Jim Billings recovering, kills three flies and places them in a fly trap. When he encounters the judges, his three flies are three more than anyone else has, and he captures all the prizes.

THE RACE FOR A GOLD MINE (Oct. 26).—The cast: Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan and Pat Chrisman.

John Meade is discouraged at not finding paydirt on his claim and puts up a sign offering it for sale. Griner, a Mexican, thinks the claim might be valuable, decides to do some secret prospecting on it. He has an eye on Nell, Meade's daughter. Tom Cummins, Nell's sweeth [illegible] lowing a hunting trip, his da [illegible] to the cabin with the game, while Foster prepares a bear trap. As he is so engaged he is attacked by a large bear and is saved by the opportune appearance of Tom Howard, a hunter, who shoots and kills the animal. However, as a result of his wounds, Foster dies.

Months later May Foster has taken her father's place as a trapper. She often meets Tom Howard, the hunter, who loves her, but she refuses to make Howard happy. Tom Howard, in the woods, finds the tracks of a mountain lion. He encounters the beast, but his rifle fails to explode. May just then approaches and sees Tom and the lion struggling. She rushes to his assistance, but falls into a bear trap. Tom kills the lion and finally appears at Mrs. Foster's home. Mrs. Foster tells him that May has strangely disappeared. They start a search for the girl and Tom finds her just in time to prevent her death from an attack of a gigantic bear. In gratitude May gives him her love.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

THE MORNING AFTER (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 27).—Henry Pike expects a visit from Bill Lane—old friends of bachelor days. They have not seen each other since the chiming of the wedding bells. Pike's frequent visits to the "club" have aroused the suspicions of his wife, and, seeing the error of his ways, he decides to lie no more to wifey. Mrs. Lane—Bill's wife—is awaiting the return of her husband from a trip out West and is delighted when she receives a beautiful new umbrella from him. She and her brother decide to go out to a show which is no sooner decided than done, Mrs. Lane parading her new umbrella.

This night Pike really had an engagement at the club and finally prevailed upon his wife to let him go, after promising to be home early. But the best-laid promises oft gang astray, although, in this instance, one could hardly blame Pike. When about to say goodnight to his pals and return to his home, he spied a man who owed him some money for a long, long time walking down the street. So away went Pike after him, following him into the same cabaret where Mrs. Lane and her brother were partaking of an after-theater bite.

Pike duns the man for the money he owes him. "Wait one moment," replies the man, "while I get a blank check." Pike waits and waits and waits, but the man does not return. In the meantime, Mrs. Lane is much in the same fix as Pike. Her brother recognized the same man as owing him money and followed him out of the restaurant, where the two get into a fisticuff and the police station.

MINA.

KIDDING THE GOATS (Oct. 28).—Harry (one goat), is in love with Rena, but she won't let him butt in, though pa and ma favor the match. She is partial to Russ (another goat).

A reward is out for the capture of a certain notorious rascal and Harry decides to make use of the fact. He bribes a village loafer to assume the garb of a desperado and hold up Russ and Rena while they are out buggy riding. He then comes along, saves the girl and puts Russ' cowardice to shame.

Later Russ learns that he was the goat and decides to turn the tables. The village has heard of Harry's trick on Russ and scare Russ by holding him up, posing as a bunch of masked bandits. Then when Harry is sufficiently frightened, Russ makes goats of the whole bunch by coming on the scene disguised and waving a revolver. All think he is the real highwayman and run for all they're worth. But he whispers a word to Rena, who remains behind—and all ends in a happy lover's kiss.

JOKER.

A MILLIONAIRE FOR A MINUTE (Oct. 16).—The cast: Gale Henry, Max Asher, Wm. Franey, Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock.

Jane, a country school teacher, likes Zeke, who is madly in love with her. Zeke's uncle, an Egyptologist, dies and he suddenly hears herits a fortune in India. Holdandgrab hears of it, and with his female crook accomplice, decides to get the fortune. The female accomplice comes to the village. She gets Zeke's attention and grieves poor Jane. Zeke gives a tango tea party in honor of the arrival of the Hindu with his fortune. The Hindu arrives and gives Zeke a box, his fortune. He opens and discovers an old bronze ring. The guests decide to go, but Zeke begs the female accomplice not to desert him. She laughs and presents Holdandgrab as her husband.

Jane arrives at the party as the guests are leaving. She enters to find Zeke in deep dejection. She learns that the ring is a magic one, granting whatsoever is wished for by the wearer. Zeke tries it and gets money in handsful, a stein of beer and a string of sausage, but wakes and finds it was a dream. Jane's father comes to see the ring, admires it and persuades Zeke to exchange it for Jane's hand and two thousand dollars. Zeke agrees, and accompanies the old man to town on his honeymoon.

PETE'S AWFUL CRIME (Oct. 23).—The cast: Gale Henry, William Franey, Max Asher, Milburn Moranti.

Miranda, the fair owner of Lizard Gulch's only boarding house, has many suitors. Her home cooking is such a treat that every single man in the community is bent upon securing her for himself, but the matrimonial race finally narrows down to "Near-Sighted" Pete and "Blizzard" Jake, who stand the highest in her affections. Pete and Jake become deadly rivals. Miranda treats both alike and resolves that the one who makes the best proposal shall claim her. Pete and Jake linger at the dinner table, each trying to outlast the other in an attempt to get her alone, but one proves as good a waiter as the other, and when Jake starts to plead his cause, Pete is generally doing the same, and, unable to give them both an answer, Miranda keeps putting them off.

To gain advantage, Jake acquires some new clothes. His discarded clothes he gives to a farmer, who uses them to outfit a scarecrow. Pete comes upon the scarecrow, and being nearsighted, mistakes it for Jake. Desperate, he plots to rid himself of his rival, but as he raises his gun to fire, he loses his nerve, and as he is putting down the gun, stumbles and accidentally discharges the gun, the bullet strikes the scarecrow and knocks it to the ground. Pete, thinking he has killed Jake, takes to the woods.

In the interim, Jake has called upon Miranda and his new outfit makes an impression. He pleads his cause, but Miranda, remembering that Jake has a bad temper, tells him she will marry him when he has conquered himself. Jake becomes disgusted with women in general and is about ready to give up his suit. Feeling uncomfortable in his new clothes, Jake hunts up the scarecrow and gets back his old clothes. Pete, conscience-stricken, decides to give himself up; he returns to the ranch and telling the boys that he is a murderer, becomes resigned to his fate. Just as the cowboys are leading him away to string him up, Jake appears and Pete, thinking it is Jake's ghost, breaks away. Thinking that Pete is out of his head, Jake and the cowboys give chase, finally overhauling him through the medium of a lasso. When Pete has been reassured that Jake is really alive, he is so glad that he is not a murderer, that he withdraws in favor of his rival and successfully helps Jake to win Miranda.

L-KO.

TEARS AND SUNSHINE (Oct. 27).—The cast: Gene Rogers, Ray Griffith, Alice Howell, Gertrude Selby.

Father and son are very much grieved over the loss of a recently departed one, but they forget their own grief when they find their neighbors, Mrs. Whosis and her beautiful daughter, are in the same fix. Father and mother are getting along beautifully with their flirtation when the dear little children interfere. Father and Mrs. Whosis decide to take the children to the park and easily get them away by giving them nickels and sending them for ice cream.

Father wishes to make quite a hit with Mrs. Whosis and decides that he will purchase a beautiful present for her. He has hardly made the purchase before he is relieved of it by another admirer of Mrs. Whosis, who also is trying to make a hit with the new widow. Father, however, gets the necklace back and presents it to the widow and everybody is happy in the end.

FATHER'S FIRST MURDER (Oct. 31).—The cast: Peggy Pearce, Hank Mann.

Father didn't like movie actors and he was not bashful about saying so. His daughter was stuck on Hector, one of those individuals, and Pop tore his photo all to pieces and told her never to see him again. Daughter thought differently, however, and tried to elope with Hector, but Pa caught them and chased Hank out of the house with a couple of Krupps. Pa then brought in Mr. Sweetgrass, a particular friend of his, and tried to shoo daughter on to him. Daughter acted coolly and Pa had about melted, but Mr. Sweetgrass was a slapper and he gave Pa a couple of slaps on the embonpoint. Daughter wished to save her father further slaps so she agreed to marry Mr. Sweetgrass.

Meanwhile Hector wrote daughter and told her hang a rope out of her window and he would come and pull it as a signal to elope. How Mr. Sweetgrass and father got the note and how the best laid plans go wrong was never better illustrated than in this case. Father was pulled out the window by his great toe, Mr. Sweetgrass fell out a second story window, and father shot Hector in the excitement. Father imagined he was an assassin and tried to beat it in minister's clothing. Kidnappers got Pa mixed up with the minister. Hector and Pa and Mr. Sweetgrass all attacked one another from the rear, and no one got the girl.

VICTOR.

A LITTLE AT STAKE (Two Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: J. Warren Kerrigan, Hazel Burkham, Robert A. Myles, Buck Connors, Helen Leslie and Mary Talbot.

Jack Brandon, a wealthy rancher, lives happily with his wife on their big estate. A neighbor of their's, Jud Martin, is in straitened circumstances on account of his inability to secure employment. To make matters worse, Jud's wife is ill. Jack gives them aid and also gets a job for Jud. Mrs. Brandon, a city-bred woman, suddenly becomes tired of country life, and her desire to go to the city is intensified by the receipt of a letter from one of her friends, telling of the joyful times they are having in the city.

Mrs. Brandon, while having no desire to be disloyal to her husband, welcomes the presence of Akron, a cattle buyer, to her home because of his citified manners. Akron learns from Jack that it will be several days before the cattle can be rounded up, and is permitted to stay at the house. He sees in the actions of Agnes (Mrs. Brandon) that she is dissatisfied with her way of living, and divining this as a vehicle to ingratiate himself into her good will, he starts to make love to her, but she repulses him.

A few mornings later Jack and Akron start away to look over the stock and on the way back to the ranch Jack stops at Jud's cabin to see how the sick woman is getting along. Cynthia, the daughter, expresses her gratitude to Jack by kissing him, and Akron sees a method of worming himself into Jack's wife confidence by using this as a wedge. When he hears Jack tell the girl to meet him at a certain place that evening to get some medicine he conceives a plot to win the wife from her husband.

Akron again tries to get Agnes to go with him, but is again repulsed. He then takes her to the place where her husband is to meet Cynthia, and when she sees him give the girl money, she concludes that he does not care for her. She decides to leave him, and, after writing a note to him, goes with Akron, who has promised to escort her to the city. Cynthia's mother is stricken and Jack, following an examination, decides that she needs strychnine. He goes to his home to get it and finds the note left by his wife. Wild with rage, he sets out to overtake his wife and Akron, when he suddenly remembers his mission and makes for the sick woman's cabin.

Meanwhile, Agnes experiences a change of heart, and starts back to the cabin. Akron is wild and attempts to prevent her, but he is intercepted by Jud, who is on his way home and who was the cause of Agnes changing her mind, he having met the couple at the railroad station where he thanked Agnes for her husband's kindness. Agnes reaches home and, thinking that Jack has not seen the note, destroys it. Jack arrives later, and, through the explanation of Jud, the situation is cleared, and husband and wife are reconciled.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 19, "The Sacred Fire"—Two Parts—Oct. 25).—Kitty unconscious, is held in the arms of the demented sailor over the mouth of the crater in the underground grotto. In another passageway, Count Frederick and the native succeed in finding an entrance to the grotto where Kitty is, in time to save her from being thrown into the fiery depths below. Around the crater at the sacred fire, the natives who showed Count Frederick the way to this strange island, get into a fight with Kitty's captors and several of them fall into the secret entrance to the underground grotto. Frederick and the sailor, hearing them coming, look about for means of escape. The sailor promises to help Frederick and leads them both from the room just as the natives, who have fallen through the entrance, discover their hiding place.

The natives search for Kitty and Frederick, intending to kill them. Up above, the natives discover the entrance to the grotto and follow the other natives through. Arriving in the grotto they learn from the other natives that Kitty has been there and they all start in pursuit. In Gretzhoffen, Count Sachio and King Michael talk over Count Sachio's intended trip to Gretzhoffen. Sachio tells the King that with both parts of the coin he is certain of finding the hiding place of the plans and scripts belonging to the King of Gretzhoffen, not knowing that one-half of the coin is a duplicate of the one which Count Frederick had made for King Michael, when the puppet discovered the loss of his, which is now in the possession of Kitty.

Bidding adieu to his King, he starts off for Gretzhoffen. Arriving in the palace he awaits his opportunity and with both coins in his possession, starts his search for the hiding place. In the underground city Kitty, Frederick and the old sailor, hiding from the natives, are discovered and a fight ensues in which the sailor loses his life. Count Frederick with Kitty in his arms escapes to the cliff. In the torture chambers of the palace of Gretzhoffen, Count Sachio follows the directions of the coins, but fails to find the hidden scripts, etc. Sachio meanwhile is frantically searching for the hidden treasure. Following the directions on the coin, he is surprised not to find the hiding place.

Sometime later on the island, Kitty and Count Frederick, hiding in a cave at the top of the cliff, succeed in keeping out of sight of the natives, but in so doing are forced to go without food. At night they manage to keep the fire burning, hoping against hope to signal a passing boat. Nearly dead with starvation they are about to give up when they see on the horizon what appears to be a boat. They succeed in lighting a fire and in that way hope to attract the attention of someone on board. The episode ends at this point.

NESTOR.

AN HEIRESS FOR TWO (Oct. 25).—The cast: Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Harry Rattenberry, Jane Waller, Elsie Greeson.

The boys are fagged with the long summer's work and are undecided where to spend their vacation. One day Eddie is idly looking over the paper when he sees where a young man has met and married a wealthy heiress at the beach. So nothing but the beach will suit them. Eddie sees the boss and they are given permission to take a vacation. Mr. Brown has a young wife and a daughter, and is very jealous of his wife. He gets a letter from his sister inviting the family to spend the summer with her at the beach.

Eddie and Lee arrive safely and begin a persistent chase of every female in sight, thinking they are on the trail of an heiress, but as it happens the only heiress on the beach is a "maiden lady" of uncertain years, attended by two aged cavaliers. Lee meets Mrs. Brown and becomes acquainted with her. They are indulging in harmless flirtation when Mr. Brown appears. Lee leaves in haste. Eddie meanwhile has met Elsie and proceeds to make himself solid. Seeing Lee, he calls him over and introduces him to the girls. They plan great times and the girls invite the boys to supper that night. Lee, being the cautions one, begins to fear that things will end badly because they are stopping at a swell place and are short on money, but his pal tells him that it is all right as the money question will soon be settled when they marry the heiress. That evening they are able to be of assistance to the real heiress, who gives them her card and offers them money, but the latter is refused. The boys are still unaware of her identity.

Lee and Eddie arrive at the party and are having a fine time when Elsie's father, Mr. Brown, comes in. He recognizes Lee and the latter doesn't wait for any argument, but seeks safety in flight. His pal joins him in the mad race and they reach their room safely. They determine to fix things with the girl, so Lee writes a note and sends it by Eddie. Mr. Brown has returned from his fruitless search and meets a policeman. The two arrive just as Eddie, fearing to enter the house, sneaks around. He is captured and the note read. Eddie is taken to jail, and when Lee comes to meet his girl, he is captured by the policeman and thrown in jail. All efforts to get free are futile until the boys think of the old maid and call her up. She comes to their assistance nobly and the boys learn she is an heiress. The story ends with the two boys under the "wing" of the heiress, their future well provided for.

THE FRAME UP ON DAD (Oct. 29).—The cast: Harry Rattenberry, Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallagher.

Father and mother have arranged a marriage for their only son, Ray, with a girl having plenty of money. Mother and daughter arrive at the house and on the consummation of the arrangements, father sends his son a wire telling him the good news. Ray is finishing the school term and in the days that have passed, met, wooed and won a fair charmer by the name of Billie. Billie has just promised to marry him, when the serenity of their lives is marred by the receipt of the telegram from Dad. There is considerable worry on Billie's part, but Ray tells her the only way out is for them to get married. Ray seemingly falls in with his parent's plans and receives a letter from home telling him to bring one of his chums home with him. This gives him a scheme to take Billie home with him; so, after their marriage, Billie is disguised as a boy and they leave for home. Ray's fiancee, Jane, has been a childhood friend of Ray, and she is delighted to see him again. Dad meets Ray and his "chum" at the train, and the young fellow makes a good impression on him. Jane takes quite a liking to Bill.

Dad is very anxious to have the match consummated and so he gets theater tickets for Ray to take Jane to the show, expecting the young folks will complete arrangements. Ray doesn't like to leave Bill, but father insists and says he will take care of the guest. He does, taking her to a swell cafe and introducing her to wine and song. Ray worries over Bill and pleads a headache, so Jane agrees to return home with him. On the way they stop at a cafe and much to Ray's amazement finds Bill and father having a time with two girls. Bill begins to show the effect of smoking, and after calling Dad down for teaching Bill bad habits, the whole party go home.

That night, while the chums are changing clothes, Bill accidentally leaves a corset on a chair, which Dad finds, and there is some tall explaining to be done, but Dad is still suspicious. That night mother stops in to bid them good night and discovers the secret. After much persuasion she agrees to keep silent. The next morning the boys come down to breakfast and find mother has a headache. Bill insists upon taking mother's breakfast to her, which makes Dad suspicious, and he follows upstairs. He finds Bill with her arm around mother, kissing her. With a roar of rage he starts to "clean house." Ray rushes upstairs and arrives just in time to avert a calamity. Explanations are made and with mother, son and daughter-in-law against him, Dad is forced to come to terms.

THE LOST ROLL (Episode No. 10 of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series—Oct. 28).—The cast: Max Asher, Gale Henry, William Franey, Milburn Morante and Lillian Peacock.

When Hubby comes sneaking in during the early morning hours, wifie pretends slumber, but resolves to teach him a lesson. Hubby thinks his wife is asleep and soon, he, too, is apparently asleep. She rises, steals the money he won at the poker game and places it beneath her pillow. But hubby is a wise old guy and sees this, and on wifie's return to slumber, takes the roll and, going to the dining room, hides it in an old coat.

The elusive Lady Baffles has her emissaries all over town and one of them happens to be in the room when hubby hides the roll. He hides and as soon as hubby leaves, he communicates with his partner by telegraphing on the fire grate. Soon she joins him and they are preparing to get the roll when a tramp knocks at the door. They hide. Wife goes to the door and when the tramp asks for a coat, she goes to the dining room and gives him the coat in which hubby has hidden the roll. Baffles is baffled, but she and her assistant follow the tramp. Wifie tells her spouse about giving the coat away, and when he tells her about the hidden roll, they get Detective Duck on the phone.

Duck by his rapidity in changing his appearance is soon on the trail of the tramp. The tramp has carried the coat to a second-hand store and received a coin for it, leaving to fill an aching void in his anatomy. Baffles and her assistant are close on his trail, and learning where he sold the coat, disguise and come in the store and purchase the coat. Duck has disguised himself as one of the dummies in the store and when the exultant couple pass out with the coat he falls against Baffles, who has the coat.

The two crooks, taking a taxi, set out revelling in their haul, but on reaching a bridge stop to count the money. What is their disgust and humiliation to find only a baker's roll, with a note from Duck saying "have this roll on me." Duck returns to the couple's home just as they are beating up the tramp and rescues the poor unfortunate, who soon leaves them behind. Duck restores their roll and tells them that the case was almost too simple for one of his remarkable ability.

THE MAN FROM ARGENTINE (Two Parts—Oct. 31).—The cast: Sydney Ayres, L. M. Wells, Walter Belasco, Carmen Phillips and Doris Pawn.

Manuel Lopez and his son, Carlos, live in the tropics. The father is a wealthy aristocrat and high in the confidence of his government. The son is well-educated, suave and a coming writer. As an official of the government, Manuel has a party of officials to discuss the secret plans of their country's fortifications. After much discussion the meeting breaks up and Manuel locks the plans in his safe. Carlos and Bonita, the daughter of his father's friend, Rodriguez, are betrothed, according to the traditions of each family. The girl is supercilious and cold, caring only for herself, but to obey is so inherent in the boy that he never dreams of breaking off the match.

That night a party of friends assemble at the house and Manuel, going into the library, finds the safe open and in disorder, and the secret plans missing. Realizing the loss will mean dishonor and maybe death to him, he calls Carlos to him and tells of the theft. The boy, seeing how his father is distressed, forces his father to agree to his departure in such a manner that it will appear that the son is guilty, but just before leaving is given a key to the family code so that in case of necessity they can communicate without the message becoming public property. In order to foil any spies that may be on his trail, Carlos takes quarters in a tenement in the poorer district, when he arrives in America, and thus he meets Helen Brookes and her brother, Spike, who room nearby.

One night as Carlos returns from the library, he comes upon the girl and her brother being attacked by the gang (of which "Spike" was formerly a member) and helps to drive the toughs off. The brother is hurt in the fight and Carlos takes him to the girl's rooms. Carlos and Helen become sweethearts, neither knowing of the other's occupation.

One day Carlos sees a code message in the paper stating that his father is in town and asking him to meet him at a hotel. He dons his better clothes and arriving at the hotel is greeted by his father, Bonita and her father. There is a happy reunion and the father tells how the theft of the plans was finally traced to a servant, the servant confessing and implicating one of the lesser officials of the government. The old father is particularly pleased that his beloved son can now accompany him back home. That night, as a celebration, they go to a well-known cafe. While chatting, the cafe entertainer enters and just as Helen is in the middle of her act, notices Carlos and in a flash realizes that he is not a laborer, but a gentleman. He notices her, too, and has a hard time controlling himself, the struggle being noticed both by his father and Bonita.

Carlos tells his father of the girl, but the old man tells him of his duty to Bonita, and so works on his honor that Carlos makes all preparations to leave, but just as the ship starts to leave he leaps ashore and returns to Helen. Helen has been taken home by Spike who tries to ease her grief, but he, too, is saddened by the desertion of his friend and idol. Suddenly there is a knock at the door and Carlos comes in. He tells Helen that he has resolved to become an American citizen so that he can marry her and everything ends happily.

THE SUPERIOR CLAIM (Three Parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: M. K. Wilson, Sherman Bainbridge, Edith Sterling, Rex De Roselli.

In the town of Silvertown, Martin Stavnow owns the busiest saloon. Grace Wendel and her father, too, live in the same town. It has long been Stavnow's earnest desire to win the girl, although he is very much older than she. Grace has tolerated the man because she did not care for a scene and Stavnow accordingly become much encouraged by her attitude. On the death of his mother, Paul Winston is left without a single known relative and he travels west to forget his grief. The train is delayed by a landslide, and on being informed that it will be there some time, Winston gets out and walks around. The town is Silvertown. Grace has come to the store for supplies and on coming out drops a sack of nuts. Winston sees this and goes to her assistance, putting the nuts in his hat. The girl is very appreciative and he offers to accompany her home as she has nothing else to carry the nuts in. She agrees and they become acquainted. The courtesy of the girl and her father appeals to the boy. He becomes so engrossed that he misses his train and decides that he will remain for a stay at the place.

Stavnow sees the boy and Grace together frequently, and his jealousy is aroused. Calling upon Wendel, he asks for the girl's hand, but after quite a scene the father tells him that this momentous question must be left to the girl's judgment. Stavnow leaves and going to his rooms, he rummages through his things and comes across a picture of his wife which brings memories of his past. Unsuccessful in his attempts to frighten Winston away, Stavnow evolves a desperate plan. Winston has frequently been indulging in the card games in the saloon and Stavnow manages to slip, unnoticed, two cards in the Easterner's pocket. Later, he accuses Winston of cheating. When Winston is searched the two cards are found on him and he is taken out to the edge of the desert.

Grace worries over Winston's absence and decides to investigate. Stavnow is congratulating himself in the saloon over the safe riddance of his rival, when he notices the barkeeper pick up something on the floor and gaze at it. He finds it a picture exactly like his own, of his long lost wife, and the man tells him he found it where the Easterner sat. Slowly Stavnow realizes the significance of the picture in the boy's hands and hurriedly sets out to rescue him.

Winston is meanwhile wandering erratically in the desert. A sand storm comes up and he is buried. Stavnow has arrived in the desert and falls a victim to the storm when he loses his horse. When the air clears somewhat, Stavnow finds Winston and rescues him. Meanwhile the cowboys have set out to locate Stavnow, as the barkeeper has told of his hasty departure. Winston revives and Staynow demands an explanation of the picture which he had dropped. The boy simply says it is his mother. Stavnow breaks down and tells how many years before he had happily married and because of his thirst for drink, had become estranged from his wife. The two are rescued in the nick of time by the relief crowd and taken back. Grace welcomes Winston back with open arms, but her attitude cools when she sees Stavnow. Finally things are satisfactorily explained and the son having a "superior claim," the story ends, the two fathers blessing the union of their children.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

THE COLLEGE ORPHAN (Six Parts—Oct. 25).—The cast: Carter De Haven, Miss Edwards, Louis Morrison, Gloria Fonda, Val Paul, Wm. Canfield, Flora Parker De Haven, Lule Warrenton, Doc Crane.

Jack Bennett has been leading a gay life. Below his father has just received a bill from one of the cafe proprietors for damage committed by his son and others of a party the night before. He summons the young man and proceeds to lecture him soundly, stating that in the college career, upon which he is about to start, his allowance is to be twenty dollars per week. Jack's fiancee is Irma Brentwood, the daughter of his father's partner in business. She, however, prefers Bruce Howard, an upper classman in the college, although she is engaged to Jack. It is the plan of the fathers that their children shall marry when Jack finishes college.

At school Jack and Bruce are bitter rivals and belong to opposing Greek letter fraternities. Jack is stopping at Mrs. Blanding's boarding house. In Mrs. Blanding's employ is a little orphan girl, Daisy Woods, who conceives a violent admiration and semi-love for Jack. He scarcely notices her, although he is friendly when by chance he meets her. Jack and his frat brothers plan to attend the theater, but find that the opposing fraternity, including Bruce Howard, have taken possession of the theater and that there is nothing left for them. Howard's crowd starts a rough-house, which ends in their being driven from the theater with a fire hose. Jack and his boys, entering by the stage entrance, arrange with the girls to visit the frat house for a little evening, no evil intended. Disgruntled, Howard's crowd learns of what has happened and of how the other fellows have put it over on them, and they plan to inform the dean of the college. Jack's friends learn of this bit of treachery and smuggle the girls out of the house, while, to cast off suspicion, half of the fellows masquerade as girls.

Howard, however, is determined to have revenge, so he arranges with one of the girls a scheme to humiliate his rival. He bribes the girl and smuggles her into Jack Bennett's room at the boarding house, being observed, however, by little Daisy Woods. Jack returns and finds the woman in his room. Jack is expelled, and his father disinherits him. Jack is broken-hearted; but, acting on the advice of little Daisy Woods, resolves to be a man and make good. Jáck, with an eye to the welfare of his little friend, writes a note to his father, explaining that Daisy knows the truth of the affair and can explain all. Daisy arrives at the home of Jack's father and tells her story to both his father and his fiancee. His fiancee is apparently unaffected; but the father is repentant and offers forgiveness to his son through Daisy. Jack rejects the offer, stating that he has decided to make good unaided.

Mr. Bennett, Jack's father, and Mr. Brentwood, Irma's father, are figuring on a large government contract bid. One evening when calling upon Irma, Bruce Howard sees papers upon which the two fathers have been working lying upon the table, and he at once realizes their value. He slips them inside his pocket, being observed by Daisy, who is acting as Irma's maid. She succeeds in securing the papers without his knowledge and, knowing of their great value, plans to give them to Jack.

Jack realizes the value of the papers and, securing an advance from his mother, who has always been his friend, he succeeds in underbidding Howard, as well as his father and partner. He is re-established in the eyes of the fathers, by thus saving the contract. The true story of Howard's duplicity comes out. Irma's father again offers her to Jack, who coldly turns his back upon her and places his arm about the little orphan, Daisy.

SPRINGTIME OF THE SPIRIT (Three Parts—Oct. 24).—The Cast: Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Harry Spingler.

On his deathbed, John Tilden, who lost his wife years ago, tells his daughter, Dora, that he is sending her to Howard Potter, who is now living in New York, and who also loved her mother in her girlhood days. After the funeral a tag is pinned onto the child's coat and she is sent by train from San Francisco to New York. When Dora and Potter meet in the station in New York, she, with childish impulsiveness, throws her arms around his neck, and Potter, who has associated with more or less gay women, is particularly pleased with her naive charms. Paul, the younger brother of Potter, arrives home from college and eventually falls in love with Dora, who returns his affection. They plan to tell the older brother on Dora's eighteenth birthday of their intention to get married.

Four years have now passed and the doctor, who attended Tilden on his death bed, mails the two letters which the dying man had given him with instructions that they be sent in time to reach Dora's home on her eighteenth birthday. Dora's birthday arrives and her eyes distend in surprise when she receives a letter written in her father's handwriting. It tells her that when her father won her mother away from Potter that he and Potter agreed that if the union was blessed with a daughter that the latter should marry her. To this agreement Dora's mother also assented. Dora shows the missive to Paul, who is at first rebellious; but when he thinks how his older brother had cared for him he bows his head in submission. The other letter is received by Potter, and it informs him that the wife he asked for is now delivered to him. Potter does not receive the letter in a serious spirit at first, but when he reflects that he is now past forty years old he begins to feel the need of woman's comforting presence and realizes that he loves Dora. The young girl accepts his offer of marriage, and preparations are made for the wedding.

The day for the nuptials arrives, and, as Potter sits in a retrospective mood before the fireplace, he sees in the flames his past associations with women of rather uncertain honesty and chastity. At the end of his reverie, Potter asks himself, "Am I worthy of the girl I am about to marry?" Just then he hears Dora bidding a last farewell to Paul, and he realizes the situation in an instant.

At the church the wedding march is being played. Dora is leaning on the arm of one of Potter's friends who is to give her away. Paul, the best man, is nearby. They march slowly up the aisle. They reach the alter and halt. No bridegroom is yet in sight. A messenger boy appears and hands the minister a note. He speaks to the best man, and to the amazement of the assembled guests, Paul steps to the side of the bride, and they are married. Alone, Potter thinks of the happy future of Paul and Dora, knowing that his sacrifice was the only way to bring it about.

THE MILLIONAIRE PAUPERS (Three Parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Grace Thompson, Gretchen Lederer, Arthur Shirley, Miss Wilmer, Marcia Moore, Millard K. Wilson, Lon Chaney.

Mrs. Burne-Smith and Mrs. Winthrop have determined to make a match between their respective children regardless of the fact that the two in question have never seen each other. Mrs. Burne-Smith thinks by making the brilliant match with wealthy Allen Winthrop she will be enabled to pay off some of her pressing debts. Enid Burne-Smith has a mind of her own, and has often had thoughts of a handsome lover who would carry her off despite her protests. Naturally she does not fall in with her mother's plans and it takes quite an argument before she is brought "in line." Allen Winthrop has just returned from abroad and views with amusement the efforts of his mother to try and win him to assent to the matchmakers' plans. He finally agrees to accompany his mother that night to the Burne-Smiths.

Allen has received an anonymous letter stating that the agent who is in charge of one of his tenements is a crook. He decides to investigate the matter. Allen and his mother arrive at the Burne-Smiths and are delayed waiting for Enid She has flatly refused to meet Allen, and, after tieing the maid up, makes her escape and finally ends up in a tenement house, where she gets rooms. The next day Allen disguises himself and secures rooms in his own tenement. This is the same place where Enid is staying, and she has become acquainted with Mabel and her sweetheart, George. Enid secures work and Mabel helps her. Every evening after work, the girls are met by their lovers and Enid sighs as she thinks she has no one to look after her.

Enid notices that the landlord is familiar with Mabel and later finds that the girl has coaxed him to put off collecting the rent. With the rent money she has been buying clothes with which to get married. She and Allen meet several times and are mutually attracted. George has noticed Martin, the landlord, around Mabel, and has told her to "cut him off" her calling list. She tells of her indebtedness to him to Enid, and the latter pawns her last piece of jewelry to secure funds with which to release Mabel from the landlord's clutches.

Martin comes to the girl's room and, while they are arguing, George and Allen come to the door demanding entrance. Mabel has refused to let Enid pay her rent and when she hears George at the door, she is frightened and persuades Martin to hide in the closet. George sees the money on the floor and is still suspicious. Martin then comes out of hiding, claims the money, and says that he bought the dresses for the girl. Enid, seeing that the love between George and Mabel is about to be broken up, takes all the blame and says the dresses are hers. George takes Mabel in his arms and tells her that she had better quit going with Enid. Allen is very much disappointed in the girl and leaves her, too. Enid then determines to return home and forget her little adventure. Allen places George in charge of his tenement, discharging Martin. Allen then tries in vain to find some trace of Enid. He and his mother are invited to the Burne-Smiths for dinner and he listlessly goes with her. The two mothers are delighted when Enid and Allen meet. The two stare at each other like long lost friends. The plans of the two matchmakers have been more than fulfilled, and as the story ends, Enid and Allen are planning their honeymoon.

BIG U.

THE FLAG OF FORTUNE (Two Parts—Oct. 28).—The cast: Murdock MacQuarrie, "Mother" Benson, Edna Payne, Arthur Moon.

Grandpa and Grandma live with their granddaughter, Betty, and are in straitened circumstances. Years before Grandpa made out his pension papers correctly, but they became lost mysteriously and up to the present he has been unable to receive the pension due him on account of the missing papers. Grandpa ekes out a meager living by doing odd jobs gardening.

Grandpa writes to the pension office asking them to make another search for the papers. Soon he receives a reply stating that they can do nothing without the original papers. On top of this disappointment, the landlord comes in and requests the long due rent. The old man shows the letter he has just received and pleads for more time. The landlord promises to give them another month. Betty applies for work in a moving picture studio, and the director agrees to give her a trial if she can furnish an evening dress. At home, Betty takes one of Grandmas old dresses, and makes her way back to the studio, undetected. She makes a hit with all the company and receives the big sum of $5.00 for her day's work. There is great rejoicing in the humble home that night when the news gets out, but Grandpa does not like the idea of his little girl acting. Accordingly when next Betty goes to the studio she is accompanied by her grandparents.

When Betty introduces her Grandpa to the director and leading man, Jack Warren, they both realize he is the ideal type for the part of the old soldier in the picture. Grandpa goes home and decks himself out in his beloved uniform. Grandma, helping him, notices his flag, all furled and tied, and takes it along unnoticed by the others. The party arrive on the battlefield and have several rehearsals, but the director is doubtful about Grandpa's acting. However, they decide to go on with the picture. During the action the flag bearer falls and Grandpa finds that he is his own nephew. During the action, the boy breaks the staff of the prop flag and, while they are trying to find another, Grandma offers the flag she brought. The camera is started and when the boy falls the flag is partly unfurled. Grandpa comes upon the boy and his acting is all the most exacting director could wish. Even after the camera stops, he holds the pose and the others rushing up to him, find him staring at the ground. Jack Warren picks up the object upon which the old man is looking so happily and they find the long missing pension papers.

Betty then remembers how, when a little tot, she had been given the letter by the postman and playing with her Grandpa's uniform had put the letter in the flag. Jack and Betty have become mutually interested in each other and after Jack has figured out the back pension money will be a snug fortune for the old folks, his plea to the old folks to allow Betty to be his wife instead of leading woman, receives their warm approval, for they, too, have found a lot to admire in the gentlemanly leading man.

THANHOUSER.

THE SPIRIT OF AUDUBON (Two Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Lawrence Swinburne, Helen Badgley, Leland Benham.

The name of Audubon is one to conjure with to the little daughter of a widow who has made a hobby of the study of birds and their welfare, and has instilled this same love into the heart of her daughter. Living next to the lady and her child are a widower and his son. The widower believes in everything the widow believes in, but he has never paid much attention to her Audubon theories or bothered to teach his son anything concerning the protection of birds.

The two families are friends, and the two children play together a great deal. Their first quarrel arises, however, when the little girl finds the boy trying to rob a bird's nest. While he is up in the tree she goes after her mother to aid her in saving the bird's eggs. The little boy comes out of the tree, but is very angry at his little friend and goes off home in a huff. That night both children have the same kind of dream. In the dream the spirit of Audubon comes to them. He is much pleased with the little girl, but angry with the boy for not loving birds. He takes the children, and they go wandering off into foreign lands. They observe birds of all species, making their nests, feeding their young, making love in bird fashion and doing all the hundreds of things that make birds interesting the world over.

The lesson of the dream has ben so vivid that he wants to apologize to his little friend and tell her how sorry he is for his action of the day before, but when he gets to her house learns that she and her mother have gone to the big Audubon celebration, which is being held by lovers of birds in honor of the big man who first went on record as the friend of the little feathered things. He begs his father to take him to see it, too. At the celebration both father and son are delighted with the parades and the floats and the speeches. The little boy decides that he will become a champion of birds from henceforth, and when he and his father meet the little girl and her mother, he proclaims his intention. Both the boy and his father are taken into the society, and, as they watch a wreath being placed on a monument in commemoration of the man who loved birds the spirit of Audubon rises above the top of the monument and smiles lovingly at his latest adherents.

AT THE PATRICIAN'S CLUB (Oct. 24).—The cast: Earnest Howard, Mignon Anderson, Boyd Marshall.

The Patrician Club prides itself upon the fact that its members include many of the wealthiest families. Riches are necessary to maintain a proper standing in this club, but an applicant must also prove to the membership committee that his family tree is sufficiently illustrious. The day had been unusually tedious, and an unconventional member, desiring diversion, suggested to his companions that they ask the elderly servant who waited upon them to tell them a story. It had never been done in the club before. After considerable urging the waiter, explaining that he could tell only the story of his own life, began the narration.

The old servant explained that he had formerly been a storekeeper in a little country town. His wife was dead, and all his love was centered upon his young daughter. His elderly clerk desired to marry the girl, but her father gently refused him. Unknown to the storekeeper, a wealthy young man had been paying attentions to the girl. The rich man won the girl's affections and they eloped. Fearing the worst, he rushed out in search of her, and when he returned his suspicions were confirmed, for his clerk handed him a letter from a rich man saying that he was married and could not wed the girl, but would provide a home for her abroad. The heart-broken father sold his store to his clerk and set out to search the world to find his daughter and to avenge her, but so far, though he had wandered from city to city, and from country to country, his search had been in vain. The servant finished his story, and as he was leaving the room a stranger to the club appeared in the doorway. The old man, recognizing the stranger, was about to shoot him, when the club members interfered. From the contemptuous look on the faces of the men, the stranger knew how he was regarded, and told all to come to his hotel, where he will explain. All complied with the request.

The stranger's wife turned out to be the old waiter's daughter, who married her sweetheart at the time of their elopement. The rich man had never been married before—the letter purporting to have been written by him had really been forged by the storekeeper's jealous clerk, who had lied to bring sorrow to the old man who refused the hand of his daughter, and the girl that he had once loved but now hated. Conscience had troubled him, and had led him to write to the girl's husband and confess.

FALSTAFF.

BUSTED, BUT BENEVOLENT (Oct. 18).—The cast: Arthur Cunningham and Claude Cooper.

When the girls at the Hotel Royal, Regent-by-the-Sea, saw blazoned upon the register the names, "Percival Von Der Hyde" and "Alfred Astorbilt," both of New York City, they believed that distinguished visitors had arrived. In reality these "prominent" men worked in a department store. The luxury surrounding them caused no apprehension in them, for they had a joint bankroll of $30. Their complacency vanished at the end of the week when they received their bill for $374. Something had to be done, and Alfred suggested that the pity of their fellow-guests might be aroused. Alfred was to leave a note near the water's edge conveying the information that he had been ruined in Wall Street and was unable to pay his honest debts, so had sought refuge in the depths of old ocean. Percy's role was to leap after Alfred, rescue him, and when the sympathizing guests came up and Alfred's bankruptcy was revealed Percy was to start the collection for his benefit by open-handedly passing over their combined wealth of $29.98.

In discussing their plans, Alfred and Percy were overheard by two tramps, who decided to get the money themselves. They followed the boys to the pier. Alfred jumped overboard, after pinning the note of "farewell' to his coat. Percy was on the job, and as he was going to his friend's "rescue," he was hurled into the water by one of the tramps while the other destroyed the note. The cries and shouts of the men attracted the attention of the hotel guests and others, and soon a crowd gathered. So grateful were the spectators to the tramps for rescuing the "millionaires" that money was forced upon them. They even took the $29.98 out of the coat of Alfred.

So the boys' attempt to pay their debt failed, and they were led back to hotel, after admitting their poverty, and forced to work out their bill as waiters. Perhaps they are there yet, for it takes a long time to pay $374 at a dollar a day in a short season.

HATTIE, THE HAIR HEIRESS (Oct. 21).—The cast: Frances Keyes, Claude Cooper, Arthur Cunningham.

There was much excitement in the little village of Jinx Junction, Creosote County, when the local newspapers announced that the "Hair Heiress" would spend the summer there in the home of her childhood. Hattie's father, in his younger days, had been a poor but honest farmer. His failure to raise crops of corn and wheat induced him to emigrate to the Great City, where he invented a wonderful hair tonic. He amassed a large fortune, died and left everything to his only child, Hattie.

All the village beaus of Jinx Junction were anxious to impress the heiress. Among her suitors was a kind-hearted keeper of a garage, who never overcharged any one, and always gave credit to strangers. Another aspirant for her hand was the owner of an ice cream parlor, noted throughout Creosote County for the unusual delicacies he served. The ice cream man thought at first that he had the inside track, but later he suspected that there was a rival. His suspicions centered upon the garage keeper, for his hair was growing wonderfully, and the ice cream man thought that the tonic he used had been a gift from the heiress. He found that his belief was unjustified, for from outside the window of the heiress he saw her refuse to wed the garage keeper.

In his opinion not only was opposition removed, but his own position was strengthened, for he had used the hair tonic with surprising results, yet to his grief the girl refused him, and he learned there was "another," and the girl showed his rival's photograph. The ice cream man glanced at the picture and snorted his disgust. "Cannot imagine what you see in him," he ejaculated. "He isn't beautiful, and he's horribly bald-headed."

"I know he is almost bald-headed," she replied. "Ever since we met and fell in love I have been trying to make him grow a head of hair like those that figure in papa's advertisements. Up to date my efforts have failed, but I will devote my life to this sacred cause." And she smiled sweetly at the photograph, forgetting all about the other man.

For, despite his luxuriant hair, her heart was as cold to him as one of his own ice cream freezers.

MUSTANG.

THE TRAIL OF THE SERPENT (Two Parts—Nov. 5).—The cast: E. Forrest Taylor, Helene Rosson, George Webb, Harry Edmondson, Nell Franzen.

Big Ben, a Western miner, mortally hurt, wills his mine, The Marguerite, to his niece, Marguerite, and makes Bob Hadley his executor. After Big Ben's death, Hadley notifies Marguerite, who starts West to look after her inheritance. On the way she meets Knox, a crook, who ingratiates himself into her favor as her business advisor, and beguiles her into accepting his proposal of marriage. Marguerite and Knox arrive and Hadley at once becomes suspicious of Knox. Hadley shows Marguerite the mine in which he is much disappointed and advises Marguerite to sell it. She decides to do so. In the meantime she becomes impressed with Hadley, and breaks her engagement with Knox, who becomes extremely jealous.

Knox discovers Pedro, a Mexican prospector, concealing gold nuggets, and finds that they came from a secret tunnel on the Marguerite claim, which opens up a rich vein of ore. Knox offers to buy the mine at the low price Hadley names, and Hadley signs the deed. Knox drops the deed from his pocket and it is found and returned to Hadley by Carlotta, a Mexican girl, who loves Hadley. She also tells him of seeing Knox and Pedro at the secret tunnel. Pedro happens by the cabin, sees Carlotta talking with Hadley and in a jealous rage fires through the window at him. The bullet hits Carlotta.

Hadley discovers the secret tunnel, hunts up Knox, brands him as a crook and flings the money in his face. Knox discovers his loss of the deed, rushes to Hadley's cabin ahead of Hadley in an effort to get it. In the meantime, Pedro plans to attack Hadley and sees Knox's shadow on the canvas screen of Hadley's cabin, supposes it is Hadley returned and fires, killing Knox. Hadley dashes up, discovers the murder and also recovers the deed. Marguerite by this time fully realizes her love for Hadley.

NOVELTY.

GOLD-BRICKING CUPID (Oct. 13).—The cast: Bill Parsons.

John Gettum decides to make Cupid pay his bills. He opens a matrimonial agency, and sends out fliers, with bold headlines reading, "Why Work? Marry Money." A penniless writer, who has been put out of his room, rushes pell-mell to the agency. His landlady, learning that a husband is procurable for five dollars, follows. A discouraged chef, a vaudeville actress who is sick of the life, Lena a scrub girl, and Jim, a janitor, all congregate at Gettum's establishment. To all the female applicants Gettum gives the name and address of the same man, and to all the men the name and address of the same girl. He plans to sneak off with the money before his scheme is found out. Lena, the scrub girl, however, says she won't be satisfied with anybody except Gettum himself.

He demands all her cash. She hands it over, and then insists that he appoint the hour of the ceremony. "I'll marry you when the whistle blows," promises John. Lena decides to keep him in the office till the happy moment arrives. All the seekers after soul-mates return from their futile search. John makes a dive from the window, pursued by the crowd. His clients chase him through the park. Snatching off his coat, he plunges into the lake. Dissolved in tears, Lena picks up John's discarded garment. But instantly her woe is turned to joy. In the pocket she finds all the cash which Gettum has collected. The janitor comes to her support, and they fall into one another's arms. Gettum crawls out of the water and is immediately arrested. The judge fines him thirty dollars for trying to swim in the park lake.

ARTILLERY AND LOVE (Oct. 27).—Charlie hits the cop on the post with a potato. Therefrom ensues a race. Edith protects Charlie from the enraged policeman, and he falls in love with his fair deliverer. Edith, however, is George's sweetheart. George arranges a boating party for Edith, and Charlie is left behind on shore, pretty blue. The lovers leave the motor-boat and row to a deserted island. They are cozily settled in a sequestered nook, when a nearby fort, having target practice, throws them violently from their seats. George rows away for his life, leaving Edith to her own resources. All this time Charlie, from afar, has been watching for his chance. He paddles to Edith's rescue. Parental blessings fall thick on Charlie, and Edith transfers her affections to that courageous youth.

HO AND BO (Nov. 3).—Two tramps steal a parson's preaching clothes. They find in the pockets a five-dollar bill, a ticket to Hicksville, N. Y., and a letter which reveals the fact that the Reverend Jacob Harris is expected in Hicksville that morning to rehearse a young couple, Hiram Brown and Lilly Lunn, who are to be married that day at noon. Ho, the taller of the tramps, puts on the parson's clothes, and he and his pal board the train. The Reverend Mr. Harris, delayed by the loss of his pulpit garments, reaches the station just in time to see the train pulling out and Ho fast disappearing in his clothes. He hires a farmer to drive him like mad to Hicksville.

Meanwhile, the tramps arrive and present themselves at the home of the bride. Ho explains that the disreputable-looking fellow whom he has brought with him, a few hours before had saved his life, and that he has attached Bo to him as his faithful bodyguard. When it is time for the wedding rehearsal to begin, however, Ho gets cold feet. To prevent it being discovered that he is an impostor, he feigns illness, and his limp form is transported to the dining-room, where the wedding breakfast stands ready. The mother of the bride pours wine down Ho's throat, and he revives with alacrity. Bo, meanwhile, has helped himself to the beverage from the sideboard. Another attempt being made to rehearse the ceremony, Ho goes into violent fits. At this juncture in rushes the real parson, clothed in shabby second-best. He very quickly exposes the rascally Ho and Bo, who flee the house, pursued by a volley of dinner plates.

CASINO.

ETHEL'S ROMEOS (Oct. 17).—The cast: Fayette Perry, "Bud" Ross, Eddie Boulden, Herbert Stanley, Madge Orlamond, "Babe" Hardy.

Charlie, Albert and Frank get a squint at a telegram which Ethel drops in the hall of the boarding house where she waits on table—and, from insufficient data, leap to the conclusion that Ethel's rich brother is about to dump upon her a gold mine. In the eyes of the three impecunious boarders, Ethel suddenly appears radiant. Each sets out to win her. It is a simple matter to sham illness where a fortune is at stake, and the three young clerks return in the middle of the forenoon, laden down with candy, flowers and silk stockings. Most girls are happy if they get one proposal a year, but Ethel has three crowded into a very busy morning. She is so frightened that she says "Yes" every time.

The wealthy brother of Miss Stimpson, the nice little old lady upstairs, who hasn't been out of her wheeled chair for years, arrives. The boys, taking him to be Ethel's brother, give him a royal welcome. When each in turn tells Brother Jake that he is going to marry his sister, Jake is naturally surprised. Out rush the Romeos in search of a parson. By this time Ethel and her friend and confidante, Miss Stimpson, are "on" to the schemers. They take Brother Jake into their confidence. Jake is all ready for the three ministers when they are brought in. He pays each one his fee, though no ceremony is performed. Then he starts the Romeos out of the house via the toe of his capable boot. Ethel has fainted during the excitement. From the way Brother Jake revives her, anybody can see that some day one of the three clerical gentlemen will be called back.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

HIS WIFE (Thanhouser—Five Parts—Oct. 28).—The cast: Geraldine O'Brien, H. E. Herbert, Lorraine Huling, Inda Palmer, Theodore Von Eltz.

Henry Dennys, a wealthy Englishman, has two sons who are frequently brought into the company of Edith Danvers, whose father, a retired general, lives on the adjoining property. As the youths approach manhood each one unknown to the other is secretly in love with the girl. The elder son is sent to Sandhurst, from there enters the army as an officer and sees several years' service in India. Upon the death of his father he returns home to take charge of the estate and finds that his brother has fled to Australia. The younger man, it appears, has led a wild life and his evil deeds and extravagance force him to depart under an assumed name. Very soon after his return, the heir resumes his courtship of Edith, but she refuses him, telling him that although she has always liked him she cannot marry him. Heartbroken, he departs from his home.

In a little fishing village, he meets a beautiful uneducated girl and is flattered by the respect she pays him. He finally determines to marry her and she consents. The wedding is held in the village church and as they drive away he is surprised when his bride bursts into tears. She sobbingly explains that no one has ever loved her, her grandmother, her only living relative, was glad to get rid of her, and that her husband simply married her out of pity. She then adds, "The only friend I had was little Jim, my dog, and I have left him behind." Hoping to comfort her the husband leans out of the window of the carriage to give orders to the driver to return, and is touched when he sees the little dog painfully trotting along beside the carriage hoping to keep up with them. The animal is restored to his mistress.

After a happy honeymoon the couple return to their beautiful home, and slowly sorrow comes into the wife's life. It is all due to Edith, and the worst of it is that the husband does not notice it. Edith is so hopeful, so ready to assist the heir's poor wife, that his heart is filled with gratitude to her. The wife is convinced that her husband's love is slipping from her. Edith and the husband have some secret they are keeping from the wife and the wife frequently surprises them in mysterious conferences. She does not know that the husband is protecting Edith from the consequences of her own folly. Edith has been secretly married to the younger brother and knew she would be disinherited if her father ever learned the truth. Edith's husband unexpectedly returns from Australia and refuses to depart without seeing his wife. He first calls secretly upon his brother and when he slips out of the house to meet Edith, the heir's bride witnesses the meeting and believes it is her own husband, who is showering kisses upon the woman she regards as her rival.

The wife at first determines to take her husband's life, but her courage fails her at the last moment, and she dashes from his hand a glass containing poisoned wine. Her husband does not realize the cause of her action and fears she is going insane. This belief is strengthened the following day when it is found she has disappeared. On the banks of a body of water near her home some personal possessions of hers are found, also her little dog Jim, and the belief is that she has committed suicide by leaping into the water. The husband mourns her as dead, and erects a headstone to her memory in the village graveyard. The woman still lives, however. She did not drown, but wandered from her home. She finally is given refuge in an asylum conducted by a religious order. While convalescing she was reading an old newspaper and came upon an account of the wedding of her fair rival and the son of Henry Dennys, the former owner of Colworth. She believed the item referred to her husband and fell in a faint before completing the article which identified the bridegroom as the younger son of whose existence she never knew. Convinced that life held no further joy for her the wife determined to join the religious order and become a lay sister, the fact that she had been married preventing her from taking the final vows.

A number of years later the lay sister and an elderly sister are on their way to New Zealand. They change trains at the junction town in which the Colworth estate is located. There the wife again meets her rival, now apparently a happy, contented married woman with her two children. Overcome by emotion the lay sister staggers out of the station and finally enters the village graveyard. There her attention is attracted to a man lying on a grave. Believing him to be injured she hurries to him. It is her husband and the grave over which he is weeping is surmounted by a headstone bearing the wife's name. The wife finds that her suspicions have all been groundless. The elder sister returns while they are conversing and rejoices. She tells the wife there is no reason why she should not return to her husband. She joins their hands and the sorrows of the wife are ended as her husband puts his arm about her.

BEAUTY.

DESERTED AT THE AUTO (Oct. 23).—The cast: Carol Holloway, John Sheehan, Bessie Banks, Dick Rosson.

Paul Benson and Mabel Brown are married. At the wedding breakfast Fred, Jack and Harry plan to abduct the bridegroom as he is starting on his honeymoon. Mabel enters the waiting auto, and as Paul is about to spring in after her, he is seized by the three conspirators and carried off in another car. Despite the protests of the bride, the chauffeur drives Mabel to the depot, while the frantic young husband is rushed around and around town till his auto breaks down. Mabel goes home to her mother, tearfully explaining that she was deserted at the auto and that never, never again will she consent to see Paul. Paul is disgusted by her actions. Each sends the other a caustic note. They studiously avoid meeting—and both are intensely miserable. At last bride and groom are brought together at a beach resort. Mabel's obstinacy melts—and she and Paul are reconciled.

ONE TO THE MINUTE (Nov. 2).—The cast: Neva Gerber, Frank Borzage, William Carroll, Rae Berger, Lucille Ward.

After Dick had called on his sweetheart, Gladys, and found that an East Indian Rajah had the inside track in her parents' favor, after he had been frostily treated by said parents, while the Rajah was made much of, is it any wonder that sitting at his club, he should venture the gloomy remark that "there's a fool born every minute?" A stranger with a wrist watch and a peculiar way of consulting it, who introduced himself to Jones, challenged this remark. Dick and he argue and to show how gullible humans are, Dick bets $100 he can steal a piece of jewelry from every man in the next room without being detected. A page of the club, who is given the stakes to hold, is the only witness of the wager. Jones watches approvingly as Dick deftly nips a tie pin from this man, a watch from that one, cuff links from another. He returns to Jones with a handful of jewelry which he places on the table.

At this juncture a page announced a hurry-up phone call for Dick. Dick returns, Jones is gone. The clubmen miss their jewelry and Dick smilingly tells them he'll produce it, but it is gone, with Jones and the page. On the table is a note signed Jones, thanking him for the jewelry, and saying that Dick has proved his point. There is a fool born every minute. The angry club members vote Dick out of the club.

Dick in a very gloomy mood passes Gladys' home. The Rajah is about to take Gladys and her parents for an auto ride. Dick, watching, sees the Rajah consult a wrist watch with a peculiar arm motion. Dick springs upon the Rajah and after a tussle, knocks off the turban and beard. It is Jones! A policeman takes all, including Gladys and her indignant parents, to the station house. There the lieutenant takes one look at the Rajah and congratulates Dick on capturing "Wrist Watch Walter," society thief, for whose capture there is a reward of $2,000. Of course Gladys' parents smile on Dick. At the club Dick is reinstated and is a hero. "The reward? Oh, yes," he says, "I'm using that to start a fund to reduce the number of chumps born every hour."

BILLY VAN DUSEN'S CAMPAIGN (Nov. 6).—The cast: John Steppling, Carol Halloway, John Sheehan, Bessie Banks, Rae Berger.

Billy Van Deusen, a wealthy bachelor, living at his club, rescues Helen from an awkward predicament, while she is engaged in charitable work in a tenement. They become friends, and Billy falls in love with her. When he proposes, she tells him that she can't marry him because he has never done anything worth while, and suggests that he perform some distinguished and useful act. Billy consults with his club friends, and is advised to run for mayor, which he does.

James O'Brien is the labor candidate for the same office. He earns Helen's gratitude by rescuing her from a "drunk." Both candidates canvass the city for votes. On election day a political lieutenant tells Billy that he cannot be elected unless he secures the votes of the women. Billy buys a lot of parasols, goes into the tenement district and distributes them among the women, asking them to vote for him, which they agree to do, provided Billy will take care of their children, while they are at the polls. Billy does so.

Jim hears of Billy's sunshade scheme and immediately gets out handbills, announcing that all who vote for him are invited to attend a picnic to be held at a nearby park. When the women arrive at the polls they are captured by Jim. They vote for him and are taken to the picnic. The earliest returns indicate a landslide for Jim. He rushes to Helen and takes her to the picnic, where she promises to become the wife of the next mayor. The mothers remember their children, and Jim and Helen go to get the youngsters. They find Billy in distress as the children have gained mastery of him. Jim announces his victory and his engagement to to Helen. They proceed to the picnic with the children, while Billy collapses, thus ending his efforts for a distinguished career.

AMERICAN.

THE WASP (Two Parts—Nov. 1).—The cast: Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer, Roy Stewart, Hugh Bennett.

At home a young girl has proved incorrigible. She is placed by her father in a feminine school where the environment is anything but to her liking. She is wrongly accused of stealing a brooch. By night she steals from the school never to return. Circumstances throw her among evil companions, who teach her the tricks of thievery, and she becomes known as the "Wasp." As a midnight marauder she is highly successful and manages to elude the vigilant eye of the police. She has one close call, however, and only the friendly aid of one, J. Hart, an eminent man of affairs, enables her to make good her escape.

Words of advice from Hart lead the "Wasp" to renounce her life of crime. Her efforts are directed toward doing good, and she becomes the leading spirit of a frinedly aid bureau. At length, however, the bureau runs out of funds and its power to do good is seriously crippled. The "Wasp" discovers a former pal in the act of stealing J. Hart's watch. She compels the pickpocket to turn over his booty to her, and she at once restores it to its owner. Hart is impressed by the act of the girl, and offers assistance to the "Wasp" at any time at which she may need it.

Things have come to dire straits at the charitable bureau. The "Wasp" is beseeched for aid, but finds herself powerless to aid the suffering applicants. She resolves for once to return to her life of burglary. That night she robs many houses, among them that of J. Hart. In each one she leaves a note, explaining that robbery has been committed so that the needs of suffering humanity may be met. Hart receives a note from the "Wasp," asking that he give work to her pal who also has forsaken the criminal path. Hart discovers that the writing on the card and that of the message left by the burglar are identical.

He confronts the "Wasp" with charges of her guilt, then sees the good that the stolen valuables have worked. A big check is made out and the prosperity of the charitable bureau is assured. From then on, Hart and the "Wasp" are constant companions. Friendship ripens into love, and here the story ends.

ON SECRET SERVICE (Nov. 5).—The cast: Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, George Field, Charles Newton.

Nell, the marshal's daughter, and Frank Ketchell, the young bank cashier, are sweethearts. The romance has progressed through years, and has reached the stage where Frank has purchased a diamond solitaire which he plans to place on Nell's finger that night. James Whitmore arrives in town, representing himself as a Secret Service man. He tells Marshal Bertram that he needs his assistance in locating a gang of counterfeiters who have flooded the country with spurious coin.

Nell and Whitmore meet and the girl becomes infatuated with the affable stranger. Acting on Whitmore's suggestion, Bertram secures all the money from the local bank through Frank, takes it to his office for Whitmore to examine for counterfeit. Meanwhile Bertram confesses to Frank that it is he himself who is the counterfeiter, explaining that he transgressed the law in days gone by that he might send his daughter Nell through college.

Bertram brings the money to his office, Whitmore whips out a pistol, binds and gags the man and calmly appropriates the money. He has proved himself a clever thief. Leaving the office Whitmore meets with Nell, whom he has persuaded to elope with him. Frank discovers Bertram, releases him. Together they pursue Whitmore in an automobile, and the fleeing man and girl are overtaken. It is discovered that a large reward has been offered for Whitmore. The money is paid to Frank and Bertram. Bertram makes good for his one time counterfeiting and Nell and Frank are reunited in each others love.

Auburn, Cal.—Twelve hundred enthusiastic sportsmen attend the venison barbecue given by the North Fork Game Protective Association. Subtitle: 1—The venison is first seasoned, then wrapped in cloth and fireclay and buried for fifteen hours in the red-hot embers of a wood fire. 2—With appetites sharpened by their exertions, the hunters enjoy the roast venison.

Chicago, Ill.—A procession of children in old Spanish Court costumes is one of the features of the Columbus Day Celebrations. Subtitles: 1—Columbus goes aboard the "Pinta." 2—An exact replica of the "Pinta," the old flag ship of Columbus.

New York City.—New York's "Little Italy" celebrates Columbus Day by a pageant at the Thomas Jefferson Park.

San Diego, Cal.—Before a board of military observers a spectacular demonstration of new army transport methods is made. Subtitle: 1—The tractor with its hugh load attempts a 45 degree grade.

AN AFFAIR OF THREE NATIONS (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Arnold Daly, Sheldon Lewis, William Harrigan, Charles Laite, Charles Krauss, Geoffrey Stein, Martin Sabine, George Melville, Louise Rutter, Doris Mitchell.

Ashton-Kirk is a young man of high social position and great wealth; he is a deep student and learned in the lore of ancient tablets and forgotten books. His keen mind delights in those mysteries which have proven too shadowy for the police. He finds a joy in the hunt; there is a thrill in matching his intelligence against the craft of the criminal. In "An Affair of Three Nations" his swift mind and sure touch prevent an international crisis.

Count Drevenoff's dissolute son is offered a large sum of money by the head of the Japanese Spy System in Washington, to deliver to him a secret treaty in Count Drevenoff's possession. This treaty was made between Russia and the United States when Russia was falling from disaster in her war with Japan, and would cause a grave break between Japan and the U. S., should the former get possession of it.

The son succeeds in getting the paper, but is discovered by his father. Count Drevenoff, accused of stealing the treaty, is sent to the war in disgrace, where he is killed. The paper falls into the hands of one Dr. Morse, an American surgeon, serving with the Russian army. A Jap spy sees this. Sometime later, in America, Morse is murdered. Ashton-Kirk takes up the case, and after unravelling many mysteries and having some extremely exciting experiences, manages to save the treaty from falling into wrong hands, thus averting war.

FATTY'S FATAL FUN (Starlight—Oct. 23).—Fatty is about to be married and looks forward to the day. So do his friends, for they have planned to give him a little party in honor of the affair. A wild man from a circus has escaped and the authorities are after him. Why not make Fatty the wild man? Fine! Accordingly, while on his way to the church to be united in matrimony he is set upon and carried off, painted as befits a wild man and released. The circus people capture him, but he makes such a noise that the police come on the scene and free him.

Meanwhile, the bride-to-be and her mother are frantic, the guests leave, and the clergyman wants to depart. But just at the psychological moment our hero arrives, wild man outfit and all, and is welcomed with open arms. His captors are also there, so while he sits on their prone bodies the knot is tied and he is happy at last.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD NO. 3—"A Rheumatic Joint." (Pathe—Two Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Burr McIntosh, Max Figman, Lolita Robertson, Harry Carr, Edward O'Connor.

J. Rufus Wallingford is in Zwick's Sanitarium with rheumatism. Cornelius Rockewell is there, too. But the treatment is too much for Wallingford and he makes his escape, bringing another patient with him. It is whispered about that old man Rockewell will give a vast sum of money to be cured of his ailment, so Wallingford and Blackie get together and open an anti-old age cure. Quite by accident, to be sure, Onion Jones, a member of the firm of Wallingford & Co., meets Mr. Rockewell on a train and says he is on his way to the cure, incidentally advising the millionaire to "go thou and do likewise." He does, but only for investigation—and very much sub-rosa.

However, everything is set for him and he falls, outbidding Onion's offer of $100,000 for Wallingford's interest with one of $150,000. The name of Rockewell is then crossed off the list of the men who were mixed up in the ruin of the father of the Warden girls, and the "con" men prepare to "land" another prospect. They do it in the next episode. It is called "The Master Touch."

COUNSEL FOR THE DEFENSE (Balboa—Three Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Jack Livingston, Robert Gray, Marguerite Nichols.

While robbing a house, Steve Flanders mortally wounds a woman, and makes his escape. He is arrested later and Richard Morgan, a young lawyer, is assigned to defend him. Flanders tells his counsel where the jewels he stole that night are hidden and the later takes them himself. Some time later, Morgan having earned an enviable reputation as a lawyer, is married to Miss St. Clair, giving her for a bridal gift the jewels stolen by his first client. The evening of the wedding, while the new Mrs. Morgan is preparing for the honeymoon, Flanders, ignorant of the fact that he is entering the house of his counsel's wife, climbs through the window to rob the place. He sees the jewels and in his efforts to secure them his gun goes off, fatally injuring the bride. Morgan rushes on the scene and Flanders recognizes him and the jewels. Then, in reply to questions, he refers the police to his lawyer, and the young counsel realizes that the jewels that were the indirect cause of his success also figured in the loss of his newly-wedded wife.

GEITHORN, THE RUSTIC VENICE (Picturesque Holland—Photocolor—Oct. 18).—All the charm and simplicity of this wonder city of Holland, together with the most picturesque scenes, are brought out through the magic of Photocolor. It is shown how, on account of the absence of roads or streets, all transportation is done in boats on the many canals, as in the real Venice away down in Italy. There are countless bridges in all parts of the city which are necessary for the crossing of the canals. Then scenes of how the inhabitants carry on their trade are shown, how the barges are pushed, the difficulties the grocer has in delivering his goods, all of more than ordinary interest.

HOW WINTER FLOWERS BLOOM (Globe—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—This picture shows the growth, hundreds of times faster than nature, of many of our most popular plants. We see the hyacinth burst into bloom in a few seconds, picturing action that really requires months to take place. We are shown other favorite flowers growing and breaking into bloom. These pictures were taken after the most exacting patience over a long period of time.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (No. 8, "The Sun Worshippers"—Panama Films—Two Parts—Oct. 21).—Annette Ilington and her foster brother, Neal, in search of the map of Lost Isle, her heritage, are captured by Hernandez and Ponto, the soldiers of fortune, and put in prison. In this episode, Joe Welcher is ordered to take Mrs. Hardin to the city and they start on donkeys, Mrs. Hardin hardly being able to stay on the animal. They meet a squad of sailors and the officer in charge, becoming suspicious, orders the party taken on board the United States cruiser on which he is stationed.

Meanwhile, Annette and Neal are also being taken to the city, but by Hernandez and Ponto, and are forced to enter an old city of Sun Worshippers where Annette is prepared to be sacrificed. Neal escapes and running to the coast signals the warship for aid. Annette also succeeds in making her escape and reaches the shore in time to prevent the brute man killing Neal. The sailors come ashore and rescue the captives, and Annette recovers the map to Lost Isle when it falls from Hernandez's pocket. On board the war vessel, Neal trains a six-inch gun on the temple of the Sun Worshippers and sends a shot crashing through it, wrecking the place completely.

LOVE'S OLD SWEET SONG (Deer-Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 25).—Stella, a New York dancer, tires of her life on Broadway, and severs her connection with George Sinclair, "a man about town," when he refuses to marry her. Determined to work and earn an honest and respectable living, she accepts a position as dancer and entertainer at The Silver Grill, Wild Horse, Col. Leaving an explanatory note for Sinclair, she starts for the West. Sinclair learns where she has gone and makes a note of her destination. On her arrival at Wild Horse, Stella finds conditions at the hotel unpleasant, owing to the fact that she is obliged to room with the other dance hall girls, who are jealous of her. She rents a furnished cottage from Andy Sims, owner of Bar X ranch, who becomes interested in her.

Prior to the opening performance, Stella receives the following note from Andy: "We're short on flowers, but strong on pianos. I'll watch you tonight and wish you success." The note is followed promptly by his gift of a piano, and some sheet music, "The Songs That Mother Used to Sing." Stella is pleased by Andy's manner of extending hospitality, and realizes that he is different from the other men of the place. The opening night at The Silver Grill, Stella's beauty and dress create a sensation. "Grouch" McCoy, the foreman of Andy's ranch, who is present, recognizes in Stella a girl he met the previous summer in New York.

As the summer passes, "Grouch" notices Andy's growing interest in the dancer. Having a sincere liking for Andy, the forman tries to warn him against Stella. Andy refuses angrily to listen, stating, "I have asked the lady to marry me!" "Grouch" retorts, "She ain't fit to be your wife!" and a bitter quarrel ensues. The seeds of suspicion are sown and Andy reconsiders his offer of marriage to Stella. He finds, however, that he cannot give her up and later they are married. Later George Sinclair is called to the Pacific coast on business. En route his train stops at Wild Horse, Col., and the whim seizes him to stop off and look up Stella. They meet that evening at The Silver Grill, where the proprietor introduces Sinclair to "Mr. and Mrs. Andy Sims." Andy, in his friendly western fashion, invites Sinclair to call. Unseen by Andy, Stella scribbles a note on the edge of the menu, which she passes to Sinclair, telling him that she is married to a good man and very happy and begging him to go away. Sinclair, who is still sore over Stella's former treatment of him, calls at the cottage during the absence of Andy, and tries to induce Stella to return to New York with him. When she refuses he tries to force her to go. Andy returns unexpectedly, and is an unseen witness and listener to the scene and conversation which takes place between them. When Sinclair attempts to use force with Stella, the husband comes forward. Stella runs to him for protection, but he waves her aside and tells Sinclair, "There's a train to New York in half an hour, and you're going to take it!" Sinclair laughs in Andy's face, but Andy's statement is repeated a second time, and emphasized with a revolver pointed straight at Sinclair. The New Yorker protests but is finally escorted to the train by Andy at the point of the gun.

Stella, believing that Andy will never forgive her, decides to leave and starts to pack, but breaks down when she comes across their favorite song, "Love's Old Sweet Song." Andy returns, finds Stella packing, and thinks she is going to join Sinclair, but she denies this indignantly, telling him that until she met him (Andy) she never knew what true love was; and that now she has started she intends to keep on the right road. When it comes to the final parting, Andy cannot let her go.

THE DUEL OF HEARTS (Ramona—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Nov. 2.—Jess, the village telegraph operator, loses her position when a new girl is sent from the city to take charge of the depot and telegraph office. Through force of circumstances, Jess is compelled to obtain employment in the dance hall and saloon as bar maid, and there becomes acquainted with Curley Bradford, a professional gambler with a big heart.

Curley has already become infatuated with Alice, the new telegraph operator, and his attentions soon win favor from her. Jess becomes deeply infatuated with Curley, although the latter never knows of the woman's love for him. His desire to become the equal of Alice causes him to become disgusted with the life of a gambler, but when he is on the verge of reform, Alice discovers what she thinks to be an affair between Curley and Jess and sends Curley a note, telling him never to see her again. Curley leaves the village for his mining claim.

In the meantime, the village gossips have decided that Alice has been having too much to do with the gambler and form a delegation to call on the new operator and tell her to quit the gambler or leave town. When the gossips tell Alice their mission, she calmly ushers them into the freight store room—"to talk the matter over"—and locks them in. Some bandits have plotted to hold up the depot and when they arrive, they unconsciously break into the freight room and are attacked by the gossips who wage terrific warfare on the bad men with umbrellas, slats from goods boxes, etc.

Curley strikes it rich at his mining claim and sends Jess a liberal check, telling her that with it, she can be able to leave the saloon and live as she should live. Jess learns that she was the cause of Curley leaving and tells Alice that Curley loves her (Alice) and gets her promise to take Curley back when he returns from the mining claim. Jess sends Curley a telegram, signing Alice's name, and telling him to come back to Alice. Curley returns and the story ends happily. The deep affection of Jess for Curley, the sacrifices she makes for him and the favors Curley does for Jess—through pity rather than love—form a plot of great heart interest.

HILARY OF THE HILLS (Santa Barbara—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Nov. 2.—Hilary lives with her father, Jim Durland, in an isolated mining camp in the hills, several miles from Black Hollow, the nearest railroad station. Ben Lee, the mining camp bully, is in love with Hilary. The girl has known Ben all her life; she is a little afraid of him, but he exercises a certain influence over her. He asks her to marry him, afraid to refuse, she puts him off; tells him he must wait. Her father and the miners look upon the pair as practically engaged.

A strike is threatened at the mine. Robert Grayson, the mine owner, who lives in the East, sends his son, Theodore Willard Grayson, to investigate the trouble. The elder Grayson, a hardened, grasping money maker, has never treated the miners fairly, and is hated by his employees. Ted believes he can accomplish more with the men if his true identity is unknown—owing to their hatred of his father. On arrival at the mining camp, Ted is introduced to the miners (and later to Hilary) as Ted Willard, the new mine superintendent. Ted is in sympathy with the miners and does his best to better their condition; but they have been ill-treated for so long, they distrust him and refuse to believe that he is actuated by fair motives.

In Leila, the dance hall entertainer, Ted recognizes his only sister. A few years prior to the opening of the story, Leila married Robinson against her father's wishes. Mr. Grayson refused to forgive her and drove her from home. Later Leila discovered that Robinson was a gambler; they drifted to the mining camp, where he deserted her. Her letters to her father, begging for forgiveness, were never answered. Unable to leave the mining camp without funds, and forced to support herself, she became a dancer. To avoid bringing disgrace on the name of Grayson, Ted and his sister meet in public as strangers. While Ted is trying to effect a reconciliation between his sister and their father, Leila meets him secretly at his cabin in the woods.

Ted and Hilary become interested in each other, and their friendship ripens into love. Ben, the camp bully, notices Ted's interest in Hilary, becomes jealous of him and spies upon him. Ben sees Leila, the dancer, going to her brother's cabin in the hills at dusk, and mistakes her for Hilary. Filled with jealous fury, he follows the girl. Leila quarrels with her brother and leaves the cabin before Ben arrives. Ben accuses Ted of having Hilary hidden at the mine, which results in a desperate fight between the two men on the edge of the cliff.

Hilary accidentally witnesses a meeting between Ted and the dancer, where Ted, with his arm around Leila is trying to comfort his unfortunate sister. Unaware of their true relationship, Hilary becomes jealous. Mr. Grayson, in the East, failing to receive satisfactory reports from his son Ted, determines to visit the mine. He notifies Ted that he will arrive at Black Hollow, the nearest railroad station, on Friday, and will bring money for the next payroll. Ted starts with a horse and buggy to meet his father.

Ben learns that Mr. Grayson is bringing money for the payroll, and, with two confederates, he plans to rob Ted and Grayson at Wind River, a lonely point on the road. Hilary learns of the plot, secures the aid of several cowboys, and starts for Wind River. Ben and his confederates overtake Ted and his father before Wind River is reached. The masked men order the occupants of the buggy to climb out and turn over the money. Instead of complying, Ted strikes the horse a sharp blow with the whip and makes a wild dash for liberty. Ben and his confederates follow in pursuit. In the desperate fight which follows Mr. Grayson is wounded, and Ben is killed before Hilary and the cowboys arrive. Mr. Grayson is taken to Durland's cabin where Hilary cares for him.

Leila at the dance hall hears the cowboys talking of the hold-up. She inquires if anyone was hurt, and is told that old Grayson was shot. Thinking her father was killed, she faints. Later she hears that her father was only wounded and goes to Durland's cabin to see him. A reconciliation takes place, and Hilary learns that the dancer is Ted's sister, not his sweetheart, and he induces her to fill the latter role.

AND HE CAME STRAIGHT HOME (Atla—Rel. Wk. of Nov. 2).—Jones, a middle-aged business man, arrives at his home at 2 in the morning, intoxicated. His wife meets him on the porch and Jones begins to explain. The scene fades and the picture tells Jones' story.

Jones started home from the office perfectly sober; a mishap made him decide to walk home. On his way he passed the wall of the cemetery from which there sprouted a puff of smoke and from which there dissolved in a little old man who bid him follow, and who led Jones through the wall, along the uncanny paths of the burying ground and to a tomb. Jones grew nervous, but the little man led him through the stone wall of the tomb. Inside Jones found three mummy cases, one of which, the old man said, contained the remains of a queen of Egypt, the second, the emperor, her terrible husband, and the third, apparently a child. The old man touched the case which opened and revealed the beautiful queen. At the same time the little man dissolved into the Devil. The queen came to life and complained that she had not eaten for 5,000 years, and Jones gallantly invited her out to dinner. The Devil procured a taxi from thin air and while Jones and the queen were busy in the restaurant the Devil, with malice aforethought, returned to the tomb and hurried the angry emperor to the restaurant. Jones, in the midst of the revelry, turns for the waiter to find the irate emperor awaiting him with a four-foot knife. Jones flees, the emperor giving chase and the queen and devil following along behind. The emperor overtakes Jones about where Jones first met the little man and drags him bodily through the wall and into the tomb. He motions to the small coffin, which falls over, and the emperor places Jones thereon and prepares to chop his head off. The queen, who is smitten with Jones, snatches the devil's wand, changes him into smoke, with a wave replaces the emperor in his coffin and after bidding Jones a farewell, passes the wand over herself and instantly appears as Jones first saw her. Jones is too alarmed for much formality, but, after sneaking up on the emperor's coffin and closing the doors with a bang, he "beats it" and the tale dissolves as he flees in the distance.

Jones' wife stands eyeing him suspiciously as Jones finishes his tale with a sub-title, "And then I hurried right home." Mrs. Jones takes just one wallop at her husband and the last we see of her she is slamming the door. Jones lands in a mud puddle in which he places his fat preparatory to a night in the open, vowing never to tell the truth again.

THE COWARD.—The cast: Frank Keenan, Charles Ray, Gertrude Claire, Margaret Gibson, Nick Cogley, Charles K. French.

Colonel Winslow, veteran of the Mexican War, hopes for a great future for his only son, Frank. At the outbreak of the Civil War, a recruiting station is opened in the Virginia village where the Winslows live. Frank, obsessed with fear and admitting that he is a coward, refuses to enlist. His father's humiliation is great and in his wrath he drives Frank to the office under threat of death, and the son joins the local company. The very first night he is assigned to picket duty near the Union front. He is terrified, throws down his rifle and flees. His family's negro, Mammy, gives him refuge in the kitchen and summons his mother. The latter is comforting him when the colonel, puzzled by her absence, comes to look for her and discovers Frank. The colonel then goes to the army and becomes Private Winslow in the company which his cowardly son deserted.

Meanwhile, Frank hides in the attic as a group of Union officers arrive and take possession of the house. As they discuss the weakness of one of their positions he listens. A plan formulates itself in his mind; he casts

Important to Exhibitors Who Intend Installing Organs

The Harmo Pipe Organ is in a separate and distinct class by itself. It has no competitors. There is none other like it. Why?

Because—IT IS A GUARANTEED GENUINE PIPE ORGAN HAVING THE 16-FT. TONAL QUALITY THAT IS THE NECESSARY CHARACTERISTIC OF THE REAL ORGAN.

Because—The Harmo Pipe Organ possesses ALL—and more—of the facilities for "playing the pictures," claimed by any instrument—imitation or other, that is on the market.

Because—One of its big and EXCLUSIVE features is, that it can be played from the simple keyboard of any piano, thereby dispensing with the cumbersome Console and Manuals—yet obtaining the same effects—enabling any pianist to operate it, and obviating the necessity for the services of an expensive organist.

Because—You can play the piano alone—the organ by itself—or the piano and organ together—and use, if desired, the standard perforated music rolls to the same purpose.

Because—The PRICE is less than, and the TERMS are as liberal as—the IMITATION.

WHAT MORE CAN BE DESIRED? WHY NOT THEN GET THE REAL, GENUINE ARTICLE?

away his fear and obtains the plans by surprising the officers while they are unarmed. On a horse he rides to the Confederate commander, having made his escape in the blue coat of a northern sentry whom he had knocked unconscious. As he gallops ahead of his pursuers he starts across a bridge commanded by the fire of his father, who is on picket duty at the time. Seeing only the blue coat Colonel, or Private, Winslow fires. His aim is true and horse and rider topple into the river. Frank,however, though wounded is able to get ashore and deliver the plans to the commander. An attack is ordered and the northern army routed. Father and son are reunited after the battle.

THE MARTYRS OF THE ALAMO.—The cast: Sam De Grasse, Walter Long, Tom Wilson, A. D. Sears, Alfred Paget, Augustus Carney, John Dillon, Fred Burns, Ora Carew and Juanita Hanson.

Santa Anna, dictator of Mexico, comes to San Antonio, Texas, and there follows a series of outrages upon Americans living there. The wife of Captain Dickinson is insulted by one of the dictator's officers. When her husband goes to demand satisfaction he is thrown into jail. Then are introduced Bowie, Crockett and Silent Smith. The last named falls in love with the old soldier's daughter. These leaders of the Texans successfully conceal their arms when Santa Anna issues a proclamation confiscating all weapons. With these arms the Texans attack the Alamo, a combined mission and fort, and capture it.

Santa Anna, in whose absence they made their successful assault, starts back to San Antonio with 6,000 men. The Alamo is besieged and after ten days of fighting and desperate resistance, it is captured. Only Silent Smith, who had been sent to Sam Houston for help, Mrs. Dickinson and her baby and the old soldier's daughter are spared. Mother and child are sent to inform their coutnrymen of the fate that befell the rebels while the other woman is held by Santa Anna because of her beauty.

Houston hears of the fate of the defenders of the Alamo when Mrs. Dickinson and her child ride into his camp. With his small force, Houston gave battle to Santa Anna's army on the San Jacinto river. The 6,000 Mexicans were routed by the few hundred Texans and Santa Anna was taken prisoner. He was released only after he agreed to grant the independence of Texas.

A FAVORITE FOOL (Keystone—Two Parts).—The cast: Eddie Foy, Polly Moran, Charles Arling, Mae Busch, the Seven Little Foys.

Arling, ringmaster of a small wagon circus, abuses Polly and her seven children. Foy, a farmhand, sympathizes with her and she decides to quit her place as trapeze woman in the show and get other work. She sends her brood to the poorhouse, and Foy, ignorant of her flock, makes love to her and is accepted. She sends for the children and they arrive just as the ceremony is finished. As she proudly introduces them to their new father, Foy dashes out and drives away in the wagon which has brought the children.

In his escape he crashes into the rig of a clown who is coming to tell Polly that she is the rightful owner of the circus. Mother and children reach the scene of the wreckage, and Foy is severely beaten up by his wife. She desists only when interrupted by the clown, who shows her the paper that proves her ownership of the show. In her joy she drops the paper and starts to kiss her children. Foy reads and then changes his attitude. The reunited family start to rejoin the circus.

Back on the lot, Polly discovers that a farmer's wife has eloped with Arling, doing her act. She discharges both and in the argument that follows Foy takes all the burden of settlement and sends the other, except the farmer's wife, away. As he is trying to urge her to return to her husband that worthy apepars and starts shooting. Foy's wife, thinking he is untrue to her, tries to cut off his retreat. Arling turns the lions into a cage in which Foy has taken refuge, just as the cyclone hits the tent and sends him sailing through the air in the cage with the lions. He finally reaches ground safely by using bunches of toy balloons which the cyclone blows his way. Back on earth, Arling gets the fate of a villain, and married couples agree to bury their differences.

HER PAINTED HERO (Keystone—Two Parts).—Charles Murray, a property man, and Slim Summerville, a billposter, love Polly Moran, a stage-struck maiden, who, in turn adores a matinee idol, Hale Hamilton. Harry Booker, who is Polly's father, receives word from the executor of his brother's estate that he is the heir. They move into a mansion where Polly and Murray are about to be married. Hamilton is a wedding guest. Before the ceremony, Murray's jealousy manifests itself and the two men quarrel. Summerville and Booker also get into the argument and a general melee follows. All kinds of handy ammunition is used in a running battle among the trees and shrubbery of the Booker estate. The final result of the dispute is Polly's refusal to wed Murray and her suggestion to Hamilton that she will back him in a new production if he will assign her to the leading woman's part.

Polly appears at the theater and her inexperience causes many ludicrous situations. She ruins a scene and in the general disorder some inflammable material back stage catches fire. Murray grabs a hose and turns it on everybody. Polly is accidentally lifted with the curtain and falls from the top of the proscenium arch. A bomb is thrown on the stage and the explosion blows Hamilton, Murray and Slim out of sight. Hamilton leaves in disgust. Polly and Murray reunite.

TABLES TURNED—(Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., Nov. 1—Five parts).—The cast: Emmy Wehlen, J. Frank Glendon, Leslie Austin, Walter Hitchcock, Jeanette Horton, H. Cooper Cliffe, Edgar L. Davenport.

Howard Sherbrooke, a wealthy senior at a law university, is infatuated with Ethel Stratton, a girl who is a favorite with the students. Dick Leslie, his chum, is also in love with her. Dick is from the West, working his way through college, and Howard has assisted him financially. Howard does not know of Dick's love for Ethel. After graduation, Howard, whose interest in Ethel has ripened into love, realizes that his family and social friends will not tolerate her as his wife. He plans a mock marriage, intending to take her to New York with him. He tells Dick of this proposed arrangement, and asks him to get some one to impersonate a minister for the ceremony. Dick veils his indignation, but agrees to carry out the plan. Instead, he engages a real minister, who marries Ethel and Howard. Dick goes West.

The couple live happily in a Brooklyn flat for several months when Howard receives a detter from his father, stating that he is planning for his son to marry Beatrice Ford, daughter of his friend, Randolph Ford, a multi-millionaire. He adds that Mr. Ford intends making Howard head of the law department in his firm. Howard realizes he must break off his affair with Ethel. He tells her that he is not married to her, and that he must leave to marry a girl of his own caste. Broken hearted, Ethel informs him she is soon to become a mother. Howard blames the mock marriage on Dick, and leaves.

Ethel writes a scathing letter to Dick. Dick hurries East and finds the minister who performed the ceremony. It is the morning of the Sherbrooke-Ford wedding. Ethel goes to the church, and as she starts to denounce her husband during the ceremony, falls in a swoon and is carried into the vestry. Dick and the minister arrive at the church, but the guests are leaving. Ethel comes out of the church alone and meets Dick, who tells her she is really married to Howard. Accompanied by the minister they hurry to the Ford home, where they convince Mr. Ford his son is a bigamist. Mr. Ford, in a rage, declares he will send his son to prison. Horrified at the prospect of a prison term and the attending disgrace, Howard goes into the library where a flash from a pistol shot records his unhappy end. A few months later Ethel and Dick are married.

STANDARDIZED PROJECTION

Exhibitors who buy the MASTER MODEL buy standardized equipment, because no matter how different in mechanism and looks projecting machines can be constructed, the splendid performance of the American Standard MASTER MODEL cannot be surpassed. We were the first to originate and to use the motor drive, the larger lamphouse, the lamp adjustments outside the lamphouse, the automatic fire-shutter, controlled by governor, the 2,000-ft. magazines and reels, etc. The MASTER MODEL possesses all these refinements as well as many exclusive features all its own. Write us to tell you about them.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stere Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

The Quality Carbons of the World.

Specially constructed negative with copper coated core.

Looking over our last four testimonials published in our weekly advertising, you will find the writers of the testimonials brought out the following points in connection with REFLEX carbons:

1. They give a more brilliant, whiter and better light.
2. They are not a dirty carbon and do not fill the lamphouse full of soot.
3. They are steady as a rock.
4. They last longer than other carbons.
5. They can be used with a lower amperage.
6. They are better carbons than others on the market.
7. They are worth the difference in price for the added beauty of the picture shown.

All these points are of interest to you, Mr. Manager, and you should give REFLEX carbons a trial.

FLAME OF PASSION (Five Parts).—The cast: Tom Terriss, Lionel Pape, Reinzi de Cordova, Alfred Hemming, Charles Mather, Lida Hickok, Marguerite Hanley, Elaine Terriss, William Lewin.

William Lanyon, a West Indian planter, dies and leaves all his estate to his nephew, Dick Lorient, a New York society rounder, who is engaged to be married to his cousin, Dulcie Lanyon. Dick leaves to inspect his property and John Stark, the overseer, to whom the estate has been left in the event of Dick's death, conspires to gain possession of the property.

In Jamaica, Dick meets the "Woman," and in the Flame of Passion, passes through rushing waters and fires of hell. How he escapes the siren's deadly fascination and the villainous scheming of Stark is depicted herein.

PAPA'S WIFE (Two Parts).—A widower with an only son marries a widow with an only daughter. The son at college receives word that his dad has married again a younger woman. Dad and wifey widow go off honeymooning on their yacht. The son returns home and mistakes the young daughter for his mother. The daughter and girl friend keep up the joke and amusing complications follow, where this big grown-up son is lectured, coaxed, scolded by this little so-called mother, starved, sent to bed at night supperless, has a terrible night, and locked up in the cupboard, and finally, when his father and his real stepmother arrive discovers the truth, and ends in a novel and surprising way.

THE PEARL OF THE ANTILLES (Five Parts—October).—Raoul Mendoza, a famous swordsman, in order to save his daughter from the temptations of Paris, sends her to the tropical South of France, to live with an old lighthouse keeper and his wife and son. Sometime later Mendoza is stricken with illness and is advised by his doctor to take a complete rest and an immediate change of air. Mendoza decides to join his daughter in the South. Through cunning, Marquise de Bregant secures an invitation from Mendoza to join in the trip and he accepts. Meanwhile, Caprice, the daughter of Mendoza, is, quite unknown to her, loved by Jean, the son of Charcot, the old lighthouse keeper. She is also worshipped by Hannibal, an assistant at the lighthouse to Charcot, a mysterious man who was picked up on the sands, shipwrecked and never regained his memory.

Mendoza and Bregant arrive at the village and Caprice is at once attracted by Bregant. Jean is jealous, and Hannibal, when he meets Bregant, almost awakened out of his dormant lethargy, behaves in a peculiar fashion. Juliette, having followed Bregant, arrives and meets him secretly. Caprice takes Bregant over the lighthouse. There is a little lovemaking which Hannibal sees and attacks Bregant in spite of the pleadings of Caprice. During the struggle Bregant recognizes Hannibal. Bregant makes arrangements with Caprice to elope. Hannibal finds out all, tells Mendoza, but he disbelieves him. Hannibal leaves and while gazing out of the window, Bregant passes. An old negro in his way begs alms. He knocks him down; the negro rises and he fells him again and beats and kicks him mercilessly as he lies on the ground. The fight partly restores Hannibal's memory, and he returns to Mendoza and reveals the hidden past.

Two men went to South America on an exploring expedition, one was the Marquis de Bregant, the other Count Chambord. They were very successful, but particularly Chambord, who located gold mines. Bregant was, in consequence, exceedingly jealous. One day Bregant beat an old porter into insensibility. Chambord interfered, but was soon felled by Bregant, who took the latter's papers and returned to France, where he was acclaimed with high honors, giving out that poor Chambord died of fever. In the meantime, Chambord was nursed back to life by the natives, but his memory never returned and he eventually found himself upon a ship as a sailor until wrecked upon the shores of the South of France, where he remained as assistant lighthouse keeper to Charcot. As he finishes the story, Jean rushes in with the news that Bregant had gone off in his yacht and taken Caprice with him. The shock of such news is too much for Mendoza, and he is stricken with paralysis. Meanwhile, Caprice, who only consented to leave with Bregant under the promise of marriage on the boat, Bregant having told her that he had the minister, discovers that it is all a fraud.

He fails in his attempt to drug her, and when he leaves to procure assistance, she locks herself in a cabin. When they reach port, Caprice escapes with the captain's assistance. Meantime, Jean, who has come to Paris in search of Caprice, by chance, one day, meets her. He persuades her to return to her father, who forgives her for her actions. Jean locates Bregant one night in a restaurant with his paramour, and a duel is arranged for the next day. Mendoza's prayer for the return of his strength is answered, and he swears vengeance upon his enemy. In the morning Bregant arrives in the woods to fight Jean, but, to his horror and amazement, he meets Mendoza. Realizing he is doomed, he tries to avoid a fight, but is forced to it, and after a very thrilling encounter he is killed. Mendoza, Caprice and Jean then leave Paris forever to settle in the beautiful spot where Caprice spent her childhood days.

WORLD FILM CORP.

THE FAMILY CUPBOARD (Brady—Five Parts—Oct. 11).—The cast: Holbrook Blinn, Frances Nelson, John Hines.

Charles Nelson is a self-made man and has amassed a fortune. His family consists of his wife, son Kenneth, and daughter Alice. His wife has become absorbed in society, requiring all the money her husband can made to support the large establishment and entertain. The wife, son and daughter are out night after night, leaving Mr. Nelson much alone; while he pays the bills, he has little of the society of his family. He turns to Kitty Claire, a vaudeville performer, for consolation and companionship.

His son Kenneth gets into an argument with a friend at his club and hears that his father is keeping a woman in an establishment uptown. Kenneth returns home, under the influence of liquor and insults his mother's companion, Mary Burke. Mr. Nelson enters, sees the situation and asks him what it all means. Kenneth turns on him and tells him that every one knows he is keeping a woman in an apartment uptown. This conversation is overheard by Mrs. Nelson, who asks Mr. Nelson if it is true. He replies, "Yes." They agree to part. Kenneth clings to his mother. Alice, the daughter, sympathizes with her father. She realizes that it is their own fault; they have given him nothing in return for all his labor in their behalf.

Mr. Nelson is now living at the Alpine apartments, to which comes Kitty Claire. He tells her the end has come. Meanwhile Kenneth, the son, has come to see his father. Kitty, going out, hears him ask if his father is in, and seeks an acquaintance with Kenneth, who becomes infatuated with her and moves to the same hotel. Then Kenneth begins to live a Bohemian life with Kitty Claire and Dick LeRoy, another vaudeville performer. He finally asks Kitty to become his wife. She replies, "It is impossible, there was another man——." The boy, crushed and broken-hearted, demands the name of the man. Mr. Nelson enters at the point when Kenenth demands the name of the man. Kitty points to Mr. Nelson.

Humiliated and ashamed Kenenth decides to end his life. He is about to write a letter when his mother arrives, she sees the pistol and tries to keep him from carrying out his plan. They are interrupted by a knock at the door; Kenneth is called down to the office by the clerk; while he is gone Mrs. Nelson seizes the opportunity to telephone to Mr. Nelson. He arrives, with Alice, the sister. Kenneth and his father are reconciled, also Mrs. Nelson, and her husband and the family are reunited.

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN IF # THE EARTH STOOD STILL?

Frankly, we don't know. But we do know what happened to a great many theatre owners who "Stood Still"—the "Receivers" got 'em.

What would happen to "Film Producers" if they played the game as it was played five years ago, or if they failed to understand what the public want To-day?

Well, it's just so with the exhibitor. He must keep pace with the times or the "Receiver" will get him.

If you want to keep your pictures up to the standard the public demands you must install a "MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN." This wonderful screen is "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre ONLY. The "Working Conditions" of each screen are studied separately, and it takes ten days to make one.

Are you going to listen to the demands of your patrons for a screen that gives more "Picture Light" and that "Won't Tire the Eyes"? If so, send in your specifications TO-DAY.

Not "Just As Good" But "What You Want"

That's the kind of service we offer to our patrons. We furnish our patrons "WHAT THEY WANT" and do not undertake to impose by recommending something "JUST AS GOOD" or "BETTER" for the sake of extra profit, or to satisfy some other whim.

That, together with other good service accounts for the rapid growth of our business.

We have a proposition to offer to all Moving Picture Theatre Owners and Managers to increase their receipts by buying a new machine on the Instalment Plan at less than $1.00 per day.

Drop us a line for our proposition and Catalog.

J-M FIRE
EXTINGUISHER

You are buying fire protection when you buy an extinguisher. Why not get the best obtainable—this most efficient fire-fighter?

Here's an extinguisher that may be operated manually as a pump or automatically by compressed air. The latter method is of great protection when attacking fires in "hard-to-get-at" places or from cramped quarters where pumping is difficult or even impossible. Just 10 seconds' easy pumping. Then control the stream at the nozzle lever

READ THIS DISTINCTIVE FEATURE LIST

1 Operate as a pump or automatically by compressed air.
2 Sealed at both ends to discourage tampering. Shows at sight that machine is ready for use.
3 A steady stream averaging 30 feet.
4 A dielectric liquid, deadly to electrical, oil and gasoline fires. Harmless to skin and fabric.

BETTER LIGHT

LESS CURRENT

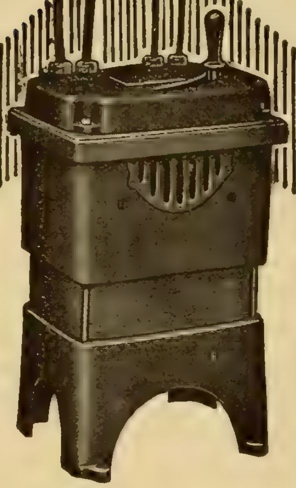
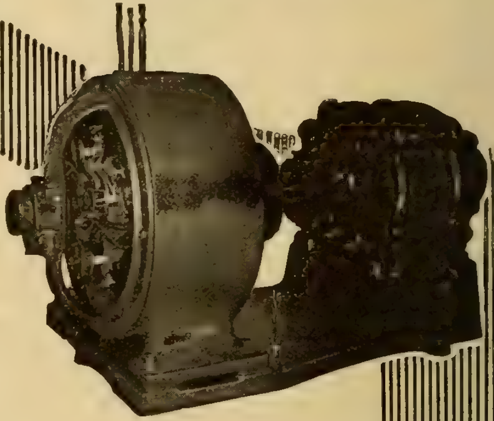
The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Henry B. Walthall Depicts Poe's Anguish Over Starving Wife

In a tumble down hut at Fordham, in the outskirts of New York City, Edgar Allan Poe sat by the bed of his dying wife.

The snow sifted through the poor patched roof and broken door, and the midnight winds swept it in drifts across the floor.

The beautiful young wife was wrapped in Poe's old army coat, her only covering. She needed warmth and food, but Poe was penniless.

In the night hours he watched his adored wife, starving, shivering with cold, until death released her.

His sensitive soul was torn with horror and despair. But his genius burned clear. Out of blood and anguish was born what has since been acknowledged as one of the greatest masterpieces of the English language—"The Raven."

Essanay has created a wonderfully artistic six act photoplay of "The Raven," founded on Poe's life as presented in the widely known novel and play by George C. Hazelton, and directed by Charles J. Brabin.

HENRY B. WALTHALL, the living image of Poe, with Warda Howard, the great emotional actress, make of this masterpiece a drama that throbs with life and intense action.

Moving Picture World--Oct. 9, 1915

"The comedy is all action—There is a pleasing absence of slapstick play—With its accessories of good photography and above-mentioned attributes of direction and cast it bids fair for a large following in leading picture houses."

Dramatic Mirror--Oct. 6, 1915

"Max Figman makes a thoroughly delightful 'Blackie Daw', and Burr McIntosh displays the suave smooth unctuousness of George Randolph Chester's mythical character in a manner so convincing that one almost imagines that he has just stepped from the pages of the book. The Whartons should be highly commended. If the following episodes are as entertaining as the first this should prove to be a mighty good and mighty profitable serial picture."

Motography--Oct. 16, 1915

"The name of any one of the three artists (Max Figman, Burr McIntosh and Lolita Robertson), announced as the featured player in a production should make it a box office attraction. Together they make a cast of unusual strength."

Motion Picture News--Oct. 9, 1915

"Burr McIntosh as 'Wallingford' and Max Figman as 'Blackie Daw' are of just the type we have imagined all these characters. The humor which is the basis of the whole picture is a refreshing relief from the slapstick sort which has played so large a part in series pictures of the past."

3 Big Reasons Why Exhibitors Are Contracting for the SOUTH AMERICAN TRAVEL PICTURES

VARIETY to your program Travel Pictures lend variety to your program, which is a necessity to attract and hold a class patronage. The big metropolitan theatres are cutting out the slap-stick, wild west one reelers, and running scenics instead. There are sound business reasons for it —people get tired of the same old thing—they want something new. Do you insure their finding it in your theatre?

INTEREST for everyone At this time everyone is interested in South America. The press is giving columns and columns of publicity. The trade searchlight is focused on South America. People are always interested in Travel Pictures. Are you capitalizing on this?

REAL VALUE Any pictures attracting new people and, best of all, that keep them coming to your theatre, are the kind of pictures which are valuable to you. Are you attracting new people by using the Paramount South American Travel Pictures?

ACTION ALL THE WAY

Every foot of Paramount South American Travel Pictures teems with action; nothing inanimate or just pretty, but big, live subjects—pulsing with life—showing the twelve republics that make up the "Great Continent of Opportunity." Every foot of film filled with action—action—action!

an extraordinary photoplay production of

Geraldine Farrar

(by arrangement with Morris Gest.)

in

"Carmen,"

produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

Newspapers of the Nation Praise Production.

Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Tribune:—
"World's Greatest Newspaper"

"One cannot do justice to 'Carmen'. It is a picture of finesse, encompassing the sincere efforts of a great player — even to the point of very rough treatment accorded the expensive person of a prima donna — of a great director and of a loyal studio support. It is no Sunday school play, this picture of the classic heart bandit. There's a plentiful showing of emotions as they are, not as they are refined by civilization and the 'what will people say' idea, but it is all done with a swift deftness that makes the point without the wearisome tediousness of other directors less artistic than Cecil de Mille."

Grenville Vernon in the New York Tribune:—

"The most interesting example of the new art of the photoplay. Miss Farrar's personality is admirably suited to the screen, and her facial expression was excellent."

Geraldine Farrar

The Denver Post:—

"It has been an eventful week in the theatres. It was the 'movies' however, that took the honors by the film appearance of Geraldine Farrar and the expensive 'Carmen.'"

San Francisco Call & Post:—

"Geraldine Farrar's 'Carmen' makes as dramatic an appeal to the eye as her voice ever did to the ear. The resolution of Geraldine Farrar, the beautiful and gifted star, to employ her talents in the attaining of success in the films is one of the greatest steps in advancing the dignity of the motion pictures. Miss Farrar's 'Carmen' in the films is the greatest triumph the motion picture has yet achieved over the speaking stage."

Geraldine Farrar a Revelation on the Screen.

Atlanta, G.a., Constitution:—

"You will never grasp the full beauty of grand opera's most celebrated star until she has enthrailed you from the screen in the witchery of 'Carmen'. Farrar, in her first attempt for the screen, has shown the faddish vampire delineator the part into the public heart. She has portrayed a Carmen that will live, because her work carries the universal appeal that takes root in the heart."

W. Stephen Bush in The Moving Picture World:—

"It goes without saying that such a 'Carmen' as that of Miss Farrar will be enjoyed and admired everywhere. The entrance into the motion picture fields of an artist of the renown and talent of Miss Farrar is bound to raise the prestige of the screen; it will benefit the industry generally."

Geraldine Farrar

Salita Solano in The Boston Traveler:—

"Miss Farrar was a fiercely sensual 'Carmen'. The picture was made with every care to detail and lighting effects. The ensemble scenes are admirably worked out. No opportunity was neglected to introduce beautiful scenic effects, those made near the ocean being especially worthy of mention."

Charles Howard in the Boston Globe:—

"Of the skill with which the pictures are posed, the excellent fitness with which each type of character was cast, the amazing daring displayed in the smuggling scenes and, above all, in the bull fight, moments of breath taking realizm and marvelous photography —of these there is nothing but the highest praise."

Lasky makes Imperishable Record of Miss Farrar's Art.

H. T. Parker, in the Boston Transcript:-

"Carmen" contains two fights as vehement and swirling as the reel have ever unrolled and adds to them the tumult of an arrest and the incidents of a bull-fight in which the bull is a lively and engaging beast. It contains also sundry scenes and ardent amorous caresses — and these fights on the one hand and those transports on the other are dear to the public of the reels."

Frederick Johns in the Boston American:-

"The photography of this picture is simply marvellous. You are lost in admiration at the beauty of the rapidly passing scenes and the effective massing of lights, shades and color effects."

Geraldine Farrar

Fresno (Cal.) Republican:-

"Farrar smashes every tradition and the filmatization shows why she eclipses the star of Calvé. But Farrar positively electrifies. She is a tearing demon, a lurking vampire, and a breaker of hearts that knows no bounds".

Leslie H. Allen in the Motion Picture News:-

"Boston has accepted the filmed 'Carmen' as more interesting scenically, more thrilling as to story, and more intense as to acting than any operatic 'Carmen', it has ever seen."

Boston Post:-

"It chilled even while it inspired."—"The first presentation of the picturization of 'Carmen' to all who witnessed it was something never to be forgotten."—

Triangle Spells Dollars to These Men

Hulsey, of Texas, doesn't think in nickels and dimes. He thinks in big sums—like a regular Texan. A hundred thousand a year won't stop Hulsey. So—his theatres in Dallas, Waco, Galveston and Houston are all in the TRIANGLE now.

And Jake Wells—everybody knows Wells. He has come into the TRIANGLE GARDEN, because he wants the best. So Richmond and Norfolk will have TRIANGLE SERVICE. Costs don't worry Wells. He's after results.

Simpson & Gordon, of Rochester, made a success of their Regent Theatre. But it wasn't big enough. Now they've bought a little insurance for more success—they've joined the TRIANGLE FAMILY.

Out in Seattle, there's a man by the name of Jensen. You'll find him at the Liberty Theater. Jensen will spend money if you can show him something worth while to spend it on. He's A TRIANGLE recruit; for nearly as much money as the President of the United States gets.

SUCCESS and TRIANGLE are interchangeable terms to these men—they investigated; then they bought. Doesn't this evidence affect you?

"THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN"

A 4-act Feature of Fast Action that Knits an Absorbing Plot of Love, Lust and Politics.

A LOVING, impulsive girl is eloping — the machine breaks down—they have to go to a nearby hotel. Then scandal, with its forked tongue, pins the girl on its fiery coals. She is helplessly caught in political machinations which are most adroitly screened, dramatically and tensely playing with the girl's life and love—but true to rotten politics and its underground methods. A real drama of feature fullness of interest, of the new Edison standard, not to be measured in mere footage. Direction Frank McGlynn. Friday, November 12.

Facts and Comments

ABOUT the rarest thing in the psychology of filmdom is the producer or director who freely confesses that not all of his creations are sempiternal and flawless masterpieces. Recently there have been such confessions. They have attracted attention by reason of their novelty and they have likewise inspired confidence as to the future productions. When a man openly acknowledges his past mistakes he is very likely to start on something exceptionally good.

SLOWLY the big men in the daily press, the real molders of public opinion, begin to see and to comment upon the dangers and follies of censorship. We have to thank the Pennsylvania censors for this valuable aid in the fight for American freedom of expression. As long as these censors confine their pernicious activity to ordinary films their absurdities excite little attention beyond the circle of those immediately affected by their rulings, but let them lay their clumsy hands on a literary classic and their silly antics at once challenge the common sense of the whole community. The Philadelphia court has a great issue before it. If time-honored classics like "Carmen" cannot pass unscathed through the ordeal of the censor's office the entire storehouse of literature and the drama is closed to the films. What unspeakable idiocy. To visualize the great works of literature for the masses is closed to the films. What unspeakable idiocy! To A hundred copies of a great classic reposing on the shelves of the library do less good than one print of a film. We confess that to us this view seems simple enough to be grasped even by Breitinger and his board of Catonian sages.

OUR congratulations to the exhibitors in Atlantic City who have won a notable victory in the courts. As their fight involves a question which has annoyed exhibitors all over the country, we feel justified in briefly presenting the facts here. A colored man was refused admission in one of the theatres. He sued for heavy damages under the Civil Rights act. This act is in force in all the Northern states. The judge before whom the case was tried held that the theater owner had a perfect right to revoke any ticket provided the revocation was not made on the explicit ground of race or color. There was no evidence that the ticket had been revoked on such grounds, and the plaintiff, of course, lost his suit. He would be a foolish exhibitor indeed who would openly base his refusal to admit a man on the ground of race or color. Under such circumstances it is next to impossible to obtain legal evidence against an exhibitor. As our correspondent says: "It cost us a little money to gain this by employing the best of counsel, but we consider it a very good investment. We are still boss of our own house." The moving spirit in the fight was Edward J. O'Keefe, one of the best known "live-wires" among the exhibitors of Southern Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania. He had the co-operation of all the other exhibitors.

NO one can study conditions in the industry today without concluding that the future must bring further and greater improvements in the science of exhibition. After all is said and done exhibition is the golden foundation of our artistic industry. It would pay the big organized groups of manufacturers to send out men from time to time to discuss improvements in exhibition with exhibitors. Attempts in this direction have been made, we believe, and have proved uniformly successful. One of the most successful and progressive exhibitors has started on a tour to exchange ideas with his colleagues in the big cities. We have no doubt good results will follow the tour of the man who has shown such talents for presenting the motion picture in novel and attractive ways.

THE exhibitors in Hudson County, New Jersey, justly complain that they have recently been made the football of petty politics. One of the most prominent of them charges some of the politicians with breaking promises solemnly made to motion picture men. The situation is clearing a little bit, but the exhibitors ought to take one great lesson to heart. They must organize. A state like New Jersey, with a strong exhibiting body, ought to count for something in the councils of the industry. There will be another batch of hostile measures in Trenton next January. Get together now.

False Compromise

By Lous Reeves Harrison

THE stage is usually a broad canvas, a big picture where many and varied characters appear, but it is seldom possible for the dramatist to say anything about them. On the other hand, the novelist may chat about his characters as much as he likes, and he occasionally brings us to his way of thinking by his clever portrayals. On the stage they must declare their own individuality, sometimes by what they do, more often by what they say and the way they say it. On the printed page there is an entirely different method of holding interest, through running commentary and quaint philosophy. The playwright brings his people before us fully developed, and it is not ordinarily of any particular consequence how they came to be so. The novelist may go into the antecedents and formative circumstances of his characters and show how they happened. Thus we have rival systems, each of which may successfully deal with a subject entirely in accord with its own principles.

Whether or not the screen offers a medium between two rival courses, involving mutual concessions, whether or not moving pictures should be considered theoretically as offering a field of compromise, they often do so in fact. Nearly all five-reel features are little more than half-hearted attempts to picture the action of a novel, with occasional incongruous diversions, or the clumsy paraphrase of a stage play. In one case, because interpretation must be made through actors, there are heavy concessions made to theatricalism. In the other case, especially where plays have had a run on Broadway, irrespective of the fact that they have run their full course, intrinsic merit is subordinated to the billboard flash.

Be it remembered—no effort is required—that the billboard flash is an essential part of the business. Few screen stories make themselves known through merit alone, and methods of distribution and exhibition are seldom favorable to gradual recognition of high values. That there be no mistake, it is fully conceded in advance that announcements intended to spread general knowledge of a prospective performance of any kind are absolutely necessary to success. That is not the point. The wrong done is that of subordinating intrinsic merit to those features of publicity which operate in the end to destroy patronage of motion-picture exhibitions. The public of last century could not be fooled all the time, and it is dangerous to fool the public of this century any part of the time.

By way of illustration—not to speak of this or that most estimable actress who has delighted graybeards in the heyday of their calfdom—let us give due consideration to the appearance of a comparatively modern stage favorite placed in the remorseless glare of amplified photography. She may not look like a Juliette with jaundice, nor stagger around like a Rosalind with rheumatism, but it can not be overlooked that it usually takes time for an actress to become famous. The same agent that makes her renowned in public report often hollows her cheeks, wrinkles her neck and even dispels that sparkling vitality of unspoiled youth so essential where the eye alone is to be charmed. The announcement that she is to appear in a screen version of her greatest past success may draw a number of people to the theater, but if her appearance is not in accord with the role, or if her performance disappointing in other respects, the audience goes away not to return quite so often.

Producers of today, no matter how capable and earnest they may be, find themselves unable to fully respond to the demand for screen stories which shall draw and, at the same time, satisfy those drawn to the exhibition. One way out, so far as featuring well-known theatrical stars is concerned, is to have them interpret roles in genuine photodramas for which they are suited in appearance and temperament. This sounds easy, but where are the plays to come from? Then there is the artiste herself to be considered. She may hold attention on the stage by the wonderful emotional qualities of her voice in parts where the stage make-up of youth is tolerated, and this makes her disagreeably insistent on similar parts in the photoplay. There is no denying that she should be cast as other screen interpreters are, according to type and general suitability. Compromise most false is that with stage products.

Then there is the animated illustration of a well-known novel. It may be wonderfully transformed by those gifted directors whose ardent imaginations turn all the dross they touch to purest gold, but such directors do not grow on every wayside bush. It is often a patient and tiresome effort to reproduce types, movement, scenes, atmosphere, costumes and all that lends to illustrative compromise. The structure of a novel is often better suited to the screen story than that of the stage play, but the author has the liberty of digressing into delightful side issues and amusing characterization, according to the mood he is in on the day he writes, whereas many unities are enforced upon the author of a successful photoplay.

There is a compromise more subtle, more effective, than any to be found in mere attempts at imitation. Literature, the drama, the purer source of creative imagination, may provide material for a fascinating screen story, but it must be one which permits of attention being concentrated on a handful of characters. From three to five are enough, and two may be better. From the web of their relations and adventures should be evolved one dominating spirit. Large groups are often effective, but characterization of different members of those groups depends on types alone. They should look their parts. To intensify a minor role, as is often done in novel and drama, is to imperil the main line of interest. The first unity is that of a single and logical line of action. Better even reiterate one theme than risk scattering attention.

Take the single theme of the drama, the single line of action developed in novelettes and the single group of characters now used in the finest examples of screen story, and quite a bunch of "Unities" may well be added, particularly a single period of time and a limited sphere of operation. It is a function of any expressive art to draw from all other similar arts, but this does not necessarily involve the absorbing art in destructive concessions. The systems and principles which make the new art a source of universal delight need not be sacrificed in reaching a combination with any of the older arts, particularly those of literature and the drama. We are a law unto ourselves, a distinct instrument in an orchestra of esthetic performance.

After the "Stars"--- What?

By W. Stephen Bush

WE are still in the days of the transmuted stars. Of course, I refer to the "stars" of the speaking stage who are capitalizing their reputation by an appearance on the screen. The bigger "stars" of the Jupiter variety are pretty well finished and even the huge supply of the lesser stars is going to give out in time. What then?

Just now many exhibitors (I am afraid altogether too many) favor the "stars." It is the "star" that books the feature. Day after day we are making new inroads into the histrionic Hall of Fame, and after we have emptied the last niche what are we going to do?

There is but one safe thing for us to do: We must go back to the pictures. We must dig. This business of selling and renting features on the strength of a name borrowed from the speaking stage cannot endure forever. It would spell ruin to the development of the motion picture if it could.

The motion picture must get back on its own proper basis. We attained wonderful success and prosperity without any aid from the speaking stage, and really in spite of it. We had no line of least resistance to make our task easy and to encourage laziness. We had to "show" the public to get them into our houses. How many features have you and I seen in these last six months that were nothing more than a lot of padding more or less skillfully wound around the reputation of some famous "star"?

Signs are not wanting that the public is getting weary of this sort of thing. They are consciously or unconsciously looking for screen originality. The "star" period has led us far afield from the true mission of the screen. That period has seriously interfered with the development of the whole dramatic possibilities of the screen. There are companies who are free from the reproach of an over-indulgence of "stars" recruited from the speaking stage, but just now they are in a minority of one or two.

It has been said that success in this art of ours has always come to those who were capable of thinking about six or twelve months ahead. Here is a chance for the producers who strive to anticipate changes in public taste. Some of these producing friends of ours seem to be floundering around just now like big fish in shallow water. Let them dig down into real screen ore. Let them make pictures that are features by reason of their screen worth and not by reason of the reputation of a "star." The art is capable of producing such features. Let us study the condensation and the wonderful dramatic strength of some of the old single reels and apply those principles to the multiple reel. This new art must evolve newer and better things all the time; it is not enough to adopt a piece of fiction or a popular play for the screen. Give all your time to the study of the visualizing powers of the screen. "Age cannot wither nor custom stale its infinite variety." Therein lies our future. We have exploited the screen in somewhat piratical fashion. We have used its great powers with a minimum of effort and then have sat down to wait impatiently for a maximum of returns. Strong commercial organization and well cut channels of distribution have aided us in the pursuit of this unsound and impossible policy. A new era is here, in which the producer will consider the power of the screen first and everything else as secondary.

Watch Your Titles

By W. Stephen Bush

THE principal of a high school in the Middle West complains in the newspapers of her city about "the miserable English in many of the titles in motion pictures." She says that she has traced the slipshod speech of many of her pupils to the motion picture screen.

I do not doubt it for a moment. With all our splendid progress in quality, we continue to neglect our titles. It is not only the occasional producer who sins against good language on the screen. I might name some companies justly noted for the quality of their features and yet utterly indifferent about the titles. Nor is bad grammar the only or the worst fault of the title builders. Bad spelling is an unpardonable offense. Worse, however, than bad grammar and bad spelling is the superfluous title. There are titles, too, that mislead and confuse rather than enlighten the spectator.

Is there any one among my readers who is not tired of "Later," "A Little Later," "Some Time After," etc., etc.? These titles are with scarcely one exception, absurd and unnecessary. The title builder erects a monument to his laziness and incompetence by resorting to these makeshifts. He puts in a title of this kind because he thinks that it might be well to throw one in on general principles. Unless a title means something and helps the spectator to understand the development of the plot, it is worse than useless, and nothing less than an imposition on the exchange, on the exhibitor, and last, but surely not least, on the public. If enough of change in the situation has taken place to call for a title, I am sure something far better than "Later" can be found. If, on the other hand, no change has developed, and the situation is practically unaltered or its change so slight that any one can follow it, the word "Later" is foolish. The spectator must be supposed to know that the action is moving forward, he needs no assurance of the fact that scene III occurs after scene II and not before. Human intelligence even of the lowest order always takes cognizance of the lapse of time.

There are selling exchanges in this city and no doubt in other cities as well that never show a picture to a prospective buyer unless it is fully titled and well titled. Buyers will say: "Oh, I know how to make allowance for the absence of titles, I just want to see what the subject is." Now, as a matter of fact, no one can make allowance for the absence of titles. Imagination cannot altogether take the place of titles. I doubt whether even Sherlock Holmes could follow an untitled feature with any satisfaction to himself.

It is quite impossible to make good titles without a lot of thought. To be slightly familiar with the general plot is not enough for the title-builder. He must absorb the play. He must take it apart and then put it together again in order to gain the requisite detailed knowledge of what the play needs in the way of titles. Titles are essentially an interruption. You are willing to be interrupted if the messenger has something of importance to tell you, but if he hasn't, you are annoyed and irritated. The exhibitor pays for the titles and pays a pretty high price for them. He is entitled to the best that skill and experience can produce. He is not getting it now.

An exhibitor in the city here wanted me to take a well-known but badly titled feature, analyze it and put it in the pillory. Some day some such drastic measure will have to be adopted to teach the title-builders a lesson.

Campaign Against Constitution

First Gun Fired in Yonkers—City Exhibitors Conduct Their Own Fight—Motion Picture Audiences Are Interested in Protecting Their Favorite Amusement.

The Reasons for Our Campaign.

KNOWING from the best possible sources the evil effects of censorship in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kansas, the Moving Picture World, together with other prominent interests in the industry, made an effort to save the motion picture in this state (New York) from censorship, and from even the possibility of censorship for at least twenty years. With this end in view, an appeal was made to the framers of the new constitution. They were asked to enfranchise the motion picture, to put it on a par with the press and to give it absolute immunity from censorship. The legislature has no right to pass any law infringing upon the liberty of the press. We wanted the same protection for the motion picture, a newer and more powerful medium of expression than the printed page. All we asked was the submission of such an amendment to the people. There is to our way of thinking no doubt whatever that the people can be depended on to rally around their favorite amusement and to protect it against narrow bigots and "grafting" politicians. The statesmen in charge of the constitutional convention made short work of the humble prayer and petition of the film men. They pulled out their watches and asked the speakers to be brief and then buried the motion picture amendment in the depth of their capacious waste basket.

Our Chance to Be Heard.

This is why the Moving Picture World has made its appeal to the exhibitors of the state; this is why we are urging all friends of the motion picture to vote against the new constitution. The appeal of the Moving Picture World fell on willing ears. Among the first to come forward with resolutions of encouragement and with demands for the special slides we had prepared for display on the screen were the organized exhibitors of the city of New York. They knew that the danger of censorship in this state was no idle dream. Their president had been one of a committee of film men who appeared in Albany to oppose the vicious and confiscatory Mitchell bill. They knew that Mitchell is running for re-election to the Assembly; that he is boasting of his new censor bill, which he threatens to "push through" at all hazards. They have therefore taken hold of things in the big city, doing all in their power to encompass the defeat of the constitution.

The Whole State Responds to the Appeal.

Hearty endorsements of the efforts of this paper on behalf of the industry came from all parts of the state, notably from the southern and western tiers. The organized exhibitors of Yonkers extendeed an invitation to W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, to begin the campaign in their city. The invitation was gladly accepted, and on Friday, October 22, Mr. Bush made brief addresses to the audiences of four of the biggest and best-known motion picture theaters in Yonkers. He spoke first in the Hamilton, then in the Square theater, next in the Riverdale, winding up at the Broadway. The visits were made between the hours of eight and ten. In each theater the audience gave close and intelligent attention to what Mr. Bush said.

"Vote Against the New Constitution."

In each theater substantially the same address was made. In each case the speaker was introduced by announcement on the slides and by appropriate remarks of the exhibitor.

"I would be ashamed of myself," said Mr. Bush to his audiences, "if I appeared here to spoil your entertainment by any reference to politics. This house is devoted entirely to your pleasure. It is to protect your favorite amusement that I am here. The motion picture in this state is in grave danger. We asked the framers of the new constitution to save the motion picture from censorship by putting it on a level with the press. These statesmen had been out of touch with popular feeling for many years probably and they failed to realize what a power the motion picture has become. They just ignored our plea. We only escaped censorship in this state by the narrowest of margins; we knew that the danger would confront us again in 1916. That's why we wanted freedom for the screen for at least twenty years. If you had seen motion pictures after the censors of Ohio and Pennsylvania had destroyed their value as an entertainment I am sure you would fight against the introduction of the system into this state. People in the censor states on passing out of the theater often stop the manager and want to know what became of the hero or the heroine; they wonder what the picture is about, and often they cannot understand the ending. The censors butcher the films until they resemble a nightmare rather than an entertainment fit for human beings. I am sure you would not care to have even your best friend tell you what is fit for you to read or see. You would resent having your newspaper cut and mutilated by the police before you are allowed to read it, and I am sure the same holds true of the screen. You know what is right and what is wrong. You don't hesitate to speak to the manager if you think a picture is objectionable. The people control the motion picture theater and if a picture is shown which offends against the law I want to see the producer and the exhibitor prosecuted to the full limit of the law. You and I believe in law and its proper enforcement, but we do not believe in censorship; it is foreign and un-American. Again, I urge you to protect your own amusement and to vote against the new constitution."

Other points in Mr. Bush's itinerary are: Albany, Schenectady, Troy, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo and many smaller cities en route.

Board of Trade Backs World Fight

Resolution Adopted by Board of Directors Emphasizes the Stand Taken by This Publication.

AT a recent meeting of the board of directors of the newly organized Motion Picture Board of Trade the following resolutions, endorsing the fight against the new constitution for the State of New York, which was started some weeks ago by the Moving Picture World, were adopted:

"RESOLVED, that the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., condemns the action of the Bill of Rights committee of the Constitution Convention, held at Albany, New York, during the months of July, August and September, for the purpose of formulating amendments to the present constitution of the state of New York, such constitution so amended to be submitted to a vote of the people this November; in refusing to report to the convention the proposed amendment, by which it was provided that the motion picture as a vehicle of thought transmission was to be granted the same liberty from legalized pro-publicity censorship, now enjoyed by the press; such action on behalf of the committee being discriminatory and contrary to the best interests of the people, in that it failed to protect them from the possibility of such censorship—the arbitrary act of the few over the many—conceived in ignorance, intolerance, prejudice or malice, and therefore, contrary to the principles of freedom and free expression of thought upon which this country is founded.

"FURTHER RESOLVED, that this association use its influence in behalf of, and in every way possible lend its encouragement and support to, the press and all other agencies in their endeavor to cause the people to reject at the polls the amendments adopted by the said convention; such rejection being thoroughly justified upon the ground that a convention so constituted as to fail to recognize that censorship is an attack upon the bulwarks of our freedom, and to protect our people from such an attack, is not of a disposition which would justify the approval of the results of its deliberations."

SPEDON AT NEW BEDFORD CLAM-BAKE.

On Sunday, Oct. 25, at New Bedford, Mass., Walter Preston, manager of the New Bedford theater, gave a clambake to a number of his personal and business friends. There is no place in the world where the bivalve is so well and temptingly cuisined as it is at this city by the sea, once famous as a whaling harbor, and it has not lost any of its prominence, as all can testify who enjoyed Walter's hospitality last Sunday. As a slight evidence of their appreciation they presented him with a 14-karat gold-headed cane appropriately inscribed.

Among those present, besides his fellow-townsmen, were: Glover Ware of Beverly, Mass., Harry Farron of Boston, John McCullough, 5th grandson of the celebrated tragedian, Mr. Fred Marsdon of Boston, Will Smith and F. W. Swett of Nicholas Power Co., and F. W. Atwater of the Precision Machine Co., Geo. Balsdon of V-L-S-E Boston branch and Sam Spedon of the Vitagraph Company.

Under the direction of Ulysses Davis the new Universal director Hobart Bosworth is working in the stellar role of "Tainted Money," a five-reel story by George E. Hall. Bosworth plays the role of Big Tim, ward politician and head of the machine.

Schools of Motion Picture Art

An Appreciative Study of Modern Dramatic Kinematography Both Here and Abroad.

By George Blaisdell.

ARTICLE III.

The Famous Players' School.

IN the three years of its existence the Famous Players Film Company has gone far. The influence of this organization was felt in the industry of motion picture production from the day of the release of its first subject. The concern entered a field where others had been pioneers and had been markedly successful. The Famous Players, however, broadly speaking, followed in the footsteps of none. It was organized as a feature company, and a feature company it has remained. To blaze a trail of its own, to venture into a field where up to that time old manufacturers had refrained from entering, to spend great sums of money on a single production, required business courage and strong faith in the future of an industry which even then some considered had reached its zenith.

Among the essentials prerequisite to the successful founding of a motion picture company are artistic and business judgment and money. To the Famous Players Adolph Zukor brought means and business judgment. Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter brought the artistic and the technical judgment. They have had many skilled collaborators.

The Stage Star Comes to the Screen.

The famous Players introduced the stage star to the screen. Those players who had been markedly successful on the boards were slow to acknowledge the legitimacy of the newer art. There was apparent a feeling that appearance before the camera somehow endangered their prestige with that smaller portion of the great public who could afford to pay two dollars or a majority fraction of it for a good seat in a theater. James K. Hackett was the first prominent American player to break the ice. He had for a precedent the appearance of the "Divine Sarah" in "Queen Elizabeth," the initial subject exploited by the Famous Players.

There have been many players who have followed Sarah Bernhardt and Mr. Hackett. Among these have been Mrs. Fiske, Madame Kalich, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick, just to name a few. It will be conceded that players of this rank and the rank of their dozens of successors who have appeared in the Famous Players subjects and under other banners have influenced the standard of screen acting. The impress of the Famous Players has been not only direct. By reason of its example, by its demonstration that motion picture exhibitors would support the manufacturer who made expensive and also good productions, many other manufacturers have entered the arena. Where three years ago there were on the screen practically no players who had attained real stellar eminence on the stage, today there are many.

Supplying the Demand for Features.

This is a situation that sooner or later was sure to come about. It must be set down to the credit of the Famous Players that it was the company which contained in its directorate the foresight to discern the trend of public taste for greater and more elaborate productions and in the development and molding of that taste to be a pioneer. To be sure, in the beginning it was the intention of the company to produce but four or five subjects a year. "The number of productions will depend wholly on circumstances," said Mr. Porter in a formal interview in November of 1912. "We have enough stars under contract now to keep us busy for a year and a half or two years. We will probably not attempt to market more than four or five of these plays a year."

The success of "The Prisoner of Zenda" was so marked that two months after Mr. Porter had made this statement Mr. Zukor was quoted as saying the program had been extended to twenty-four a year. As a matter of fact, when the Famous Players began regularly to release, September 1, 1913, thirty-six a year was the number.

Recognition of the Importance of the Story.

The influence of the Famous Players on dramatic kinematography has been great in the department of the feature; it has been subtle in the field of art in acting; and it has been marked in the realm of stagecraft—in the work that comes within the jurisdiction of the stage artist, whether painter or "carpenter." Perhaps greater than all of these has been its influence on the side of the story—its ready recognition of the vital importance of the plot and its readiness to spend money to recompense the author.

Three years ago the standard of screen acting was high in many companies or at least in a goodly number. Anyone acquainted with conditions at that time readily will call to mind splendid players who had spent the greater part of their lives on the stage under great artists. Yet there were some of the younger players who had attained a success on the screen that was incomprehensible to their older associates. The work of the men and women who have been highly successful on the stage has been an example to the younger players and a vindication of the advice of the older and experienced men and women. Not all stage stars have been successful before the camera, but the exceptions have proved the rule.

Attitude of Audiences Convinced Company It Was on Right Road.

So it is in the larger way that the Famous Players company has been a factor in the elevation of kinematography. The company has been successful, but it has been because it has hewed to the line it marked out in the beginning. "We are building on a permanent basis," said President Zukor nearly three years ago. "We have tried to be consistent throughout," he said the other day. "Our early returns were not encouraging—that is, from exchangemen and exhibitors. It was by watching the audiences and seeing how they enjoyed the productions that we knew we were right. The exhibitors at first fought shy of the price. We felt, however, that sooner or later every progressive exhibitor would want to give his patrons the best he could get."

We have referred to the care given by the Famous Players to the selection of the story. Weekly meetings are held at which all the directors dissect the script next to be placed in a director's hands. Here sit in judgment Messrs. Porter, Hugh Ford, J. Searle Dawley, James Kirkwood and Sidney Olcott, Scenario Editor William H. Clifford and frequently Mr. Zukor.

Daniel Frohman's Stage Associations Have Meant Much to the Company.

Mr. Frohman was one of the organizers of the company. He has been an active worker. Naturally by reason of his lifelong prominence in the stage world he has had facilities for the securing of stars; through his association with his brother Charles, which was maintained up to the untimely death of the latter, and through his closer connection with Frohman affairs since then, he has been able to bring to his company the best of the stage successes. His advice has been of the greatest importance not only in what has been worthy of screen adaptation, but even more so in pointing out those which should be left alone.

Porter and Ford Make Strong Combination.

Edwin S. Porter, producing manager, also one of the founders of the company, may be said to have been in at the birth of dramatic kinematography. With the Edison company he directed the making of "The Life of a Fireman" and "The Great Train Robbery," the first screen subjects carrying a dramatic story, so far as now known. Much water has flowed under the bridges between the appearance of these and the making of "The Eternal City," which Mr. Porter directed in collaboration with Mr. Ford.

The acquisition of Mr. Ford has been an element of strength. Mr. Ford brought to his new associates a reputation ranking with the highest in the field of stage production. As an illustration it was he who staged "The Garden of the Gods," a big spectacle; "The Yellow Ticket," a great drama; "Potash and Perlmutter," a farce comedy. These three of themselves give an idea of his versatility. It goes without saying he is an authority on the art of acting. Since joining Mr. Porter he has been a keen student of the dramatic technique of the screen.

There is another member of the Famous Players' directing force whose skill counted strongly in the success of the concern. That is J. Searle Dawley, who during the first year and before his temporary retirement from the staff had much to do. Benjamin Schulberg, who, until multiplying business responsibilities recently compelled him to relinquish the duties of scenario editor, also by his judgment and ability in the selection and preparation of stories was a factor in the success of the company.

Ability plus team work spells the success of a motion picture producing company. These the Famous Players' company has had in high degree.

Ham in the Hospital

But Not in a Comedy Role—'Twas the Real Thing in "Straight" Character.

"JUST a week or two more, Nurse" Lloyd V. Hamilton is saying to the young woman at his right, "and this old leg of mine will be as good as ever!"

Which comes as happy news to exhibitors who, unaware of the painful accident which befell the principal fun-maker of Kalem's "Ham" Comedies, have been wondering why clumsy, good-natured Ham has not appeared in these pictures lately.

Ham in the Hospital.

While taking part in one of the laugh-provokers bearing his name, Ham tripped in descending a steep embankment and rolled to the bottom. When the rest of the company hastened to the scene, it was discovered that the player had sustained a compound fracture of the leg.

According to Hamilton, the accident was caused by the ungainly shoes which have played so important a part in bringing the laugh wrinkles to the faces of the photoplay patrons. Since he figures that these shoes have resulted in a loss of about $25,000, the comedian has decided to discard them and return to the somewhat smaller footgear which he wore when making his first appearance in the "Ham" pictures.

Bud Duncan has been a regular visitor to the hospital where Ham's injury is being treated, and no one has been more anxious to see the comedian get back into harness than he. According to one of the nurses, Bud recently remarked to his partner:

"Since you've been laid up, we haven't had a man who could kick me as artistically as you can!"

Incidentally, the accompanying illustration is of special interest in that it shows, for the first time, what Ham looks like minus make-up. It is a fact that Hamilton has always refused to sit for "straight" portraits. Bud, who was associated with Hamilton prior to the latter's entry into motion pictures, is the authority for the statement that Ham refused to be photographed other than in his make-up even while on the stage.

UNITY COMPANY LEASES OXFORD THEATER.

The Unity Amusement Company, Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y., has leased the Oxford theater at Flatbush avenue and State street, Brooklyn, from Percy G. Williams, for a term of ten years. After extensive alterations the Oxford will be reopened as a first-class photoplay house. Oscar Muller and Samuel Schwartz are president and treasurer, respectively, of the leasing company, and they own the West End theater at New Utrecht avenue and Fifty-second street, Borough Park, Brooklyn.

MAYWOOD OPENS THE SHERIDAN.

Samuel Maywood opened his moving picture theater, the Sheridan, on October 18. This is an $18,000 structure and is situated at 3058 Chartiers avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. The seating capacity is 400, and the admission prices are five and ten cents.

Society Leaders in Pictures

Essanay's "The Crimson Wing" Contains Motion Pictures of Chicago's "Four Hundred."

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces the release of an extra six-act feature photoplay on the V-L-S-E program. It has been completed some time and now is ready for booking. It comes in as a "special," the regular plays of one each four weeks being released as usual.

The extra is "The Crimson Wing," dramatized from the widely-known novel of that title, written by Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, Chicago and Washington society leader and litterateur. It is a strong drama of war and romance, and the scenes are laid on the present battle line between Germany and France.

While it portrays with striking vividness the terrors and heroism of war, it is strictly neutral, taking sides with no faction. It ends with a touching love scene, uniting a man and woman of opposing nations. The drama is presented in a manner that not only gives offense to none, but makes the heart go out in sympathy to all the battling nations and yearn for a permanent peace.

Exceptional interest is attached to the photoplay because of society leaders, national and world characters, who take part in it. Garden and villa scenes were taken on the grounds and in the homes of Chicago's wealthiest citizens, including Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, the author, Harold and Cyrus McCormick, Orville Babcock, Edward S. Moore, James Ward Thorne, Scott Durand and Howard Shaw. The majority of these persons with their wives and families, as well as other society leaders, appear in the play.

Mr. Moore, vice-president of the Rock Island Railroad, takes the part of a chauffeur in one scene. He is dressed in army uniform and drives his own $14,000 car. Wallace Rice, author and playwright, also takes a part in the play.

Several hundred feet of the film were taken in France on the border line of Germany, showing the French army in maneuvers and commanded by General Joffre, the head of the French army.

The photoplay is directed by E. H. Calvert, a West Point man, who has seen fourteen years of service in the U. S. army. Mr. Calvert also takes the leading role with Miss Ruth Stonehouse.

The story itself is replete with dramatic situations, human interest, details of love, intrigue and war, and the settings are so gorgeous that it lends itself peculiarly to photographic art. The battle scenes, while spectacular, are small enough so that detailed action is noted.

Mr. Chatfield-Taylor, who is thoroughly familiar with the historic European battleground, was present throughout the entire work of producing the play, and assisted Capt. Calvert in its direction.

NORTH TARRYTOWN'S NEW THEATER OPENED.

The Pollock theater at North Tarrytown, N. Y., was opened on October 7 to good business. Something like 1,000 persons were entertained at the shows which were given on the opening evening. The admission prices are ten cents for adults and five cents for children. Matinees are given every Saturday afternoon at 3:15, when the admission price for the entire house is five cents. Supervisior John J. Sinnott, an official of North Tarrytown, spoke at the dedication of the theater, and the tenor of his address was to the effect that the Pollock was a handsome realization of the enterprise of one of the leading citizens of that place and bespoke confidence in the public that they would support such a high-class addition to their town. The stage was prettily decorated with American flags and flowers.

NEW HOUSE AT HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

The Orpheum Theater Company of Huntington, W. Va., will erect on a lot adjoining the Elks Club in that city a $7,500 moving picture theater. The building will occupy a plot of ground 60 x 200 feet. The Orpheum is the name of the new structure, and it will have a seating capacity of 1,600. It will be one story in height and will be constructed of fireproof material. The exterior and interior architecture of the Orpheum will place it in the class of handsome structures in Huntington. The officers of the Orpheum Theater Company are Geo. C. Kolb, president; F. A. Gartlein, treasurer, and G. C. Sullivan, secretary and manager. These are all experienced business men and they expect to have the theater opened about the middle of December next.

Pallas Pictures to Make Debut

"The Gentleman from Indiana," Starring Dustin Farnum and Directed by Frank Lloyd—A Big Production.

THE subject with which the newly organized Pallas Pictures will make its debut to the patrons of Paramount theaters throughout the country will be Booth Tarkington's well-known drama, "The Gentleman from Indiana," starring Dustin Farnum and produced under the direction of Frank Lloyd, the young expert who in this elaborate offering proves himself to be one of the most able directors in this country today. With the assistance of Technical Director Earl Sibley at the head of a small army comprising the technical force and Dal Clawson in charge of the cameramen, Chief Director Lloyd is staging a subject that will create more than ordinary interest.

Part of the Town Built for "The Gentleman from Indiana."

Part of the large premises of the Pallas Pictures plant has been turned into a small town of true Hoosier type. This in itself was a big undertaking. Countless wagon-loads of dirt had to be hauled to present typical rural streets, and buildings of every description had to be built, including a courthouse, church, post office, printing establishment, town hall and numerous other village structures. To secure a rainstorm effect at night—in rainless California—Chief Director Lloyd had to use over 14,000 gallons of water, every gallon of which had to be hauled by auto trucks from a well three miles away. An entire circus had to be transferred to the Pallas Pictures property where elephants, women bareback riders, clowns and all the essentials that go to make up a popular organization of this kind were included in a monster parade followed by a show. A whirlwind political campaign, with stump speeches, together with torchlight processions, as in the days of old in the middle west; a thrilling storm at night, with buildings rocking in the wind and sheets of water washing down the window-panes of the Main street stores; the same rainstorm in a grove of cedars where was enacted the famous Booth Tarkington lightning flash when Harkless was captured by the Whitecaps; and many other big scenes, ending finally with a terrific mob battle and the destruction of the entire town go to make up a series of events quickly following one another that will make this production one of importance in the film industry.

A Picturesque Mountain Scene from the "Call of the Cumberlands."

Another feature of the photoplay will be the staging of an actual game of football in the historic athletic stadium of the University of Southern California. The powerful eleven of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, supported by their hardly less stalwart "scrubs" furnish the background for Dustin Farnum's spectacular reproduction of a 105-yard run through a broken field for a touchdown.

Director Lloyd has spent considerable time in securing the desired types of the story, with remarkable result. Despite the fact that many scenes included over five hundred people, his painstaking care in selecting the cast will readily receive its reward when the general effect is seen on the screen.

About Dustin Farnum little need be said. His popularity extends from shore to shore, and a more favorite screen idol would be difficult to select. Opposite him appears his well-known leading woman, Winifred Kingston, the remainder of the cast including such artists as Herbert Standing, Joe Ray, C. Norman Hammond, Signor Juan de la Cruz, Howard Davies, Page Peters and Elsie Cort.

Immediately following the completion of its initial subject Pallas became active on its second subject, an adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's well-known romantic drama, "The Call of the Cumberlands."

For the Cumberland mountain scenes the entire company has been taken up to the Thousand Pines, a favorite elevation for California mountain climbers and called by them "the rim of the world." It is in the heart of the famous Bear Valley country, whose mountain lakes are exquisitely Swiss and whose scenic charms, its 2,000 feet precipices and canyons are known to painters all over the world.

Supporting Dustin Farnum in "The Call of the Cumberlands" is an exceptionally strong cast including such well-known screen favorites as Myrtle Stedman, Winifred Kingston, Herbert Standing, Page Peters, Howard Davies, Dick Le Strange, Joe Ray and Virginia Foltz, the well-known Los Angeles society woman who in this production returns to her former love, the drama.

Biograph Goes Early to Coast

Management of Company Desires to Avoid Beginning Work in the Rainy Season.

THE Biograph playing forces will leave New York for Los Angeles at 10 o'clock in the morning of October 30. The start will be from the Lackawanna station in Hoboken, and the special train of eighteen all-steel cars will travel over the Lackawanna, Grand Trunk and Santa Fe lines. There will be 130 persons in the party. The arrival is scheduled for November 3.

One of the officers of the company explained that the early departure did not indicate any radical change of policy. The arrival of the company in Los Angeles two months ahead of the customary date simply meant that the company desired to have everything in working order before the beginning of the rainy season. Last year the company ran into the middle of it when it got to the coast just after New Year's.

During the absence of the Biograph playing forces in the west the big studio in the Bronx will be occupied by the companies of George Kleine.

NATATORIUM TO BE PICTURE THEATER.

The Lorelei Natatorium on the north side of Olive street, west of Taylor avenue, St. Louis, Mo., is being remodeled into a moving picture theater under the auspices of the Gertrude Amusement Company of that city, which has a ten-year lease on the building. The place will be handsomely decorated and it is estimated that the auditorium will seat 1,400. There will be thirty-four loges, and each will seat eight persons. The photoplay house will be known as the Lorelei Feature Playhouse. The Gertrude Amusement Company will also take a long lease on property directly across the street from its Lorelei theater, upon which it will erect a big airdome to be operated during the summer months.

ADDITION TO ALASKA EMPRESS CIRCUIT.

Captain A. E. Lathrop, owner of the Alaska Empress Circuit of picture theaters in Valdez, Alaska, has opened the New Empress theater in that city. A. H. Pinkus, an experienced picture man, is the manager. The house has a plate-glass front. A Power's 6A machine has been installed.

Under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, Harry Carey is making his first five-reel western Universal feature, "A Knight of the Range." Practically all of the exteriors have been completed, and the company is making ready for the production of the interior scenes.

"Vim" on the General Program

New Brand of Comedies Promised to Scintillate with Pep and Ginger—First Release Nov. 12.

ON November 12 a new brand of comedy will be born on the General Film program, where new brands are by no means common. The event therefore assumes more than ordinary importance and the success of Vim Comedies will be carefully followed by all who are interested in motion picture activities. A one-reel Vim Comedy every Friday—each a guaranteed laugh getter and quite out of the ordinary, is the promise of those who are responsible for the undertaking. That the promise is not a rash one is assured by the well-known personnel of those who are guiding these comedies, so it is safe to prophecy that Vim Comedies are here to stay as a permanent and important integral of the General Film program.

Louis Burstein.

Louis Burstein, who has gained no little respect as a producer, is director-general of the Vim pictures which are being produced for the Melies Manufacturing Company. Mr. Burstein is well known to filmdom and is the type of man who brings success to whatever it may be that he undertakes. He is endowed with exceptional executive ability and, as an organizer in the past, has attained enviable results.

When Adam Kessel, Jr., and Charles O. Baumann formed the New York Motion Picture Company, Mr. Burstein was a quarter owner and secretary and vice-president until he disposed of his interests in that company. His pioneer work there paved the way later for the inauguration of Keystone Comedies, which have become world famous.

Burstein's next organizing triumph was with the Reliance productions which were launched by him. During the early days of that concern he had full charge of all the Reliance releases.

Bobby Burns.

Walt Stull.

Burstein later became affiliated with the Wizard Motion Picture Corporation and was responsible for the popularity gained by the Wizard Films released through the programs of the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Picture Company.

A man with set ideas, gifted with a great amount of originality and keen foresight, Burstein is a valuable asset to the ultimate success of Vim Comedies.

"I have studied the problem of how to produce good comedies thoroughly," says Burstein, "and into Vim films I am putting the entire result of my studies and experiences. I say 'the problem of good comedies' because it is a problem. It is much harder to make people laugh than to make them cry, but nevertheless I have resolved that every Vim release shall be a sidesplitter. This is the prescription I am following that I think will make Vim Comedies speedily triumph: First of all, every one of our comedies must have a plot. Although slapstick in nature, we must not insult the intelligence of our audience by making the film a hodgepodge. We are going to demonstrate that slapstick comedies can have plot. Secondly, our comedies must be clean. We will not tolerate vulgarity. There will be nothing in the picture that one need be ashamed to laugh at.

Pokes and Jabbs in "Midnight Prowlers."

"We will hire only the best of talent and will spare no expense in the making of the film. We consider that stinting in the production of a picture is acting on the principle of penny wise and pound foolish. In short, our comedies will be high class and clean and (most important of all) really funny."

Heading a long list of funmakers are the inimitable "Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull, who will be remembered as the creators of the famous "Pokes and Jabbs" series. With their appearance in Vim Comedies Burns and Stull will renew these two popular characterizations with an entirely new line of comedy stories and caperings.

"Walt" Stull, who takes the part of Mr. Pokes, began his theatrical career in stock. Starring in Philadelphia in 1894 with the Forepaugh Stock Company, Stull instantly achieved local popularity and left his first engagement to take the leading stock roles at the Girard Avenue theater, Philadelphia. After being a matinee idol there for many years, Stull went on the road as a co-star of Emma Bunting, followed by several seasons as the juvenile in a dramatic company headed by Creston Clark. In 1907, Stull decided to strike out for himself, and for two seasons headed the Walter H. Stull Stock Company. An attractive offer at this time by the Lubin Company lured him from the footlights to the camera. For a while he played the "heavy" for Lubin until a wise director saw that Stull's forte lay in comedy roles which, from that time on he consistently assigned to Stull.

It was while playing comedy for Lubin that he first met "Bobbie" Burns. The latter had made his stage debut as an acrobatic comedian playing all the leading vaudeville houses of Europe and America. At the completion of his vaudeville engagement he played for three seasons in the original "Babes in Toyland" company and later in "The Wizard of Oz." In 1909 Burns had a leading acrobatic part in Ziegfeld's Follies. From the Follies Burns entered filmdom, first with Selig and then with Lubin.

After being with Lubin some little time, Burns and Stull left Lubin to join the Reliance as author-directors. It was at this time that Burstein was connected with the Reliance productions, and it was then that the three put their heads together to create a more satisfactory, more unique and more original line of comedy.

A three hundred and fifty pounder, "Babe" Hardy by name, has also been engaged for Vim Comedies. Ethel Burton, a vivacious and pretty ingenue; "Spook" Hanson, a former Hippodrome clown, and Edna Reynolds, a popular stock favorite, are other leading members of the "Pokes and Jabbs" array. Director-General Burstein is at present negotiating with several other promising favorites, and the result of these negotiations will be announced later.

Early next week Burns and Stull, in company with 14 other Vim members, will leave New York for tropical Florida, which will be the winter headquarters of the Vim players.

Over a dozen of this new "Pokes and Jabbs" series are already completed and ready for release, so there will be no hitch or postponement in the Vim Company's plans.

The first release is entitled "The Midnight Prowlers." The report of burglars in the neighborhood has frightened Mr. and Mrs. Jabbs and, unbeknown to each other, each has hired a detective. This, in itself, would be enough complication, but the plot is made even more ludicrous by the antics of the cat who, trying to get out of the house for a midnight prowl, upsets the vase and creates other general havoc, which leads all hunting for the "burglar."

Pokes and Jabbs in "A Pair of Birds."

This will be followed on November 19 by "A Pair of Birds," where Pokes and Runt are in jail. They escape in a most unique way, but after their many mishaps they finally surrender to the guards, glad of the protection of the striped suits and stone walls.

"Pressing Business," the third release, will follow on November 26. A man with one suit of clothes decides they need a pressing. He stays in bed while they are at the tailor's but, horror of horrors, the tailor's shop burns down while his clothes are there. His efforts to get a new suit furnish comedy a-plenty.

The preceding brief sketches show that there are great possibilities for fun in these releases, and it may be assumed that each opportunity will be made the most of in light of the experienced and responsible backing these comedies will receive. With Louis Burstein, that capable organizer and producer, as director-general, with clever comedians like Burns and Stull in the leads, with no expense being spared to make these comedies come up to the very highest standard of this class of film, and with their release on the General Film Program, it is safe to predict long life and prosperity for Vim Comedies.

IKE McMAHON WINS FIRST PRIZE.

I. W. McMahon, a well-known moving picture and theatrical man of the firm of McMahon & Jackson, took the first prize in the automobile parade held in Norwood Saturday, October 16, against over 200 beautifully decorated cars. His car was covered with white folded crepe paper, decorated all over with lavender roses. Suspended on three long nickel-plated rods were three large white doves. Trailing from the doves' mouths and back to an extra high arranged seat on the rear of the car to Baby Gladys McMahon, who was supposed to be driving the doves, and the doves supposed to be flying with the machine.

A REAL MYSTERY PLAY BY EDISON.

The Edison feature, "The Mystery of Room 13," in which Marc MacDermitt is featured, is one of the most puzzling plays ever seen on the screen. So clever has Lee Arthur, the noted dramatist, woven the web that each one seeing it is so sure that he or she knows the guilty man they are willing to wager on it. But the amusing part—and the fascinating feature of it—is that there are four or five different conjectures. It is a splendid type of play that the screen needs which shows altogether too many plots, both weak and familiar.

First "Stingaree" Picture

Kalem Announces the Initial Production in $10,000 Series.

THE new $10,000 series from the pen of E. W. Hornung, the English author, famous as the creator of "Raffles" and "Stingaree," has been announced by the Kalem Company and the first episode will be released on Wednesday, November 24. The series which deals with the adventures of "Stingaree," a gentleman-bandit of the Australian bushes, with a code of morals peculiar to himself, will also be released simultaneously in its story form to the newspapers of the United States and Canada, the fiction rights having been secured from Charles Scribner's Sons. Arrangements have been made by the Kalem Company whereby several hundred newspapers will publish the series.

While the series will be known under the general title of "Stingaree," each episode will also have an individual title, the first one being "An Enemy of Mankind." The first episode, which, like its succeeding ones, is in two reels, is in the nature of a prologue, and while not directly written by Mr. Hornung, was inspired by his work.

For several months, the Western Kalem Company, at Glendale, Cal., has been engaged in making this series, under the direction of James W. Horne, and the role of "Stingaree" was intrusted to True Boardman, who is noted for his expert horsemanship. Mr. Boardman also is a crack rifle shot, and full opportunity to display his talents has been given him in this role.

The opening scenes are in England and show Irving Randolph, later known in Australia as "Stingaree" in his home life. Through a series of rapidly moving events he becomes the victim of his unscrupulous younger brother, Bob.

Bob has become enmeshed in a flirtation with a married woman and confronted by a thoroughly aroused husband is only saved with the timely arrival of "Stingaree."

Each episode is complete in itself, but throughout the stories a strong love interest has been woven that is sure to have its appeal.

True Boardman as "Stingaree."

"Stingaree" marks a departure in motion pictures, and one that is a long step in advance of anything that has gone heretofore.

NANCE O'NEIL SIGNS WITH LUBIN.

Through the earnest efforts of Messrs. Singhi and Lowry of the Lubin Company, Nance O'Neil, the great American emotional actress, has been persuaded to abandon her contemplated theatrical tour and has signed a contract with the Lubin Company for her appearance in a series of feature pictures to be released through the V-L-S-E, Inc., offices.

GEORGE KLEINE MOVES TO UPTOWN STUDIO.

George Kleine's executive headquarters will remove to the big uptown studio at 805 to 813 East 175th street, on or about Nov. 1. The office at 11 East 14th street will be closed, all departments, including the auditing, advertising and scenario, removing to the new address. Correspondence should be addressed after Nov. 1 to 805 East 175th street, New York.

Anna Held Comes to the Screen

Famous Queen of Musical Comedy Enters into Contract with Oliver Morosco Company.

WE are to have Anna Held on the screen. The internationally famous queen of musical comedy will leave New York on November 3 for Los Angeles, where for three weeks she will be at the studio of the Oliver Morosco company. Mr. Morosco secured the signature of Miss Held to a contract a few hours after her arrival from France last week. It was her first visit to the United States in nearly two years. She was in France at the breaking out of the war and has remained there, contributing her utmost to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded. Miss Held has lived much in this country. She has played in all the larger cities. Among the more prominent pieces in which she has been seen are "A Parlor Match," "La Poupee," "Papa's Wife," "The Parisian Model," "Miss Innocence" and "The College Widower."

Anna Held.

Perhaps no actress has been more written about in the press of the country than has Miss Held. Who does not remember that famous story about the milk baths she was wont to take? The instantaneous and continuing success of that weird creation has been the envy and likewise despair of every man and woman who may have since drawn salary as a press agent. Then there was the song that set forth "I just can't make my eyes behave."

When a World man called on Miss Held at the Plaza this week he found the star in consultation with Captain Leslie Peacocke, who is preparing the script for the production in which she will be seen. The petite singer is full of the subject which is engrossing so much of the attention of the world—the war. Her interest, however, was on the side of the wounded, of the hospitals and ambulances. In entertaining these she had very soon discovered that what these men wanted was something to make them laugh—to forget. The blind men, especially, were slow to mirth; nothing apparently could break the grip of their affliction. So the singer composed a laughing song. It brought smiles to the faces of the sightless.

Replying to a question Miss Held said she had long been interested in motion pictures. "I love them," she said. "The picture is a great entertainment. Do I go to see photoplays? Indeed, yes, three times a week, wherever I am. You know in France during the war the picture theaters are the only places where the people rush, they are the only establishments in an amusement way where money can be made. The stage is handicapped because every one is in a serious mood—you can't show joy. Every one is in mourning, money is not circulating, there is no employment for good actors. The players who are working are paid very little. Every one is waiting for victory.

"When the first wounded men came to us early in the war every one was very patriotic—put up flags, sang patriotic songs. I thought those poor men had seen enough of war, they wanted joy. I composed a very sweet song, where the soldiers could follow me in the chorus. I gave out five or six thousand copies of the chorus. When I saw how much they enjoyed it I composed a laughing song. No fortune, no necklace of pearls, could give me the deep pleasure I felt as I saw the laughter in the faces of those pathetic figures—and they would continue laughing for five minutes. Sad experiences? Yes. One man just from the operating room, broken to pieces and dying, insisted that he be carried in where he could hear the singing. And I had to keep on with the laughing song."

Miss Held is at the Palace this week. She will travel west by way of Chicago, where she said she would stay one day. The newcomer to the screen inquired as to the length of the trip from Chicago, and when told it might be nearly three days, there was a simulation of terror in the great eyes so well known to theatergoers. "I shall have a special train, anyway," she said. Miss Held's contract calls for her presence at the studio for three weeks. "And it will be a thousand dollars for each day beyond that," explained the player.

Lubin Stars to Give Show

It Will Be for the Aid of the Beneficial Association—Hitchcock and Reeves Head the Bill.

THE Lubin Annual Beneficial Association will give its second entertainment, which will consist of a Halloween dance preceded by a nine-act all-star vaudeville show, on the evening of Monday, November 1. Lulu Temple, Philadelphia, is the place. The talent will comprise the best in Lubinville. It will include, among others, Raymond Hitchcock (and Ferdinand Singhi has promised or threatened to accompany the "inimitable" on the piano), Billy Reeves, Richard Buhler, Edward McKim, Carrie Reynolds, Octavia Handworth, Peter Lang, Walter Law, Kempton Greene, Bartley McCullom and Earl Metcalfe.

Donald Clifford Scott, secretary of the association, has been in New York in the interest of the souvenir program, which will be published for the occasion. He said every effort was being made to equal if not eclipse the first entertainment, which consisted of a presentation of "Fifty Miles from Boston," and which was described by the critics as the equal of the Broadway production.

The association, for membership in which all Lubin employes are eligible, began business on March 25 last. The term will close on December 9, at which time the funds in the treasury will be divided pro rata. The dues are 25 cents a week. Sick benefits are paid at the rate of $7 a week for seven weeks and there is a death insurance of $50. In spite of the fact that $500 has been disbursed in benefits the dividends to members will exceed the sums they have paid in in dues. This somewhat unusual situation is owing to the hearty manner in which Philadelphians support the association's entertainments.

ROCK ISLAND GETS BEAUTIFUL THEATER.

When the Spencer Square theater of Rock Island, Ill., throws open its doors for formal dedication, the latter part of October, Rock Island, Ill., will boast of one of the most elaborate and costly motion picture play houses in Illinois. Mrs. Fiske will open the house in "Vanity Fair." The owners, H. H. Treffer and Carl Miller, are preparing in their theater a magnificent setting for the forthcoming seven-reel Kleine-Edison production. Something like $100,000 is being expended on the Spencer Square theater, the site being that of the old Family theater, once used as a vaudeville house.

The interior design of the Spencer Square theater is to be in Italian Renaissance with pilasters and frieze, highly ornamented. The stage will have a colonnaded pavilion on each side of the screen, surrounded by groups of fountains and statuary. The two rear exits will be approached by balustraded stairs and two of the boxes will be reached from these stairs.

The orchestra will be put in a pit, thus being out of vision of the audience. There will be a gradual slope in the balcony and it will have in front four boxes, each seating ten persons. The front of the building will be in matt glaze terra cotta and polychrome in a Venetian palace design, while a marquise of ornamental iron will extent across the sidewalk.

The Spencer Square theater is to have the most modern system of ventilation, supplying 25 cubic feet of fresh air to each person per minute. The theater will seat about 1,000 persons.

WILL RISING'S MOTHER DIES.

Will S. Rising, the noted actor-singer and dean of moving picture producers, mourns the loss of his mother, Mrs. Carrie E. Rising, who passed away on the 19th at Lancaster, Ohio, aged 90 years. She was the daughter of Lucretia Troth and niece of Rev. James Finley, a Wesleyan missionary, who spent his life among the Indians, the early part of the last century. She survived her husband, Philip Rising, a Mexican war veteran, six years, who passed away at the age of 85. The Rising homestead stands between General Sherman's and his father-in-law's, Thomas Ewing, first Secretary of Interior.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

STARTING THINGS IN KANSAS.

Big Convention at Pittsburg Forms New Organization of Motion Picture Men to Fight Censorship.

THE largest, most remarkable and enthusiastic convention of exhibitors and exchange men that has ever been held in the state of Kansas, was held at Pittsburg, Kan., October 18 and 19. The convention was remarkable not alone for the attendance, which was larger than any convention heretofore held in the state, but for the radical and unique departure from the former methods of doing business.

For several years it has been felt by the leading exhibitors of the state that the exchange men should take an active part in all work that is intended to benefit the business in general. To get the support of the exchangemen it logically followed that they must be organized with the exhibitors. The result was the formation of an organization that is unique in the history of the film business, and which promises to give to Kansas the distinction of being the first state in the Union that has perfected an organization that is capable of promoting a consistent fight against the present unjust censorship laws. This organization is to be known as the Amusement Association of Kansas.

The formation of this association does not necessarily mean that the Kansas Branch of the Exhibitors' League will be dissolved. However, appearances indicate that most of the members of the league rather than carry the expense of both will drop it and take out membership in the new association.

The constitution of the league is unique and credit for it is due E. C. Mills, of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Mills has had considerable experience along this line, having fostered similar organizations in Texas and Oklahoma. It follows:

WHEREAS, The theatrical and amusement interests of the state of Kansas, recognizing the need of unity of action and organization in the consideration of such matters as affect their enterprises, and for the general upbuilding, protection and development thereof, in any and every manner or connection, do hereby organize and constitute The Amusement Association of Kansas, the principal office of which shall be at such city as shall be selected by the Executive Committee thereof, and set forth the following Declaration of Principles:

1st.—We favor in every branch and department of the business of public amusement a policy of clean, honorable, honest and ethical practice, and of fair dealing in all relations with the public and with each other.

2nd.—We utterly condemn the exhibition at any time or place of any lewd, indecent, suggestive or immoral play, act, performance or motion picture film, and pledge this Association and its membership to the active and energetic suppression of any such play, act, performance or motion picture film.

3rd.—This Association stands pledged and committed to a constant effort to improve and elevate the business of public amusement, to improve and upbuild the quality of public exhibitions given by its membership, and places in which they are held or given.

4th.—We favor protecting our membership against fraududent action or practice, against impostors and impositions of whatever nature.

ELIGIBILITY TO MEMBERSHIP.

Owners, proprietors, stockholders, lessees, managers, partners and employees in or of theaters of all classes, film exchanges, film or vaudeville booking agencies, scenic studios, motion picture supply concerns, theatrical seating concerns, baseball and summer park and airdome enterprises, and all kindred and allied concerns, and others having a financial interest in the business of public amusement, subject to the action of the Membership Committee.

The foregoing brief outline was adopted and officers were elected under its provisions as follows:

President, Carl Mansing, Leavenworth; vice-president, W. H. Willey, Mulberry; secretary, J. E. Poland, Kansas City; treasurer, William Meyn, Kansas City; executive committee: chairman, E. R. Pearson, manager of Kansas City office, V-L-S-E; H. K. Rogers, Marion; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; Charles Hardin, Kansas City.

The secretary is to be paid a salary that will permit him to attend to the affairs of the association at all times. Roadmen of the various exchanges are to be given life membership upon securing the applications of five exhibitors with the fees. This corps of travelers will visit exhibitors constantly.

The initiation fee has been fixed at five dollars and the dues are four dollars per year. Exchanges pay at the rate of one dollar per release per year, on the basis of a stated number of releases on each program.

Such, briefly is the outline of the new organization in Kansas.

The first session of the convention was opened on Monday morning, October 18, by W. B. Moore, president of the Kansas League, and a discussion on the question of censorship was launched at once. E. R. Pearson, V-L-S-E branch manager; P. J. Concannon, secretary of the league; Charles Hardin, Fox Film Exchange; Fred Savage, of Hutchinson; E. G. Olson, of the Wichita Film and Supply Co., Wichita, and E. C. Mills took a prominent part in the talk which led up to the formation of the new organization.

After the election of officers was held the executive committee met and arranged for the next convention to be held at Wichita on October 16 and 17, 1916. The committee will hold a meeting soon in Kansas City to inaugurate the fight against censorship.

One of the features of the convention was the presence of Rev. Festus Foster, of the State Board of Censors, who asked permission to address the convention. Rev. Foster was given a respectful hearing and expressed himself as pleased with his reception. He agreed with the exhibitors that the cost of censoring film was excessive and said that he was willing to assist in having the sum reduced.

Exchanges Well Represented.

Every exchange with one exception was represented at the convention. The Fox Film Company was represented by Chas. Hardin, manager, E. H. Wachter and W. B. Emrich, roadmen; the Kleine-Edison representatives were John Hardin, manager, and W. E. Condell, roadman; the Mutual had five representatives, they were F. L. Kiltz, manager; Jack Brainard, former president of the Kansas League; E. C. Mills, L. B. Douglas and Wm. Warner; Metro was ably represented by "Marty" Williams, manager, and C. A. Jones, roadman; the Monarch Feature Film Company was represented by W. C. Kellogg; the Kansas City Feature Film Company (Paramount) was represented by D. O. Reese and R. M. Abbey; R. W. J. Bettis, manager, was looking out for the interests of the Picture Play House; C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager, O. A. Bandy and H. E. Jameyson, were on hand to make Pathe's rooster crow; The World was represented by T. Y. Henry, manager; the Wichita Film and Supply Company had on hand E. G. Olson, president, F. T. Graham and F. C. Forney, roadmen; J. M. Cummings, the latest film man to come to this "neck of the woods," represented the new company, Triangle; C. S. Kelso, with the United Photoplays, put in his appearance at such a late hour as to be hardly entitled to an announcement, but being a good fellow this tardiness on his part should be overlooked.

ALL SET FOR BRONX BALL.

Cinema Exhibitors' Association Completes Arrangements for Big Night.

A PHOTOPLAYERS' reception and dance with an all-professional photoplayers' entertainment will be held on Election Eve, Nov. 1, 1915, the proceeds of which will go to the funds to fight adverse legislation in the Cinema trade.

That the Bronx Exhibitors' Association, Inc., are live ones, they have shown in the past, but under the present administration they are working like beavers. With an end in view they have the support of all the producing companies, and while nearly every screen artist in the East will be present, they have selected the popular Miss Clara Kimball Young of the World Film Co. and Earle Williams of the Vitagraph Co. to lead the grand march, which will be a wonder in itself. Professional march leaders and professional dancers have been engaged to lead the photoplayers and public to the music of Clarke's 12th Regiment Band. Talent has been secured nearly from every company, with promises of surprises from the Vitagraph, Thanhouser, Edison and Universal studios, thus ensuring every one present of an enjoyable evening. No expense has been spared to make the event one to be spoken of by the trade and public for some time.

Boxes have been reserved by the following producing companies and exchanges: World Film, Fox Film, Pathe, Vitagraph, Biograph, Mutual, Metro, Kalem, Universal, Edison, Greater New York and General Film companies, city and Bronx County officials, screen and press clubs.

The committee have the positive assurance of the following stars being present among others: Theda Bara, Violet Mesereau, Marguerite Courtot, Lillian Walker, Edith Storey, Leah Baird, Claire Whitney, Flo La Badie, Mary Fuller, Ben Wilson, Maurice Costello and World Film Galaxy of Stars. William Fox will be on hand to parade his stars as will the Metro heads with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the lead. It will be indeed the banner affair of the Cinema trade; in fact it may well be called a convention, as it is confidently expected that 5,000 will be present at the Hunt's Point Palace, Southern Boulevard and 163d street, Bronx, N. Y. Election Eve, Nov. 1, 1915.

CLEVELAND MEETING.

Supplementary Report on the Convention Called by President Herrington.

THREE hundred Ohio exhibitors, it is estimated, representing nearly every city in the northern half of the state, attended the convention at the Hollenden hotel, Cleveland, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 19 and 20, at the call of Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Tuesday morning was devoted to reception of visitors. All the Cleveland exhibitors extended the hand of fellowship to make their brother owners and managers feel at home. The first business session was held Tuesday afternoon with Ben J. Sawyer, president of the Cleveland local M. P. E. L., in the chair. He called upon Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, national treasurer; W. J. Sweeney, Chicago; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee, Okla., second national vice-president; Fred J. Herrington, national president, and M. A. Miller, New York attorney, as speakers.

President Herrington reviewed the question of censorship. He referred to his recent statement that "Censorship was conceived in iniquity, born in sin, and is dying in disgrace." He credited Sam Bullock, Cleveland exhibitor, with presenting a new version to read: "Censorship was conceived in Cincinnati, born in Columbus and will die in Cleveland."

President Herrington declared that if the censors of Europe would permit motion picture men to depict the horrors of warfare on the screen the mothers of the world would soon "rise up" and put an end to Europe's shame. "God pity the King, the Kaiser and the Czar if the motion picture screen could reveal the horrible truth," said he.

Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kansas, Mr. Herrington described as the states suffering most from the "curse of censorship." He asserted that it was such captions as "The Political Boss Now Reaches Justice" and the exposure of graft that had aroused the ire of the censors.

Attorney M. A. Miller, who has spent several months in all parts of the country and particularly in Kansas studying conditions as they affect the motion picture industry and investigating adverse legislation, contributed an interesting address.

"Yours is the most pitifully organized big industry in the country," he affirmed. "You are the common prey of everybody. Every ambitious legislator and politician when he wishes to fill the coffers of his body turns like a vulture to the motion picture industry.

"The only solution of your problem lies in a great national organization. Your weapon of defense is organization and representation in national and state assemblies."

The delegates were entertained Tuesday night at the Colonial theater, attending in a body, with the entertainment committee in charge and including C. A. McGown, A. R. McCandlish, E. N. Downs, W. H. Horsey, F. M. Kenney, A. Mahrer and Gus Schroeder.

The principal business of Wednesday's session brought election of officers. Lemotte Smith, Alliance, was elected president of the state body. Other officers chosen included: Vice-president, Frank Beverstock, Mansfield; secretary, W. H. Horsey, Cleveland; treasurer, Louis Becht, Cleveland; national vice-president, Frank M. Kenney. Members of the executive committee include J. H. Clark, Ashland; C. A. McGown, Cleveland, and Max Stern, East Liverpool.

The report of the resolutions committee was adopted, condemning censorship, binding theater owners and managers to refuse admission to children at night unless accompanied by their parents and favoring an auxiliary organization to embrace representatives of all allied interests.

The resolution adopted on the censorship question is as follows:

"Resolved that we are unalterably opposed to motion picture censorship in all and any of its varied forms, knowing from actual experience that the judgment of our patrons, supported by the existing penal laws of Ohio, is all sufficient to meet the so-called evils complained of by the advocates of censorship."

In addition to the Cleveland and visiting exhibitors, the banquet Wednesday night, concluding the convention, was attended by representatives of nearly every film exchange in Cleveland, many from Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Toledo. A score of equipment and accessory dealers also were present. Five hundred men and women filled the Hollenden hotel banquet hall.

Chairman Sawyer called upon Director of Public Safety A. A. Benesch, C. F. Baxter, of the city building department; Judge Samuel Kramer, Judge Manuel Levine, Police Prosecutor Silbert, State Representative Virgil Terrell, Fred J. Herrington and several others for addresses.

Director Benesch condemned state censorship as un-American and unnecessary. He declared the mutilation of motion picture films by the Ohio board a pitiful waste and ignorant. Each of the other speakers voiced their opposition to censorship in the same terms.

EXHIBITORS LOSE SUNDAY SHOW CASE.

Circuit Court Judge Decides That Sunday Shows Are a Nuisance—Will Take an Appeal.

MOVING picture exhibitors of Chattanooga lost their cases in the Circuit Court when on October 19 Judge S. D. McReynolds handed down an opinion holding that, under his interpretation of the law, Sunday operation of a motion picture theater is a nuisance, as charged in the indictments against seven local exhibitors. At the same time Judge Reynolds stated that he was in doubt as to the attitude the Supreme Court would take on the question at issue and agreed to expedite appeal of the case, one of the seven having been selected, so as to obtain final adjudication.

Pending the appeal, however, it is the intention of the local exhibitors—all of them—to conduct Sunday performances. The Signal Amusement Company, M. H. Dowler, manager, operating the Alcazar, the Picto and the Lyric theaters, has definitely announced that the Alcazar and the Picto will be operated on Sunday, October 24, as well as succeeding Sundays until a final ruling on the cases is established. At this time the intention of other exhibitors is the same as that of the Signal company.

The principal point at issue in the cases is broader than whether motion picture shows may be given on Sunday. It involves a decision on the question whether to conduct one's regular vocation on Sunday, regardless of the nature of such pursuits, is in itself a nuisance or whether it must be proven in its nature a nuisance.

STIRRING UP MICHIGAN EXHIBITION.

A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan Exhibitors' League, is sending out the following letters to all exhibitors in the state: "We wish to inform you of some of the things accomplished by the League. No doubt many have felt the injustice of the law governing the use of mounted paper, and possibly some have wondered why steps were not taken to have the ruling on this subject modified. At a meeting of the league held recently in Detroit a committee was appointed to wait upon the State Fire Marshal and see what arrangements could be made towards having him change his rulings. Through the efforts of this committee an extension of ninety days was granted for the use of mounted six-sheets and the privilege of using mounted paper on cloth from one-sheets up to and including three sheets was secured. The subject was then taken up with the film exchanges and more than half of the managers agreed to mount such paper as the Fire Marshal had consented to allow them to use. Other subjects are being taken up by the League, and while it required both time and money everything is moving along nicely. Mr. Exhibitor, we want you with us. We need your help and co-operation. Are you not willing to join us and help us fight your battles? Kindly give this your immediate attention and let us hear from you."

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

AMONG THE SCHOOLS.

What Is Being Accomplished by Educational Boards of Various Cities.

FOR some time the "Educator" has not noticed at length the growth of the moving picture in the schools, thereby allowing time for a developed experience and a larger growth of ideas. It is, of course, a foregone conclusion that everywhere the film is an acknowledged necessity in present-day educationalism; the only question being that of adaptability and the additional expense. These difficulties are being daily overcome in all parts. The growth of the picture as an educational factor is a simple matter now of recording how, when and where, the greatest growth continues.

Minneapolis through its superintendent of schools is longing to see an equipment in every school building. Superintendent Spaulding reports that, as a result of looking over conditions in New York City, he thinks all children should see such pictures as "The Birth of a Nation" and the Weekly Topicals, or, all current event pictures, he says: "The value of films of this type lies in giving information on current events that is extremely valuable to school children.

In Detroit pictures are being used to increase interest in "night schools," which are to be established for the especial purpose of increasing efficiency among foreigners in the English language, and in industrial pursuits. In this connection it appears that the Ford Motor Co. have a Moving Picture Department, which will loan films to the night schools. Superintendent Frank Cody says that factory workers will be taught various mechanical processes, so that their earning capacity may be increased; thus, the moving picture has not only provided the workingman with a new and real pleasure, but also a means of increasing his income.

In Cleveland a remarkable combination of advantages has been found by County Superintendent A. G. Yawberg. He reports that a machine used in the schools pays for itself in one year, by using it at Farmers' Institutes to take the place of speakers, at a former usual cost of $10 per day. In this neighborhood also the following pictures have been particularly helpful: "The work of destructive animals such as the rat, weasel and marten." Another showed the process of manufacture of Coke, and another that of Fish Culture.

Deadwood, S. D., is proving very much alive if the claims made that their schools are about the first in the state to adopt a progressive plan. Superintendent B. E. Myers announces that he will introduce pictures in such a way as to co-operate with the courses of study for the pupils of all grades showing the pictures in a theater engaged under the direction of the Board of Education.

Buffalo, N. Y., is going to meet the requirements of school children through an organized plan which uses the moving picture houses. The Federation of Women's Clubs is submitting to seventy-seven exhibitors, plans for both the time and the subjects suitable for the children and young people. It is hoped by this means to meet the present-day requirements as far as possible in the cause of educational pictures, plus those of pleasure giving, yet interesting value.

Philadelphia is studying the relation of the moving picture to schools more thoroughly than any other city, some old rules which for the present prove prohibitive to progress will have to be revised by the educational authorities. Vocational training as given in the seventh and eighth grades will by the aid of industrial pictures receive valuable aid. It will be seen from these reports that the pictures and the schools are more rapidly coming together, and that those schools waiting until the pictures are so advanced and classified as to run parallel with the text book, are not only doing nothing to encourage a growth which will ultimately reach that point, but are themselves rapidly falling behind.

MAKING MONEY.

An Edison Release, Showing How Gold Coins Are Manufactured at the Philadelphia Mint.

The title of this film will appeal to every one. Under the heading of "The Manufacture of Coins" the Edison Company have released a new Educational, as also an Industrial picture. The making of money is no other than the actual making of gold coins, not illegitimately by the counterfeiter, but with the full authority of the laws of the United States by Uncle Sam himself.

Scene from "The Manufacture of Coins" (Edison).

The mint at Philadelphia is by permission of the U. S. Treasury Department the scene of these operations, so that in addition to being of educational and industrial interest, the value of governmental methods and authority is given.

Beginning with the arrival of the ingots in the rough, the filing of the rough edges is the first process; after this operation the workmen's clothes are burned to recover the precious dust. The ingots are then rolled into thin strips; meanwhile an interesting side study of the detailed precautions taken for the prevention of the loss of even a grain of the precious metal, is worth close attention. These strips of metal are now subjected to twenty-eight operations. They are annealed, whitened, cleaned and milled to round off the edges. They are then passed through the coining machine, which stamps out the finished coins of gold pieces of various amounts. A critical examination is now given the coins, any defects being deemed a sufficient cause to demand its recasting. The systematic counting and weighing is the next process, all inferior ones are automatically rejected from those declared as of "standard value." The enclosing in bags and shipping under guard to the banks is the final scene. To schools this is a good addition to their educational lists and possibilities; all students are interested in such a subject as this, and exhibitors can help both the schools and themselves by arranging for a co-operation exhibition in the use of this valuable and interesting film.

MOVING PICTURES IN COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY.

Mr. Edward R. Doyle, former manager of the R. R. Bleecker Co., has taken up special work in Columbia University, where he will carry on a series of experiments in the psychology of moving picture audiences. Weekly exhibitions of new films are being held in the School of Journalism, at which tests will be made to ascertain the "attention curves" of various types of programs. For October the program will consist of Variety Films Corporation subjects:

"The Land of the Hindoos," "Fishing Expedition with an Indian Prince," "The Eastland Disaster," "The Subway Disaster" and "Shipwrecked in the Arctic." Special reports written by the students will serve as the basis of analysis.

Another exhibition will consist of "The Battle of Przemysl," by the American Correspondent Film Co., Inc. The pictures are used ostensibly for laboratory reporting in journalism. Dramatic reels of typical classes will be combined later in further tests. The classes in the school consist of both young women and young men, and have greatly aided in newspaper work by exhibitions in the past. Producers of high-class films, either dramatic or educational, wishing reports from these "group" students' point of view, may obtain same by addressing Mr. Doyle at the University.

Andrew Arbuckle Marries

Andrew Arbuckle.

"WHY prolong the agony?" William Conklin asked Andrew Arbuckle when the latter declared his intention to wed Irma Wright, at the Balboa studio recently. It seemed a good suggestion to the matrimonially determined and they speeded off to Southern California's Gretna Green instanter and were made man and wife, despite the fact that they had only met two weeks before.

Mrs. Arbuckle is professionally known as Mlle. Duquesne. She has just returned from several years abroad where she sang in grand opera in Italy and France. Coming to Long Beach for the winter, the singer met Balboa's chief comedian and brother of the distinguished Maclyn Arbuckle. Was a case of love at first sight, as has been experienced by so many of the Balboans recently.

But the marriage was not accomplished without a succession of difficulties. When the groom was asked for a ring, he could not produce one. The bride was willing to overlook the bit of jewelry, but not so the parson. So an accommodating goldsmith was reached over the telephone who agreed to come downtown, open his store and deliver one. Next, the clergyman caused consternation by requesting a license. Hence, it was necessary to rout out the county clerk. He emerged from his slumbers and issued the document. It was the witching hour by the time all of the details had been provided and on the stroke of twelve the rotund Barboa screen favorite and the opera singer were made one.

MOUNT ROYAL THEATER OPENED.

The Mount Royal theater, an attractive house operated by the Mount Royal Amusement Company of Baltimore, Md., and located in North avenue, near Mount Royal Terrace—the heart of the residential section of that city—was opened on September 7. It has been playing to capacity business since that date. The seating capacity of the theater is 489. The indirect lighting system is used, and the artistic decoration of old ivory and blue satin damask panels make a neat combination for an even restful light. The auditorium is ventilated by a forty-eight-inch rotary ball-bearing ventilator. The projection, which is excellent, is obtained by two Simplex machines with the use of a Mercury Arc Rectifier. A Gold Fibre Screen serves as a projection surface. The entertainment is composed of regular program pictures and feature subjects, and the admission price is ten cents.

BUYS CLAREMONT THEATER, OAKLAND, CAL.

The Claremont theater at Oakland, Cal., has been purchased by S. S. Range. The house has a seating capacity of 700. Mr. Range comes from Erie, Pa., and was manager of the Venice theater in that town.

Gaumont Gets Alice Dovey

IN LINE with its all-American program of American stars in American photoplays, the Gaumont Company has secured Miss Alice Dovey for a Casino Star Feature, "The Reformer." This one-act farce will be released Oct. 24. Miss Dovey has a wide following because of her successful seasons in musical comedy.

Alice Dovey.

It is a long way from Plattsmouth, Neb., where Miss Dovey was born, to Broadway, and the dainty little star of "The Reformer" did not make it all in one jump. Her first appearance was in that tuneful little opera, "Miss Bob White." In this she scored so heavily that she has been able to command the attention of metropolitan managers ever since. Among her earlier successes which are familiar to the theatre-goers are ingenue roles in "The Strollers," "The Land of Nod," "The Girl and the Bandit," and "The Stubborn Cinderella."

Attracted by the vogue she had attained, Lew Fields engaged Miss Dovey for his "Summer Widowers," and later called upon her again when he produced "Old Dutch." Her latest successes have been "Queen of the Movies," "Pink Lady," "Papa's Darling," "Nobody Home" and "Hands Up."

Miss Dovey's comedy is distinctive, and in "The Reformer" it will have full play. In the spoken drama, comedy of situation now surpasses the comedy of lines; and Gaumont comedy directors have shown in their screen productions that comedy of situations that are plausible are more acceptable to the public than comedies that depend upon buffoonery and vulgarity. Miss Dovey has been provided with a part that develops all her winsomeness under laughable conditions.

Miss Colwell in Centaur Features

GOLDIE COLWELL, who has been appearing in David Horsley's comedy releases since the formation of his present company last May, and who has been leading woman for George Ovey in the Cub Comedies, has been transferred from the Cub organization to Director Jay Hunt's company producing two-reel Centaur Features, another of Mr. Horsley's brands.

Goldie Colwell.

With Mr. Hunt Miss Colwell has been assigned to the leading feminine roles. Her first picture, entitled "When Avarice Rules," has just been finished, and will be released Nov. 4 on the Mutual program. In this she plays the part of a wealthy young woman with a fondness for wild animals. She appears in a number of scenes with the Bostock animals, which are also members of the cast.

Miss Colwell, previous to joining Mr. Horsley's forces, was with Selig. She appeared in the Selig serial, "The Adventures of Kathleen," and also was with Tom Mix's company, producing Western pictures.

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

NATIONAL THEATER, LYNCHBURG, VA.

Has Beautiful and Artistic Front Which Is Illuminated at Night by an Ingenious Arrangement of Lights—A Popular Photoplay House.

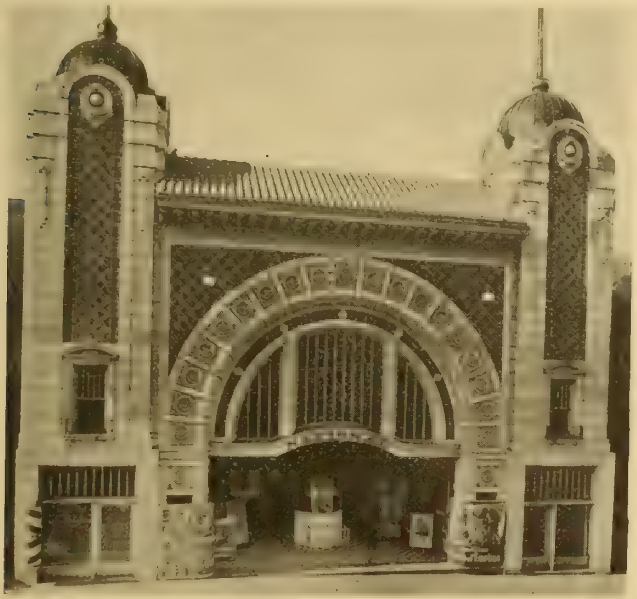
ONE of the coziest and most attractive motion picture houses in the south is the National theater, in Lynchburg, Va., and many theatrical folk who looked it over since its construction a little more than a year ago pronounce it to be the last word in adaptability to the purpose for which it was designed. Imposing in appearance, the National looms up before the passerby in such a way as to create a desire to see what the inner walls contain, and the interior is every whit as attractive. The National represents everything that enters into the construction of a modern motion picture theater, and it is an institution of which the amusement-loving element in Lynchburg is proud, combining all of the essentials that are conducive to the comfort and pleasure of its patrons.



National Theater, Lynchburg, Va.

The exterior, facing on Main street, presents an appearance which is calculated to excite admiration on the part of those who appreciate architecture that is out of the ordinary. Big marble slabs inlaid with blocks of green and brown constitute the outer works, and the whole front resembles a neatly designed tile floor tilted upside down, with proper reservation being made for the position occupied by the lobby and the small rooms on right and left provided for purposes foreign to the theater and arranged for their revenue value only.

Marble wainscoting in the lobby adds to the general appearance of the house, and the display frames for poster use are made up in mahogany with gold tinted lettering on the ceiling and sides. The twin domes, upon each of which are flagpoles, are illumined at night with electricity, and the lobby also is brightly lighted by an ingenious arrangement of globes to secure the best effect.

The interior is delicately tinted in gold and a subdued light makes it possible for patrons to move about without any fear of bumping into someone in the darkness—an occurrence that often happens in theaters which are poorly illuminated. The lower side walls are made of brown and green material, with radiators and fans on each side to operate to the comfort of National patrons in proper season. Six ceiling lights of massive size throw the illumination against the wall and dissipate the glare that would result under any other arrangement.

On each side of the proscenium arch are installed the big pipe organ and Pianola, and both of these instruments are operated by experienced and skilful musicians. The pipe organ is an innovation to Lynchburg as far as a theater is concerned, and the National attracts many people for the reason that this feature is offered nowhere else in local picturedom.

The six hundred and fifty seats are so arranged as to face the street, or front exit, and spectators can easily pick out their seats as they approach them, instead of walking in in the usual way and glancing around in quest of a vacant space. A gold fibre screen is also used. In the operator's room are two Powers 6A machines which use an A. C. to D. C. generator, 55 amperes, 60 cycles. The machines are both power-driven and are in charge of experienced operators. The room is lined with zinc in such a way as to make it fireproof, the dimensions being 9 by 20 by 10 feet. The National is owned by O. B. Barker, a well-known hardware man, and is under the management of Lewis Holt.

NEW PLAZA, WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA.

On July 19 last W. B. Hines opened his Plaza theater in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. The place is in the central part of the town—right next to the post office—and is meeting with unexpected success. The Plaza is a modern and well-ventilated moving picture house. Everything that pertains to the comfort and convenience of the patrons has been installed, and the theater has seating accommodation for 300 persons. Mr. Hines spent $7,000 in building the house, and it can be considered as a valuable addition to the beautiful structures that can be found in White Sulphur Springs. The Plaza is managed by Mr. Hines.

BERKELEY THEATER, BERKELEY, CAL.

New Owner Makes Success of House—Inspects All Pictures Before Booking—Maintains Prices at Five and Ten Cents.

THE Berkeley theater, at Haste street and Shattuck avenue, Berkeley, Cal., is one of the leading photoplay houses of the College City and was erected about four years ago. At that time the future of moving pictures as a form of entertainment was not as clearly defined as it is at present, and the theater was arranged for vaudeville and pictures; but after being operated for but a short time as a combination house the vaudeville performances were discontinued. For the past year this theater has been conducted by C. W. Reavis and his son, T. C. Reavis, who fills the position of secretary-treasurer.

The house, which seats 900, is of brick construction and is of particularly pleasing design, harmonizing perfectly with the large business block adjoining. The lobby is a spacious one and permits the display of large posters, which are freely used. Two transportation companies, the Southern Pacific Company and the Key Route System, carry thousands of commuters past this place each day to San Francisco, making the use of large advertising posters advisable, as they are eagerly studied from the trains.

The program for the Berkeley theater is selected personally by the proprietor, and as a usual rule nothing is shown until after it has been exhibited at some of the large houses in San Francisco. A four or five-reel feature, with three reels of comedy, drama and educational subjects, comprises the usual program, for which an admission price of five cents for children and ten cents for adults is charged. Mr. Reavis spends considerable of his time inspecting features in San Francisco, preferably in the theaters, as he is then better able to judge of their drawing power. However, he finds that all photoplays which draw well in the metropolis do not meet with favor in Berkeley, which is the home of the state university, and considerable discrimination is necessary. When he took over the house, a year ago, he was unfamiliar with the details of the moving picture exhibiting business and for a time depended upon the services of a professional booker and theater manager. In the meantime, he made a careful study of the trade publications and of the methods used by other theater owners, and for more than six months past has been attending to all the details of the management.

BERKELEY THEATRE
"The Flaming Sw

Berkeley Theater, Berkeley, Cal.

In discussing his business experience Mr. Reavis said: "For many years I was engaged in the retail drygoods business in a leading interior city, but for sometime previous to purchasing this theater I had been investigating the amusement field. However, the business did not appeal strongly to me until the present excellent features began to appear, insuring its stability. I look upon the management of a moving picture theater in much the same light as the management of a regular mercantile business. One must ascertain the wants of the community in which they are to do business and then see that these wants are supplied. Judging pictures is much like the selection of stock for a store, and personal inspection is absolutely necessary to avoid disappointment. To meet success in this field one must put forth the same effort and exercise the same judgment as would be necessary in other lines of business."

One of the features of the Berkeley theater is the music, a special size Photoplayer of local manufacture being installed here. A splendid music library has been collected and this is being added to regularly. Advertising is carried on through the medium of the daily press, billboards and a private mailing list. The latter has proved to be very satisfactory and thousands of advance programs are put out each week.

Programs are changed three times a week and a uniform scale of admission prices is maintained, regardless of the magnitude of the productions offered. Business is heaviest during the college year, and special efforts are made then to book subjects that appeal to those of a thoughtful turn of mind.

THE EMPIRE THEATER, MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Photoplay House Established Years Ago Still in the Front Ranks—Gives Beautiful Electrical Display on Stage During Intermissions.

SIX years ago the Empire Theater of Montgomery, Ala., owned by the Picture Play Amusement Company, Inc., of that city, was opened. At that time it was one of the prettiest picture houses in Montgomery, but with the evolution of the picture theater the installation of the latest improvemens from time to time became necessary, and the result is that today the Empire is still one of the best and most up-to-date photoplay houses in the city of Montgomery. By judicious management and business acumen the receipts of the Empire since its opening have been such that the persons responsible have been and are being well repaid for their indefatigable efforts to maintain a picture house beautiful. The incorporators of the company are L. B. Farley, president, and H. C. Farley, secretary and treasurer. The manager of the Empire is Percy L. Smith. B. Cook is the superintendent of the structure, C. E. Parker is chief operator, and Frank Woodruff is the musical director.

Aside from the other attempts at artistic decoration in the interior the patron upon entering when an entertainment is not in progress and when the house is fully lighted is at once attracted by the handsome stage setting. It is done to represent an Italian garden. To the left of the screen is a big marble statue situated a little back in an archway built of material resembling marble, while to the right is a pretty fountain also in a like setting. The ceiling of the stage has been finished in trellis work at the back of which canvas has been placed. Entwining themselves around the arches and in the trellis are vines containing flowers inside of which are small electric bulbs unnoticeable to the eye, but which, when lighted, are most pleasing. The artistic effect of the stage is enhanced by the operation of lights behind the canvas ceiling and elsewhere on the stage so as to represent the three periods of the day, morning, noon and night. Particularly appealing are the sunset scenes with its myriad of colors blending in perfect harmony, and the night scene with the moon slowly coming into its full refulgency in a dark blue sky with its countless number of twinkling stars. This beautiful electric display is given during intermissions, and usually takes about three and a half minutes. While this handsome illumination is taking place the orchestra, consisting of six pieces, plays a current selection or an operatic piece, and the whole spectacle is most entertaining.

Two Power's 6 A motor driven machines are used, and each is fitted with a Gundlach-Manhattan lens. Also in the operating room are two spotlights and a large dimmer that controls the house lights as they are turned on and off gradually. There are 800 seats in the Empire. The auditorium is well equipped with cooling devices, and the atmosphere is always cool and fresh. The air is completely changed every minute. There are four large exhaust fans, thirty-five oscillating fans and thirty ceiling fans. The operating room is fitted with a fifty-two inch exhaust fan.

Seventeen persons are employed in the Empire. Women ushers are hired, and there is always some responsible person on the premises at all times, whether it be Mr. Cook, Mr. Farley or Mr. Smith, to see that everything is being done for the comfort of the theater's patrons.

The Empire was the first theater in Montgomery to run an entire feature program. Six shows a day are given and they are operated on schedule. The Empire has played such big features as "The Hypocrites," "The Eternal City," "The Alien," and many others.

Mr. Smith, the manager of the house, is an experienced showman. He was at one time lecturing on subjects entitled "New York's Chinatown," "The Bowery," "Dante's Inferno," and many other big pictures. He has managed picture theaters in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Virginia and other states. Regarding the presentation of pictures, Mr. Smith says, "My idea is to put on the best possible pictures with the best possible surroundings, equipping a theater with an atmosphere that will make one feel as if he were at home." That Mr. Smith is carrying out literally this statement is attested by the way the Empire is being administered.

STRAND THEATER, MONTGOMERY, ALA.

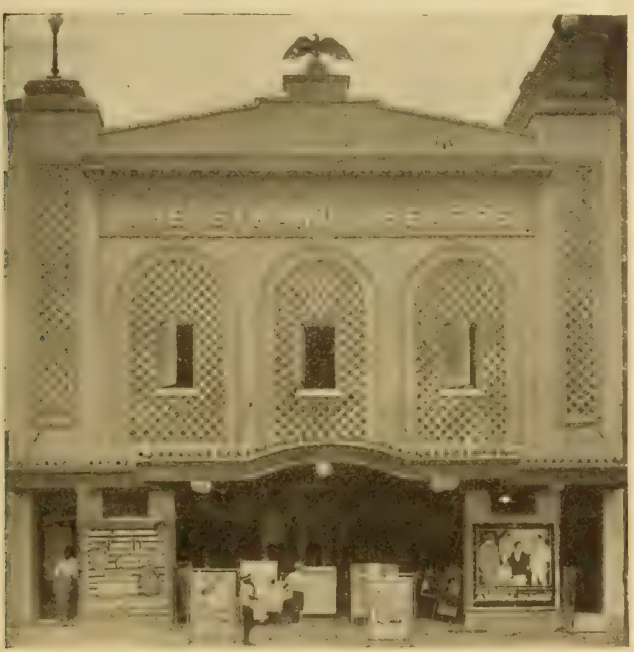
New Photoplay House Erected at a Cost of $50,000—Seats Over 700—Pipe Organ and Eight-Piece Orchestra Used.

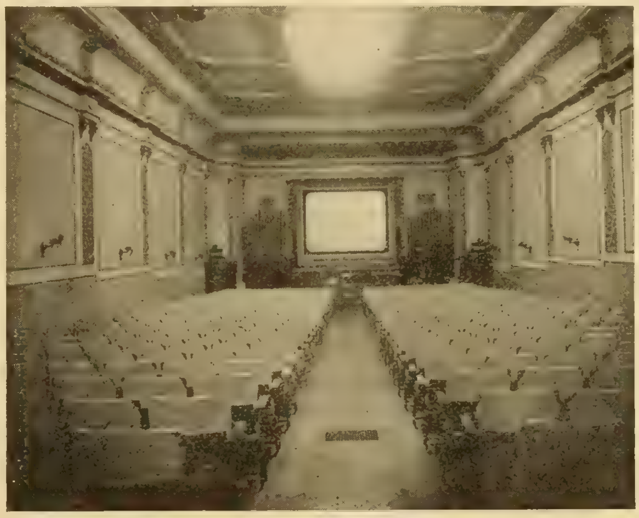
THE Strand theater in Montgomery, Ala., is another of the newer and elaborate picture houses to use that name. It was opened on Saturday, August 21, with Selig's "The Rosary" as the attraction. The theater is the property of the Strand Amusement Company of Montgomery and is being managed by R. B. Wilby. The Strand theater has an advantage in being situated in what is termed Court Square, in the very heart of Montgomery's retail district. It has a frontage of 50 feet upon Court street and a depth of 125 feet. Despite the fact that the seats are 37 inches apart and all upon one floor, the Strand's capacity is more than 700.



Strand Theater, Montgomery, Ala.

The cost of the Strand, without the ground upon which it stands, approaches $50,000. The lobby is entirely of tile, the same color scheme which predominates in the auditorium being used in this part of the house. The floor of the auditorium is covered with a cork matting, carrying out the buff and blue color scheme, while the walls are decorated in like colors with an added touch of gold. The wainscoting in the interior is of blue tile, extending to a height of 6 feet. The little wood used is finished in mahogany. The draperies are of the same shade of blue as that used for tile and wall decorations.

Fresh air is forced through openings in the walls and floor by a 60-inch blower which takes its supply from a tube extending 10 feet above the roof of the building. The foul air is drawn out by two exhaust fans directly connected with openings in the ceiling by tubes and by a fan at the rear of the building. There is a complete change every 3½ minutes, a fact established by experiment. The entire theater was filled with smoke just before its completion and all the fans turned on. In 3 minutes and 20 seconds there was not the slightest trace of smoke.



Interior of Strand Theater, Montgomery, Ala.

Especially does the Strand theater pride itself upon the musical accompaniment given the pictures. In addition to a pipe organ, an eight-piece orchestra is used. Overtures rendered by the two being played together are impressive.

The service at the Strand at the present consists of the productions released through World, Metro, V-L-S-E, Kleine, Pathe and the Mutual Masterpictures. Because of the arrangements already made to exhibit the Triangle films some of these will be shown in one of the smaller theaters operated by the Strand Amusement Company. The mechanical equipment consists of a motor generator set, two Powers 6 A machines and a day and night screen. Three men are employed in the operating room.

British Notes.

THE mass meeting of exhibitors convened by the Exhibitors' Association was held in London under the presidency of A. E. Newbould (Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Ltd.), and representatively embraced the entire trade from Penzance to Aberdeen. The outcome of the conclave was to confirm the numerous resolutions already adopted up and down the countryside, and a final resolution "not to screen any Essanay productions whatsoever" was unanimously adopted on the motion of Mr. G. H. Turner. A stormy discussion followed upon the different points at issue in which the great bone of contention seemed to be the obscurity of Mr. Spoor's proposals. "No definite statement on his policy has been forthcoming," said one speaker; "nevertheless its meaning is quite clear."

To the lay observer the proceedings of the meeting must have appeared somewhat farcical. "C. C.," the gilded pill of the Essanay Company, was alternatively cheered and calumniated. Members who, a fortnight ago, swore by the famous comedian prattled cantankerously of exhibiting outside their theaters notices explaining to the public why they were not showing the films of the horrid American film trust. Others after traducing Chaplin as indecent and the Essanay Company as devilish, incongruously admitted that there was no objection to Chaplin films on the open market. On the whole, the general proceedings, while specific enough, involved many complicated side issues which could not help but convince one of the superficiality of some of the principal assentors to the foregoing resolution.

An inquirer in a recent issue of the World expressed annoyance at being unable to comprehend the different stampings on patented articles. Anyone engaged in a search for foreign specifications might also be puzzled with the diversity of designations. I have often found the following table of patent marks in current use of value in detecting the country of origin of a foreign patent:

Prof. Dussaud, the discoverer, three years ago, of "cold light," has, I hear, recently been pursuing his researches with the new illuminant with interesting results. A demonstration of his new apparatus may be given in London shortly.

An item of news to hand in the chemistry world, also from the other side of the Channel, is that a French chemist has concluded successful experiments in manufacturing celluloid film base without camphor. The specimens produced are stated by competent judges to be equal to stock with camphor as its chief constituent. The substitute for camphor which acts as a gelitinating agent for the acetates of cellulose is a combination of glyceric ethers derived from the same acid as the acetate.

A few weeks ago I referred to the gift to the Red Cross Society by the moving picture trade in Newcastle of the last word in motor ambulances. Nothing daunted by the example, the metropolitan trade has resolved to present a fleet of similar vehicles to that great humanitarian organization at a cost somewhere in the region of $200,000. Nearly one-half of this amount is already promised.

Three months ago I intimated that the veteran actor of the "legit," Sir John Hare, was to participate in a visualized version of "Caste" and to take the leading role of Eccles. It is a signal compliment to that versatile young ex-producer of the Vitagraph Company, Larry Trimble, that the producers should select him to direct the enterprise. The work is already practically complete.

An authoritative disclaimer has been issued by Sir Herbert B. Tree, the actor-manager of His Majesty's theater, to a very prevalent statement in the trade that he had accepted the offer of an American company to go over permanently to "the pictures."

A photographic friend describes a wonderful instrument of projection (it cannot be termed a projector as we know it) that he recently saw demonstrated at the rooms of the Photomicrographic Society. The lantern in construction and design is square and not unlike the average lantern used for the ordinary motion picture projector. It is illuminated by a 30-ampere arc, the rays of which converge through a special type of lens mount which is claimed to dissipate a large proportion of the generated heat. Its first application is for the projection of microscopic slides in either vertical or horizontal position. It is in this capacity that the heat-absorbing properties of the mount are an advantage; secondly, by a slight adjustment a metal slide can be interlocked which allows of the projection of any size of glass lantern slides from the standard size to half-plate. A third alternative fitment provides for the insertion of an epidiascopic attachment behind the illuminant, permitting the projection of opaque objects on the principle of the toy lanterns used for projecting picture post cards, etc.; while a fourth application consists of the ordinary film projecting mechanism placed before the lens.

Wedding bells are a somewhat rare occurrence in and about Flicker Alley. Last week-end, however, Miss Elizabeth Risdon, the Hepworth leading lady, was married to Mr. George Loane Tucker, a producer, at present with the London Film Company. The wedding took place at a church near the latter company's studios at Twickenham.

Specifications to hand from the Patent Office contain particulars of six new processes of natural color kinematography deposited for registration during the past fourteen days. Five are based upon variations of the three-color screen principle, but the sixth propounds a novel and ingenious theory. It is an Italian discovery, revolving around the use of a transparent mirror. In the preparation of the films three negatives are made, each sensitive to one of the primary colors, and three separate positives printed very much along the lines of the usual three-color processes. In the projection of the results two projectors, propelled synchronously from one shaft, are used. Two positives in superimposition are projected from the first machine, which throws the rays at right angles on to the transparent mirror and which in turn are reflected to the screen proper. Behind the mirror is the other projector for the remaining positive which projects its rays through the mirror to the screen uninterruptedly and in minute register with the images projected indirect from the first machine.

London Trade Topics.

"Will the new film tax make the cheap seat at the kinema dearer?" summarizes the popular query of today. The trade seems to think determinedly that it shall not and must not, but the British workingman is ever skeptical. It has been suggested in some quarters that the film duty must eventually come out of the pocket of the ultimate consumer, the patron—an observation based upon the results of increased taxation upon more concrete commodities. Whatever happens will have its reflex upon those theaters catering for audiences of the artisan class rather than upon the city kinema, for a year of war has made economy a necessary, if not altogether a pleasurable, study. And the economic philosophy of the workingman in his distractions has revolved around the comparative merits of the six-penny gallery seat at the third-rate music hall and two visits to the kinema in cushioned luxury at the same cost. As one exhibitor crystallizes the argument: "When the workingman becomes so poor that he cannot afford his biweekly visit to the pictures it will be a pretty sure sign that the country is going bankrupt."

The Gaumont Company is following its last successful authoritative war picture, "Lord Kitchener's Visit to the French Lines," with another contribution from the cameramen attached to the field staff of the French forces. The subject is incidental to King Albert's visit to the front and, like its forerunner, is characterized by its profusion of detail and photographic brilliance.

The London Film Company, Ltd., is releasing a three-reel dramatic, entitled "The Man in the Attic," a film considered by a consensus of critics to be the pick of their recent productions. The plot—as in many a masterpiece—is a commonplace one, but its execution is decidedly original and deals with the life of a miserly recluse with immense worldly wealth. His ultimate end and its elucidation furnishes a climax superabundant in sensation.

The Universal Company's most recent serial, "The Broken Coin," is practically ready for hauling on the tapis in this country, now that the lid of "The Black Box" has been finally sealed and delivered over to the exhibitors. The release date of "The Broken Coin" is to be the last Monday in November, and the strides Grace Cunard has made in popular estimation since her appearance in the first Universal serial is a guarantee of its salability. By the way, "The Trey o' Hearts" is being shown in Paris this week for the first time before the French public.

Mention of these serials recalls the fact that international simultaneosity of release has many advocates on both sides of the Channel. Here we have "The Trey o' Hearts" on exhibition in Paris nearly two years after its production in the States. The simultaneous issue of films in principal countries, notably in the case of expensive features, would, it is argued by many, put an effective closure to much unscrupulous exporting and incidentally preserve an entire market. In this specific instance copies of "The Trey o' Hearts" in decent condition are plentiful in London at £75-£100 each, but the French exhibitor is paying release price for his.

The prolificacy of topical and patriotic songs has been partly responsible for something of a vogue in projected musical numbers at several moving picture theaters. No less than a dozen firms are engaged in the manufacture exclusively of lantern slides for this purpose and one undertaking has already developed an extensive connection with its bi-weekly song slide service. These slides are of mica and unbreakable.

A valuable asset of some films is their adaptability. A while ago the Eclair Company published in France a patriotic picture, the main theme being a screen exhortation to be thrifty and to encourage the people to invest their savings in the coffers of the nation. With ingenious trimming and translation the same picture is about to do duty here. The activities of the London office of this company seem unusually brisk. A feature subject, "The Midnight World," exploiting the original Zigoma characters, has just been disposed of at a price which shows that melodramatic detective pictures are the reverse of unfashionable.

Under the insignia of the Life Photo Film Corporation of New York the Apex Film Company of this city is shortly marketing "The Political Scandal." It has in particular been eulogized by viewers as an example of what sort of plot ought to be "done" with a limited cast.

At the moment of writing, the Hepworth Company is well in hand with an adaptation of Robert Trowbridge's novel, "The White Hope," at its suburban studio. Stewart Rowe, who plays the title role, has been in training a fortnight with George Gunther, the negro middleweight, who will be his victim in the picture story.

Notwithstanding a couple of tempting offers from two New York motion picture producers, Charles B. Cochran, of the Ambassadors' theater, has managed to retain the rights of visual appearance of Mlle. Delysia, the successful revue star, now performing at the Ambassadors'. Apparently his mind is perturbed in evolving a suitable script for Mlle. Delysia to exploit for he is offering £50 for an idea and £100 for a scenario to display her qualifications to the fullest advantage.

Film production in the score of studios situated within twenty miles of the metropolis has hitherto been conducted at low pressure during the winter months, but, if scheduled programs for the coming season are adhered to, London's productive units will be busier this winter than they are now. To a considerable degree the war has retarded outside work and the best firms have been reorganizing their indoor plants during the past month or two rather than concentrating upon too much speculative outdoor work. Yet, curiously enough, and indirectly, the protraction of hostilities has appreciably decreased the cost of production. First, the salary-on-percentage-of-takings plan adopted by many legitimate theaters with artistes has not been by any means a popular measure, and quite a number of first-class turns are now dependent entirely upon "the pictures." With the smaller fry of the stage, things are pretty black. A producer advertising for thirty experienced supers informs me that he had 870 applicants, all of whom professed to have been before the footlights. Similar is the experience of H. Chance Newton, who found 1,000 people applying to a West End management for engagements in a play with nine speaking parts.

The copyright agents for the following literary successes notify me of the disposal of the visual rights: "Shadow of the Rope" and "Stingaree," by E. W. Hornung; "Hands Across the Sea," by Hy Pettit; "The Dope Doctor," by Richard Deban; "At the Sign of the Sword," by William Le Queux; "Stella Maris," by W. T. Locke; "The Secret Service Submarine," by Guy Thorne; "The Mind-the-Paint Girl," by Sir A. W. Pinero, and a few others. The Gaumont Company has ready for viewing in London an adaptation of Stanley Weyman's mysterious conceptions in "Under the Red Robe," the newest effusion of the Clarendon Company.

The firm of Bishop, Pessers & Co., the British agents for Balboa films, have established a working compact with the Globe Film Company, the proprietors of the new "Kine-Billy Merson" comedies. Now that the necessary formalities of amalgamation have been completed, the new address for both parties is 81 Shaftesbury avenue, London, W.

Another firm which has come very much to the fore of late in the exclusive market, particularly in American multiple-reel specialties, is Bindard & Co. The firm has now left its old address in Warwick street for more commodious showrooms at 5 Great Newport street, London, W.

The next of Walter Melville's hardy annuals of the repertoire of stock companies touring provincial theaters on its way to Flicker Alley is "The Shop Soiled Girl." The first issue, a transposition to celluloid of a melodrama acclaimed behind the footlights with unmistakable success, entitled "The Girl Who Took the Wrong Turning," is booking exceedingly well and is down for exhibition at some of the best kinemas in London suburbia. British Empire Films, Ltd., retains the world's rights and are about to invite overseas offers.

Two companies which purpose to confine their scope and operations to the motion picture field have been newly registered under the limited liability act. The Imp Cinematograph Company, Ltd., has a capital of £1,500 and apparently is to concentrate its attentions on London. The other is Touchstone Films, Ltd., an undertaking out to market its own comedy productions. Comparatively speaking, the war conditions have made new undertakings registered under the joint stock companies acts something of a rarity. The two enterprises referred to above are new undertakings, not existing business converted into limited companies and as such the promoters have, no doubt, been at some pains owing to the present tight-fistedness of the Treasury to secure their registration. Still, this stringent official scrutiny has had one beneficial effect on the trade, in temporarily obstructing the registration of companies promoted solely to make out of the name of the industry whatever unscrupulous transactions could obtain and companies floated from bucket shops with impressive names and articles as bait for any chance victim or unsophisticated investor but never with the remotest idea of ever becoming legitimately engaged in the manufacture of motion pictures. Treasury sanction is a necessity now before a new concern can be registered at Somerset House and is usually only conceded to either established businesses or prospective undertakings allied with some man or firm of repute known to be beyond reproach.

Sir A. Conan Doyle's (the creator of Sherlock Holmes) famous military novel was presenter in motion pictures for the first time September 17 at a trade show at the Marble Arch Pavilion. "Brigadier Gerard" was produced by the Barker Company and displays to a wonderful degree the histrionic attainments of Lewis Waller as the Brigadier. Madge Titheradge supports Mr. Waller as the Countess, and the Napoleonic atmosphere and setting make up a most appropriate study in contrasts of the military methods of today and those of a century ago. # Advertising for Exhibitors

Premiums Again.

EVIDENTLY Nampa, Idaho, is in the throes of a lottery spasm. Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, send a handbill of another house and write:

> The premium business hit us about six weeks ago. The Unique led off with a 42-piece dinner set, one set to be given away every week for 25 weeks and the 26th week a gr-r-rand prize of I-forget-what. A week later the Empress jumped in with both feet and anounced that once a week they would give a $5.00 certificate good for trade at one of the local stores. In addition they furnished about half of the merchants in town with show tickets which they give away, one with each $1.00 purchase. Now, to quote Shakespeare, what-do-you-think-of-that? Oh yes, the Empress also has a g-r-r-r-and prize for the last week. It will be a certificate good for $20.00 in trade at one of the stores. Now for results. For about three weeks the dish game hurt us but the last two or three weeks have been the best we have had this summer and we do NOT give anything away to get them in. Instead we give the very best pictures we can possibly get and on a throw-away we explained that with really GOOD pictures like ours it was not necessary to turn our theater into a grab-bag in order to entice people inside the doors and that whenever it was we would close up, etc. We think it is having its effect and are glad that we didn't (as was our first intention) try to fight fire with fire.

Now premiums are all right in their way, but the way is NOT to run a lottery and it will pay exhibitors who want to run gift schemes to read the opening of Chapter XXIV in Picture Theater Advertising. A lottery is a lottery whether it is a gift enterprise or anything else. And there is no telling when something will happen. Prize schemes are good in their way, but there is a right and a wrong way to work them and the wrong way is to leave their distribution to chance. Dinner sets and things are good to build business with, if you have films with which to back the crockery, but it is celluloid and not china that makes the greater appeal to the picture fan.

In the same way the sale of tickets to the merchants for premiums is all right when handled properly, but the trouble is that all too often when one sick house starts to take pills the whole lot of them go to see the doctor. Only lately a house started to give away five dollars nightly and another house came back with ten and the bids were raised until about $600 a week was being paid back to the patrons. It is fatal to business. You must keep on raising, once you start, or be bluffed out of the game, and if you have chances or coupons or any other scheme in which the winner is determined by chance in the slightest degree there is a lottery, and lotteries are against the law.

Use gift schemes if they must be used to bolster up business, but do not use them unless you must and then use them in the legitimate ways suggested in Picture Theater Advertising. When the book was being written, last summer, former Judge Frank K. Shaw, in whose office the final draft was written, read the chapters as they were turned out and he himself, who had served several terms on the bench, was surprised at some of the decisions we were able to quote. Don't trust to blind luck when the Sheriff comes. Don't start something, for your own sake and the sake of the town. You can, as a rule, do better by staying out and letting the other man get into trouble. Souvenirs and premiums are one thing; lotteries are another, and a lottery is almost certain to be regarded as a confession that the show alone is not strong enough.

Make Suggestions.

And speaking of Picture Theater Advertising; some day a new edition is going to be necessary. This may be some time from now, but while the book is new and fresh to you, do you mind sitting down and letting us know what you think should be added, amended or emended. We want to make the next edition even better if we can, and we need your helpful criticisms.

A Flying Start.

A program came in to us without a cover, but there was no trouble in finding out that the Majestic Monthly was published by the house of that name in Columbus, Ohio, because that fact was on the date line. And the date line was on top of the editorial page. We read the happy salutatory and right then we knew that the rest would be good—and it certainly was. It is a booklet 6¼ by 9½ inches, twenty pages and cover, the latter white stock printed in red and black. It is issued monthly. Each attraction is held from one to four days and each gets a full page with either a scene or half tone cut in a fine screen that works well on the good quality stock employed and at the bottom of each attraction page is not "Sun. to Wed., Sep. 19-22," but "Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Sept. 19, 20, 21, 22." And it runs in eighteen point display so that it may not be overlooked. On the back page is given the hours of performance in thirty point and this suggestion:

> NOTE
> We would advise that you CUT OUT and KEEP the above for reference. You can avoid the annoyance of coming in when the picture is half finished if you will follow this schedule.

There is an editorial page, a page of house chat (in addition), a lot of well selected chat clipped and original, and about the only thing we do not like about the entire issue is the fact that they tell the complete story. This newest child of the program family was born with a full set of teeth and a flowing and luxuriant beard. We do not know who is the editor, but we should like to have his name to stick up alongside R. B. Wilby's, and R. B. will have to break into a gallop if he doesn't want to be passed on the road.

This is supplemented by a private postcard on buff stock printed in green and black and giving the weekly program. The front carries a reference to the Monthly and offers to send it. The card, too, carries the hours of performance and the prices. Both bear the mark of intelligent thought and knowledge of craft. We will appreciate being put on the mailing list and held there. It is going to be good material for our shears.

Just Think.

Just think! Ralph Ruffner, who looks like a minister but isn't, writes that he has a lot of stuff he would send if he thought we were short. Perhaps he thinks we spend our time going to picnics. Sure we want his stuff. No "if's about it."

Another Daily.

O. K. Wilson, of the Reliance, Orangeburg, S. C., sends in a daily program that he gets out and has distributed by carriers each morning. It is a three column sheet, nine by twelve inches, with two columns of advertisements and a third of a column program, the other two-thirds being film notes. We do not know how large Orangeburg is, but unless it has a daily paper, he might follow Edmund Reid and give local instead of film notes: the weather report and local gossip. The date line should carry the name of the town and be given a volume and serial number and other ear marks of a daily. Mr. Wilson has the right idea when he says:

> We take the liberty of enclosing our daily program which we have delivered by carriers every morning to every family in town. We find this way of advertising much better than handing programs to our patrons at the theater, as you know a large percentage of people will merely glance at a house program, then throw it away, but if the programs are delivered at their houses they will very probably be read, as people will want to know what pictures are on for that particular day.

Not only that, but the program given the patron merely serves to hold existing patronage. The program more widely distributed makes new business.

It might be well to give prices and hours of performance, no matter how well known these may be.

Its Own Film.

From Film Forecast, issued by the Regent, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, it appears that they are not only making their own photoplay but are going to hold an overflow meeting, or rather they did, for the date set was Labor Day, as is seen from this clipping from their program:

> So much interest was evinced in the pictures taken of the contestants in the Rowland & Clark Theaters-Pittsburg Press "Movie Star" Contest, at Kennywood Park on August 21, by persons who were not in the contest, that the Management of the Rowland & Clark Theaters has arranged with The Directors of Kennywood Park, to take pictures, not only of the contestants, but also of those who attend the Park, on Labor Day, Sept. 6. This picture will be taken sometime during the afternoon.
> These pictures will be shown as a preliminary to the picture "Cupid's House Party" in which the winners of the contest will appear. Be at Kennywood Park Labor Day and get in "the movies."

But there is another clipping from the program that is not so nice. It reads that through an error the house failed to credit the photograph of a certain opera star to the photographer who made the print. If the producers who hire stage stars to give advertising value to their pictures are wise, they will pay the photographer to make pictures of these stars and not require the exhibitor to pay part of the price in credit lines under cuts. This is one of the nastiest and dirtiest forms of graft that trails the theatrical business, though it is not as bad as it was ten or twelve years ago when wise Sunday editors refused to print any picture taken by a certain photographer lest it be an unmarked copyright on which he would presently undertake to collect damages. We put him out of business for keeps, but there is enough sting left in the tail of the serpent to make it worth while for feature producers to avoid getting their film hirers into trouble through their own meanness or the petty economy of the stars. Rowland and Clark, who issue this program, have made no complaint. The item just caught our eye as we ran over the pages, but we know what it used to mean to us and we can see it coming to the exhibitors if they do not take hold in time. Getting back to the program it is an eight page with heavy colored stock cover, lavishly illustrated with clean and well printed cuts of the proper screen, for the greater part. A four page is used for the other houses playing regular program subjects.

Might Be a R. R.

Owen and Donlon, of the Orpheum, Utica, N. Y., send in the first three issues of an eight-page booklet program that is above the average in make up and editorial work. The pages are three by five and one-half inches, cream-colored stock, printed in black. Each section of the program is given a half page with the titles and very little description. The remainder of the space is taken by film chat that is written from the Utica point of view and not merely some stuff clipped from the papers. It might be suggested, however, that rearrangement of the layout would give a six-page railroad folder that would work about as well if folded on the Rhodes six-page scheme. This would also save the cost of wire stitching, which is one of the principal reasons for the railroad style. William P. Donlon, who edits the program, does not seem to consider cost, for he is paying money for a good job, but the saddle stitching costs money, and if the program is eight pages or under, stitching is not really necessary.

Mr. Donlon dates his days, of course, and does not tell the entire story if he prints a synopsis, merely leading up to the climax and then ending off nicely. At that, we think a paragraph or two about a release is even better than a partial synopsis in a small program, for it is the chatty note that counts for most.

Cutting Them Up.

From an advertisement we get an excellent example of involved make-up, due partly to lack of space and in part to the wording. It reads:

The Inimitable
Charlie Chaplin
In the Typically-Chaplin
Farce Comedy
"Mabel's Busy Day"
With Mabel Normand
—AND—LEONORE ULRICH
Star of stage and screen in the drama of purpose
CAPITAL PUNISHMENT
Three Reel Knickerbocker
Broadway Star Feature

At first glance it would appear that Miss Normand and Miss Ulrich were both appearing in the Keystone, or, perhaps, in the three reeler, it being more natural to suppose that the title ended the Chaplin. Had "also" been used instead of "and" between the two names, the meaning would have been clearer or "and in addition" would have been still better, perhaps. It pays to make the newspaper announcements clear and explicit. No regular fan would expect to see the two players named in the Chaplin support, but it would jolt them a little and serve no good purpose.

Certainly.

J. Earl Sigler, of the Princess, Maroa, Ill., says that he has found that hard work, plenty of advertising and a good program will get the money. Most assuredly it will. The Princess is in a town of about 1,150 persons. Several managers have tried the place and have had to quit. Mr. Sigler found that by hustling, his business was better through the summer than his predecessor's winter business because he keeps plugging. Every manager who can and does hustle makes money unless he faces ruinous competition and even then some; indeed many, still make money.

To start the "Broken Coin" Mr. Sigler had tickets printed up announcing free admission to the first installment. These were given personally to the farmers on Saturday and on Monday he made a house to house canvass, at each place leaving as many tickets as were required. It not only got the series under way with a bang, but—and this is far more important—it brought the manager into personal contact with every household in town. Now he is not "the feller what runs the Opry House," but a man they are personally acquainted with. No wonder that he finds business bettering.

But Mr. Sigler gets out a weekly program, just a throwaway, that is inserted in every copy of the local paper. This is bad. It should either be printed in the paper itself or given separate distribution. It is never a good plan to insert in the paper. Then, too, there is not a date anywhere. It is not even "Week of." It should not only be week of but each individual day should be dates, so that if half the program is torn off both halves work.

More Display.

The Plaza, Troy, N. Y., is still getting out the Plaza Magazine, but it is not making it work yet. A recent issue has the weekly program set in six and ten point roman, not even display being used. It does use a double display page in the centre for two features, but a first-class job man should be given the program to set each week. They give better reading matter all the time; more carefully selected and edited, but there is no word about the house and nothing about some of the current attractions. It must pay them, or they would not continue, but it would pay them more if they made it work a little harder for the house. The main object of the program should be to get publicity for the house, but it must be kept in mind that to do this, enough general material must be run in such a manner as to ensure the entire issue being read.

Window Work.

James T. Alderson, of the Royal Airdome, Malvern, Ark., evidently has not seen recent examples of window work in this department, for he offers as new his own display for The Island of Regeneration. He gives a new idea for sky work, however, though pea lights, working from battery or on a transformer, will give better "stars." Mr. Alderson writes:

> The scene was built in a tank made to fit the window and the picture shows how it looked from the street, with the exception of the "ocean," which looked much larger. The sand, rocks and foliage are all real, as is the water. An electric light with a piece of orange celluloid in front of it made a sunset effect across the water, while an electric fan furnished the "sea breeze." The sky was a piece of blue paper pasted on hoops to give the curved effect and the stars were made to shine by another electric light placed behind the dome. The figures of Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno were cut from a photo sent with the picture. The view was made by flashlight and, of course, doesn't look as good as the window, but it will give you some idea of the effect.

And, by the way, here is a wrinkle for those who use home-made cut-outs for window or lobby work. Full size stuff is, of course, mounted on board or stretcher, but for small cut-outs paste on cardboard and let it curl up all it wants to. Then paste blank paper on the back and the resultant reverse curl will pull the cardboard straight.

Mr. Alderson also sends in his eight-page house program. He does not date his days and he uses so large a body type that he cannot get much matter in, but he is a newspaper man, and what he does write is well done. His seventh page would work harder for him if he published there a recapitulation of his entire week's program instead of display ads for three of the days. Just now he is running a beauty contest for cash prizes. With the prizes running from ten dollars down to two and a half, it would have been better to have obtained some real prize instead. In a voting contest it is not the small prize but the honor that counts, and the winner would prefer something that she could show as a trophy.

Mailing Lists.

In a personal letter R. B. Wilby writes:

> Mailing about 350 posts to a live list and adding six or eight names a week. Can get all kinds of mailing lists, but I am afraid of those that are not hand picked.

That's the idea. It is not the number sent out, but the number that get there that counts.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., New York

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Charm and the Market.

EVERY little while Herman A. Blackman leaps another hurdle and gets one jump nearer. This time he tells what it is that sells stories—and when you know what it is, you generally sell the story you try to sell and do not attempt to sell much of your output immediately after writing it. This is the letter:

> But what I started to tell you is, that this good story I have just finished is the result of three good kicks which I have received lately. You see, the last three that I sent out have been Joe Cannons—that is, they "came back." I mean that they came back from the first port of call, and I have become accustomed to selling at first submission, if the story is good enough to sell at all.
> But these three all came back and I wondered if I was getting careless. I studied my carbons of these stories carefully to see if I had loafed on the job. I found that I had been painstaking and the work of development was the best I had ever done. Clearly, something was wrong, though, and I searched and searched for the trouble. I found it, finally. None of these stories had that indescribable thing which you may call "charm,"—I don't know any better word. I had in each case "made a story" and left out the attractive element; the thing which would take hold of the readers and attract them to take interest in the story. It is not the same thing as interest, it is not the same thing as you mean by "novelty," but it is just the thing that pleases you so that you take interest and enjoy the novelty. I am a little bit shy on the language to tell it, but I think you will understand what I mean. And I have resolved to never again send out a story that hasn't, to some extent, this attribute of charm. The one I have just finished is rich in this way and I feel sure that it will visit but one studio.
> And incidentally, this study and discovery has cleared up a problem that I have tried to solve for several weeks. You see, I have been a fan ever since pictures have been exhibited. I have attended here regularly and often. I have probably averaged 30 reels per week for the last six years. But with all this attendance, until a few weeks ago, I never heard an audience in this town give applause to a picture. It is not the custom here—they simply don't do it. But, a few weeks ago, they did break over the custom and clapped their hands in delight. I didn't help, but I wanted to. And, do you know what did it? It was just the pure charm of the story. It was a Mutual Masterpiece, "The Mating." If you didn't see it, I can tell you the whole plot in a paragraph.
> The little small town girl is supremely happy over her chance to go to college. The college girls snub her and she is very unhappy over it. She thinks of a scheme to get their attention. She forges a letter from a football hero, in which there is mention of love for her. Then she cleverly manages that the catty girls shall read the letter. Some of them doubt the genuineness of the letter and plan to bring the "little frump" and the hero face to face. The hero gets wise and when he is introduced to the "frump," boldly announces that they are old friends. Right here's where they got busy with their hands.
> Now, please look at that stuff closely. No sensationalism, no crime, no gun-play, no danger, no naughty woman, no anything that the average producer considers essential. Yet it "got a hand" where pictures never get a hand. Of course, it had the best of acting—Bessie Barriscale was the actress and that's nuff sed—and the directing was perfect—it was an Ince production, and that's also nuff sed—but this was not what made the picture. All the Mutual Masterpiece pictures have these elements of good production and good acting, but none of them ever "got a hand" here before. And so, I have studied and studied what did it, and I can find no answer except that it was the charm of the story and the way the sympathy was attracted and lured up to the climax.
> So, I am studying hard to get a grip on this element of charm. You no sooner decide what makes it than you have another think coming. It is as elusive as the celebrated Irishman's flea. But I have learned enough in my study to be able to recognize it when I meet it face to face and that is going to help some. I don't think that I will send out many more stories that will come back, as the last three have.

What Mr. Blackman calls charm is also known as "heart interest." It has been preached, in and out of these columns ever since the writing of plots was begun, and until the end of time no substitute can ever be found for the "indefinable something," that makes one story different from so many others.

The story of the mating is a common theme. Miss Maude Adams played the story as "Hop o' My Thumb" several seasons ago and the Little Miss Makebelieve and her twin sister, the slavey or shopgirl, who misconstrues the kindly interest of the lodger or someone, have been written time and again and have been used in produced plays many times and with varying success. It was not because the story was new that "The Mating" scored a success above the others. Only in one sense did a superior technique help the threadbare theme. It was because, back of an adept technique lay sincerity, sympathy and the heart interest that gave charm.

Dozens of similar stories have been produced and have left the spectators cold merely because the handling of the story was hackneyed or awkward and the interest of the spectator was not aroused or, having been aroused, was not cunningly satisfied. A simple formula is to make the spectator want something to happen. Then make them fear that the reverse will happen. Then contrive that it does happen unexpectedly.

Too many would-be authors are not authors at all. They are assemblers, and not clever at their trade. They take certain "sure fire" bits, combine them, send them out and wonder why they come back. They "know" that their stories are better than the screen stories. They ought to know, because they have seen each component part of the story a hit upon the screen. They have used all proper ingredients, yet their cake is flat. They do not and possibly cannot realize that heart interest is lacking, that their carpenter work has engrossed them to the exclusion of the soul of the story. They have not given it charm—heart interest—whatever you would call it.

And this is the reason that with a thousand or so stories being read in a certain studio (that is characteristic of most studios), but three were accepted where seven were needed, and two of the three were little more than skeletons.

The market was never better than it is today for good stuff. The bottom has dropped out of the book arranging, and original stories are in demand. Studio heads and editors are actually worried as to a source of supply, authors being entreated by letter to hustle stuff through and not a script gets by without examination, and yet, of the stuff that comes to the desk, not always one per cent. is wholly good and some of that is not suited to the studio to which it is sent.

And the trouble is, that men and women who might make good, do not really try. They write something. It looks very like a story. They send it out and it comes back. They write more and the same fate overtakes them. They curse the editors and the producers. They do not know that many editors accept by wire because they cannot wait for the mails. They do not know that editors are worried sick, and they do not know that it is because 995 out of every thousand average stories are hack work and lacking utterly in charm.

What charm is cannot be arrived at through school courses or books of instruction. It is the result of some form of instruction plus an intimate and sympathetic personal study of charm. You can be told that you must put heart interest into your stories, but you cannot be told how it may be done. You must find out through study, experiment and practice and 99 per cent. of those who submit to studios are too much in a hurry for checks, too eager for immediate success, too intolerant of the slow processes of study even to arrive at the point of success.

Try and be the hundredth man. Try and gain the patience to do a story well. Do not try to sell until you feel that you have given your brain child internal as well as external beauty. Give it a soul and a heart and a mind as well as a pretty face and shapely form. Then your only regret will be that you cannot accept all of the openings that will present themselves.

Typewriter Talk.

Although one alleged book of instruction offers to give the addresses of seven companies that will consider scripts if neatly written in longhand, there really is no studio that will now consider the pen-written script. As one editor recently put it: "I have too much respect for my eyesight," and another remarked that long before an author could write a play worth reading, he would have come into possession of a machine. Both of these remarks are backed by common sense, but, on the other hand, the authors, as new authors will, feel that it is the want of a typewriting machine rather than want of ability that retards or prevents their sales. A recent letter is typical. The writer says:

> The trouble with me is that I can barely afford to have my scripts typed. I am not looking for sympathy, but a stray typewriter. You talk so lightly about typewriters that it seems everybody has a machine. You then say you can get one cheap. Let me ask you this question: Why does everybody wish to be an author? Merely to enable them to earn money with less physical labor. Therefore everybody has not the available funds to buy a machine or even rent one. This hinders the sale of scripts. In my case I have been in the business two years. I have written eight scripts and have had eight rejections. The reason for the time is that I have had to fight for a typewriter. Now to come to the point. Do you know anybody with a typewriter that has wings?

Take those last two remarks. He has had to fight for a typewriter. Do we know of anyone who wants to give a machine away?

Don't you admire the pluck of a "fight" like that? Can't you feel sympathies aroused for a man who in two years cannot get hold of a machine by his own unaided efforts? Can you read an effusion like that and then wonder why writers and editors refer to a certain class of would-be authors as boobs? Can you have admiration and respect for the invincible determination of a would-be who in two years has worked out eight scripts—one every three months, and now lies on his back wailing that if he had someone give him a machine he could sell? But let us forget the script every three months where there should be three times three scripts a month and turn to the subject of machines.

A typewriter is an absolute necessity not alone to the author but to the person who would become an author. It is as necessary to practice work as it is to selling effort, for the typed script shows the faults as pen copies never can. Mastery of the machine should precede more than casual study.

Let us take the case of John Jones. John is perhaps an office clerk. His salary is ten dollars a week. There is little left for clothes and carfare and lunches after his board is paid. John thinks he can write plays. He looks beyond the mere financial returns. He wants to be an author because God made him one and not because he believes the fake advertising. A machine is the first consideration.

In John's town there is one paper that makes a specialty of advertising second hand stuff in its classified department. Every night John pores over these advertisements. He learns he can buy a little used Snagg, Number Six, for twelve dollars and that an advertiser leaving the city will sacrifice a brand new Galumph for nine dollars and sixty cents. John almost decides to look one of these up, but, fortunately, he meets a chap who bought one. It fell apart after a few weeks' use. Later John meets an advertising agent who tells him that he gets the advertisements that appear in the paper. He has charge of the piano and typewriting advertisements and a single concern may "plant" twenty machines in as many homes, knowing that they will bring a larger sum if sold in a flat than if offered in a store. A small selling commission is given the persons owning the flat from which it is sold. The ad. man gives John a couple of addresses of reliable second hand dealers.

John visits one of these places and finds that he can get a machine for from six to sixty dollars. He can rent a machine from three to five dollars for three months, and that first rental will apply on the purchase price if he decides to keep it.

John picks out a machine that is offered for $35 and pays his five dollars. It means no lunches for a couple of months, but he has saved up all the time he was reading the advertisements and he has it at hand. Three months later he arranges to pay three dollars a month for ten months and the machine is his. It is in good shape and will last for a couple of years or even more if well cared for, and when he comes to buy a new machine he can get a couple of dollars on this against another second hand machine, or can deal with the makers and turn in the old mill at $10 to $15, according to the serial number.

But perhaps John does not like the instalment plan. He wants to buy outright. He can get a fairly decent old style machine for as little as five or six dollars, for few want other than the visible writers now. He does not get much for six dollars, but he gets a machine that will last for perhaps a year with a little nursing. He can get the visible writers, which are more convenient, for eight or ten dollars. He pays two dollars more, but he gets a higher number that will give him an exchange value of from five to ten dollars more when he comes to deal with the manufacturer. This value is purely fictitious, and is merely another way of cutting prices, but the additional two dollars will bring greater comfort in working in that he does not have to be lifting the carriage constantly to see what he has written.

If he wants to do even better, he can buy absolutely brand new machines, but of old models, for as little as $45 at the rate of three dollars a month. A man who cannot raise an initial five dollars and who cannot keep up investing a dollar or two a month in tools is undeserving of sympathy. When a machine that will write can be purchased outright for five dollars, the man or woman who complains that lack of a machine prevents success does not deserve that success.

Don't get a toy machine, one that shows on its face—its type face—that it is a toy. For the same price you can get an honest-to-goodness machine. It will not be gold plated and it may be a bit rusty. Get the rust off with the much advertised oil and keep it oiled against further rust. Go over it with a cloth oiled, not the bearing parts, but all of the parts that are not painted or enameled. Do this once a month and do not have enough oil on the cloth to make the metal greasy. At least once a month oil the bearings; not with an oil can but with a fine camel's hair pencil dipped in the oil and then pressed against the lip of the bottle until the surplus oil is taken off. Be careful not to let the oil get on the rubber rollers. With care a six dollar machine can be made to last two years. That works out at twenty-five cents a month. Surely you can invest that much.

The man who gets worsted in his "fight" for a six dollar typewriter is not fit even to go into the preliminaries. Certainly he is not built to be an author. Don't wish you had a machine. Get one. And in getting one, deal with a place of permanent establishment. Then you have a come-back if the machine is not even worth the six—but do not expect much for that sum.

Pleasing Both.

The script that is most likely to sell is the one that is most likely to appeal to the director as well as the editor. The editor looks at the story quality, and the director regards the visual appeal. One of the men who gets big money for feature production lately passed on three plays with something more than favorable mention and recommended their purchase. Not one of the three had any novelty to the story and one had no excuse for existence, being built on faulty premise from the first. He could see only the production end on the reading. He could not realize that the stories were poor, even if they were spectacular. This does not mean that a big mechanical punch must be put into every story, but it does mean that the director as well as the editor should be appealed to.

Values and Placement.

Have you ever wedged a shred of meat, a tiny seed or perhaps a sliver of toothpick between your teeth? Seemed like a cobblestone or a rope cable, didn't it? Probably you were surprised, on dislodging the object, to see how small it was.

Did you ever stop to think that it is the same way with action? A scene, tame and unimportant in itself, may become dramatic if rightly placed. You see a man with his hand on a press button. He may be calling a waiter that he may give an order for a whiskey and soda. That may be interesting, but it is not important. You may see a keg resting on a cellar floor. It may be vinegar or cement. That is not even interesting. You may see two men talking in a room. It causes speculation but not interest. But if you know that one of those two men is the hero of the story, that the keg contains powder and is placed directly beneath them and if it has been shown that the push button will complete an electrical circuit through a detonating cap paced in the powder, then the situation becomes electrical.

It is not what you have, but what you do with it that counts. Study each scene in its relation to all others that it may be placed to the greatest possible advantage.

Schools and Critics.

Cleve Hallenbeck, after asking a couple of questions, adds:

> Now that I have the floor, I want to say something on the subject of correspondence schools and criticism bureaus. Last December I enrolled for the photoplay course in a well-known correspondence school. My "instructor" did all in his power to help me. Yet, after finishing the course, I had not gained one per cent. of useful information over what I had already gained from a reading of that same instructor's book. My average grade for the course was 99.7, yet I was still unable to sell my stories. I might add that I bought a copy of your "Technique," and any one chapter of it was of more value to me than the correspondence course.
> Not a word as to the criticism bureaus. Sometime ago I sent a script to a well known critic; one whose personal integrity no one would question. Here are his exact words on that script: "A real good story, quite good enough to sell if you will make the change I suggest. I am sure many editors would be as well pleased with it as I, and I would have no hesitation in offering it to X———." (The change he suggested was the insertion of a cut-in leader in the first scene.) Shortly thereafter this same critc became editor for that same X——— company, and I fired the script into him. He promptly fired it back. Not only that, but it since has been refused by eight other editors, and, among all I have written, it holds the record for quick returns from the editorial sanctums.

Mr. Hallenbeck does not take into account the fact that while the critic may have approved the story, he is required, as editor, to make some director see the thing in the same light. But it's a funny sort of criticism that confines itself to the insertion of a single leader.

Studying.

Many writers have been helped to success by study of successful plays in detail, the usual procedure is to see the play, write the script as nearly as possible in accordance with the play on the screen and then study its construction. A western student employs a variant to the idea. She explains:

> I have a strong hunch that this will bore you, but, being an enthusiastic Sargent pupil, I have the usual longing to write to Dear Teacher. I wonder if I have discovered a new way to study plot construction? I watch the papers, and choose a play that is to go on at a local theater in the near future. I look up the synopsis of that play in the World, and from it write a complete working plot, just as if I were going to offer it for sale. When the film is put on, I visit the theater, and compare my plot construction with that on the screen, and in this way see where my faults are. How's that? Original?

This should prove rather more helpful than the older idea, if for no other reason than that the pupil uses more of his own initiative, but in addition to this it gives a basis of comparison. It may even be that now and then the novice will hit upon a more original arrangement, and perhaps find in the advance work and its treatment the germ of a new story and a new handling. It may not suit all students, but it will help many and is worth a trial by all.

Plagiarism.

It will help many writers to read Channing Pollock's "Stop Thief" in a recent issue of the Green Book, but it will not help those who need it most, for these will not be convinced that two or more persons can possibly think of the same idea.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 109.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

> Suppose you have a side angle which throws the picture out of focus on one side, what would you do to remedy this defect? Could it be entirely remedied? In the process of remedying this defect would you or would you not set up other troubles? Could this defect be remedied on all makes of machines?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 103.

The Roll of Honor on question 103 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, and John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut.

The reply of Brother Griffiths is selected for publication, although that of Smith and Solar were also excellent.

Reply to Question No. 103.

By John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn.

The Question:

Given two plano-convex lenses of the same diameter, and equal price, but one tapering to a thin edge and one having an edge ⅛ inch thick, which would you select? Of what optical value is the glass between the two surfaces of a lens? What is the "critical angle" and what is its effect as applied to the condenser?

The Answer:

Given two plano-convex condensing lenses of the same diameter, quality and price, but one having a thin edge and the other an edge ⅛ of an inch thick, I would select the lens having a thin edge by reason of the fact that glass being only partially transparent to light rays, any unnecessary glass means additional loss of light through absorption. The glass between the surfaces of a lens has no value whatever except as a support for the surfaces. By "critical angle," we mean the angle at which a ray of light is totally reflected instead of being transmitted. This angle varies with different kinds of glass, and so far as its effect, as applied to condensers be concerned, it may be considered as an angle of 41 degrees. Therefore in a condenser we have a substance that is only partially transparent within a limited angle and opaque to light rays outside that angle.

With reference to the diagrams, A-B shows the effect of critical angle as applied to condensers. It will be seen there is a minimum distance, viz.: 2½ inches at which the outside rays from the arc can pass through the first surface of a condenser. Diagram B also shows that with a short focal length condensing lens, viz.: a 5 inch, we get a total reflection back of the outside rays at the curved surface if the arc is further than 4¾ inches from the plane of the condensers. Diagram A shows that we cannot get total reflection back from the curved surface no matter what the position of the arc with a 6½ condenser of 4½ inch diameter, if the condenser be made of crown glass which we have assumed to be the case in both instances.

EFFECT OF CRITICAL ANGLE AS APPLIED TO A CONDENSER. ASSUMING ANGLE TO BE 41°

I. A. vs. I. B. E. W.

Some several years ago the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes took the moving picture operators under its sheltering wing. This action promised an immediate and heavy financial loss to the I. A., plus a whole lot of trouble. At best, it meant years of hard work, and the expenditure of much money for organizing purposes, before it could even be expected that the expense account of the I. A. would break even on the operator, much less show a profit.

The stability of the moving picture business was even, at that time, a matter of serious question, and many experienced labor men prophesied the I. A. would rue the day it ever had anything to do with the operator. The I. A., however, shouldered the burden, worked hard and persistently, and has at last laid a solid foundation of operator organization, which is rapidly becoming an important factor in the labor movement.

Meanwhile the moving picture has established its permanency so that the future of the operator is no longer a matter for speculation. This being true, it has, of late, come to my ear that the I. B. E. W., possibly attracted by the revenue of no mean proportions to be derived from so large a body of skilled workers, is seeking to create distrust and dissension among the members of I. A. locals. The bait, which is dangled temptingly before the gaze of the intended victim, takes the form of a promised new international organization, having, at heart, of course, only the welfare of the man who operates the moving picture machine. It is carefully explained that this body will have the support of the large and powerful parent body, already organized and on a sound working basis, viz.: the I. B. E. W. Co-operation in the broadest and truest sense of the word is proposed; that is a part of the "bait."

Yes, if the operator falls for this particular proposition, he will get "co-operation" all right, but, in my opinion, it will be co-operation which will, in the end, leave him very little except the rather doubtful pleasure of "holding the sack." The operator may, in this connection, well remember the words of the Professor: "Nothing up my sleeve, gentlemen, nothing at all to deceive you," and remember that, notwithstanding that assertion, the nimble professor always did deceive.

Well, I think in this case the proposed deception is so scantily hidden as to fail in its purpose with anyone who will but stop, look and listen.

A popular, and much-overworked argument advanced by those who are endeavoring to create dissension and disruption in moving picture organizations now affiliated with the I. A. is: "You can do our work and we can do yours." On the surface this is a sort of brotherly-love, you-help-me-and-I'll-help-you game. Sounds awfully nice, does it not? Better stop, look and listen, however; also you had better grub under the surface of this particular proposition. Under present conditions enjoyed by the operating members of the I. A. about 95 per cent. of the three hundred and sixty-five days in each year mean wages earned. Now, I believe it is the fact that the electrical worker who earns pay for anything even distantly approaching that percentage of working days, has cause to congratulate himself. Look at that proposition carefully, and perhaps you will be able to discern the chocolate-coated gentleman in the woodpile. Simply a small gain to the electrical worker, through the proposed co-operative scheme, of probably 25 per cent. additional working days, with a corresponding loss to the moving picture machine operator. This in itself should be sufficient to cause operators to decline, with or without thanks, but here is a brother to the first-named chocolate-colored gentleman, and he is in the same pile of wood. He is dragged forth to view when we reflect that the number of projectors which require expert operators to handle them are limited—in fact, so limited that the operators, with their present membership, after years of effort and expense on the part of the International Alliance, supported by other influences, including the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, are only now beginning to get well started on the road to 100 per cent. working conditions. Imagine what would result if the entire membership of the electrical workers' organization becomes eligible to direct competition with the operator. Think it over, gentlemen. Sleep on it. Dream about it, and then don't have anything whatever to do with it.

But, aside from personal interest, there is such a thing as gratitude and loyalty. The present improved condition of the operator is due, in large measure to the loyal support given by the present administration of the International Alliance. The International Alliance has consistently supported the operator, and fought his battles for fair conditions and reasonable compensation. Many battles have been won, but the cost has been such that I am told it will require years before the operator will balance the outlay by payment in per capita tax. Naturally, in creating the risk incident to fathering a new branch of labor the International Alliance was looking into the future when it could get the operators sufficiently well organized, and improve his condition to a point where he would be a credit to the organization, and a help to it as well. Don't desert the organization which aided you when you were in desperate need of assistance, and which did not hesitate to come to your rescue with its entire resources, both moral and financial, in time of need. It would not be a very nice thing to do. Some might apply a rather strong term to that sort of thing. I really feel that the entire proposition is a flagrant insult to the intelligence of operators. The moving picture machine operator is first, last and all the time a theatrical worker. He is brother to the stage carpenter, the property man, the stage electrician, the fly-man, etc., all of whom depend for their livelihood upon amusing the public through the medium of the theater. In vaudeville, and, of late, even in legitimate attractions, we find the moving picture being used. Yearly, the operator is brought into closer relation with the stage workers. They are, and should be, of one family, and the self-preservation of the operator demands that he continue in the "house of his father," at least until such time, if that time ever comes, as he proposes to build himself a house of his own; in other words, start an out and out operators' international union. For myself, I don't believe, even that would be at all wise. You are doing pretty well, gentlemen, and had better stick to the devil you know, rather than turn to the devil you don't know. No one is either interested in or envious of a failure. It is only since the success you have achieved under your present affiliation that the cupidity of others has been attracted, and your success has so warped their interpretation of union principles that any means are right if they bring about the results so desirable from their viewpoint. I am told that, defeated in every attempt to infringe upon the rights of the I. A., denied the right to admit operators by the highest labor tribunal in this country, the American Federation of Labor, these interests are now attempting to undermine the bona fide organizations of moving picture machine operators by the formation of dual organizations, holding forth veiled promises of benefits to any who will forsake the known and plunge into the unknown. Just how the sponsors expect to square their consciences with the facts is for them to say. I hold no brief for the defendants. A labor organization which seeks to gain foothold by permitting its members to accept positions at a wage far below that received by the I. A. men displaced has, in my opinion, indicted and convicted itself by violation of its pledge to organized labor. To the moving picture machine operator I can but say: If approached with the suggestion that you change your affiliation from the I. A., just inform the would-be proselyter that you are not yet ready to commit economic suicide.

The time may come when it will be wise to form a moving picture machine operators' international organization, but that time is not yet here, and I much doubt if it will ever arrive.

As to the I. B. E. W. matter—don't monkey with fire unless you wish to be burned.

From Goldfield.

Goldfield, Nevada, says:

> Just a few words in defense of certain Lima, Ohio, operators "knocked" by J. C. Thompson, August 14 issue. In the first place I believe Thompson judged too hastily. Even supposing the light is poor, possibly it is due to inferior carbons, or poor condensers supplied by the "cheap" manager of that particular theater, and the operator must take what he gets and say nothing. (Let me call your attention to what Thompson says about the "Farout Opera House." "Center of picture was bright, and faded away at edges." Does that indicate poor carbons or poor condensing lenses? Not on your life, Goldfield. It represents a wrongly matched up lens system with, probably, the condenser located a wrong distance from the film. Ed.) As to running the film too fast, why that also is, nine times out of ten, due to the manager's orders to "railroad 'em" through, as the crowd is waiting outside. Also quite often a seemingly poor light is not the fault of the operator, but the fault of the film itself. Some producers seemingly take delight in producing dark, jumpy pictures, and as a rule the operator is the goat. As for the picture being out of frame for three minutes, well I don't see any excuse for that condition. (Neither do I. Ed.) But let me say, in closing that the operators are always unmercifully criticised. Let the critic first find out the true condition of things, and then he will be far more considerate in judging us. Thank heaven none of these conditions exist where I am employed, for the manager knows too much about the picture business to slight the operator. He co-operates with us to the benefit of both; also to the benefit of the public.

Goldfield, I know just how you feel about it, and how a great many operators feel about it, but the fact remains that, although I hate like thunder to say it, it is an absolute fact that when I am traveling around—and I do considerable of that about four times in five, when I visit a theater, without the operator knowing I am present, I can see faults in the projection which are traceable directly either to ignorance or carelessness on the part of the operator. That is a strong statement, Goldfield, but it is, nevertheless, a fact. Now, I don't mean that I always see serious faults. In fact projection has improved about 1000 per cent. in the last five years (due I think, at least to some extent, to the efforts of this department), but still in many houses the operator is rankly careless of his projection, and in many other houses is careless in minor things. These criticisms are not published with any idea of injuring the operator—far from it. They are published with view of calling attention to glaring faults in projection, and I have said time and again that the faults complained of may often be traceable to the manager and not the operator. In the Lima case I will tell you privately, by mail, what I did before I published that article, and I guess you will agree that after doing that I was fully justified in its publication.

Just to Show You.

I have received and forwarded a good many film faults showing evidence of poor inspection. The following is a typical reply. It comes from the assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, and is proof that we were getting results. If we had had a more hearty cooperation on the part of operators we would have accomplished much more:

World Film Corporation.

> Office of Assistant General Manager
> 130 West 46th Street, New York.
> September 4, 1915.
> Mr. F. H. Richardson, Editor, Projection Department, New York City.
> Dear Sir:—
> We thank you for your letter of September 2nd, relative to reports on film from the ——— Theater, ———, Michigan. We are immediately taking this up with the manager of our ——— office, as we particularly pride ourselves, and spend a great deal of money—much more than most concerns—to provide, as near as possible, a physically perfect service to exhibitors. Like yourself, we realize quite fully that a picture may be ever so good from a production standpoint, yet, if it is not shown properly on the screen the good work of the producer may go for nothing, so far as the audience which is viewing it be concerned. We are, of course, unable at this time to state just where the trouble lies, but will be glad to advise you further upon receiving a report from the exchange in question, which will be instructed to make a very careful investigation and guard stringently against any such occurrence in the future. Again thanking you for your interest in calling this matter to our attention, we are,
> Yours very truly,
> WORLD FILM CORPORATION.
> (Signed) Harry C. Drum, Assistant General Manager.

I am taking the liberty of publishing this letter as typical of replies received from other producing corporations to which film faults have been sent. There were many operators and managers who thought that we could not do anything. Well, they are entitled to another think, but I have dropped the matter simply because of the fact that some of those who howled the loudest about films being received in poor condition were too lazy or indifferent to take the trouble to cut out the film faults and send them in. We did get quite a goodly number, but if the reports received from operators of bad film condition are anything like justified we should have received at least five thousand a week.

Why Not.

For myself I believe firmly that operators' unions, where they are strong enought to "make it stick," would not be going at all outside their legitimate function by compelling managers to provide sufficient current and proper machine repairs to enable the operator to put on good projection. Of course that sounds a little radical, but it is, nevertheless, a shame to have the operator blamed for faults in his work which are really chargeable directly to the fact that the manager refuses to allow the use of enough current and the purchase of repairs necessary to keep the projector in such shape that the operator can do justice to himself and his work. I do not suppose unions would look favorably upon that kind of a proposition, and I know very well managers would not, but it is something worth thinking over nevertheless.

Lens Combination.

W. M. Overfield, Morgantown, West Virginia, says:

> Distance from back lens of my objective to aperture is 2¾ inches; the diameter of the opening of the objective lens is 1⅝ inches. What condensers should I have, and how should they be placed?

You should use either two 6½ inch condensers with the apex of the curved surface of the front lens 16 inches from the film, or one 6½ and one 7½ inch with the apex of the curved surface of the front lens 17 inches from the film. Please report results.

An Excellent Film Magazine.

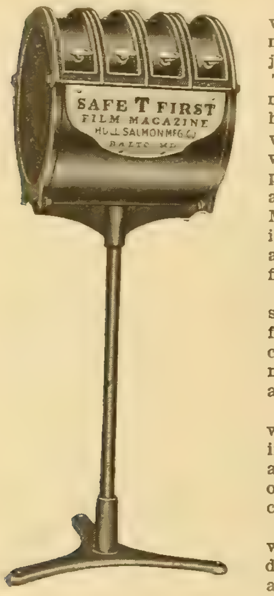
The Hull, Salmon Mfg. Company, Baltimore, Md., has sent to the department a sample of its four-compartment "Safety First" Magazine.



This device contains one-reel chambers, which are merely air spaces formed by means of a one-piece, double sheet iron jacket, and sheet iron discs at the ends. The partitions between the compartments are also double, and have a one-half inch air space between the metal walls. It is presumed these air spaces will collect sufficient smoke, which always precedes actual blaze, and retains same as a blanket against the ingress of flame. Meaning by this the smoke from a burning film outside the magazine would form a blanket which would help to protect the film inside the magazine.

The device occupies little space, is substantially made and, being cylindrical in form, with the doors on top, odds and ends cannot be laid on it, in other words, it cannot be used as a table, which is a distinct advantage.

In operation when the door is lifted, a wire loop raises a separate, curved casting in the bottom of the compartment, thus automatically raising the reel half way out of the compartment. The doors are of cast iron.

This whole device seems to be one to which this department can give its endorsement and approval. Its main features are safety from fire, ease of operation, lasting qualities, and the small space it occupies.

A Good Letter.

F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Texas, writes:

> Will you allow me to consume some of your valuable time with some of my chattering? First and foremost let me try and express my heartfelt appreciation for the good work you have done, and are still doing, for us poor "Crank Turners." You certainly are our champion, and one to whom we can take our troubles and be assured of a square deal. To say what I think of our "Bible" would be just to repeat what has been said over and over again, so therefore it is unnecessary to consume space.
> NO, NO, no—do not publish the answers to the questions. I have dug the answers out for some of them, and others I have relied upon the answers published in the department; result—those I studied out are the ones I remember; the others I forgot. (Told you so.—Ed.)
>
> I worked for power plants several years before I went operating, and find all I learned there to be of benefit in this line of work, which convinces me that a competent operator should know not a little, but a lot about the electrical end of his work.
> I have a copy of the last Handbook, and want one of the new ones as soon as they are available. I figure that the most up-to-date stuff is what we need. I study my "Bible" and the department every day, and am keeping my book up-to-date as much as possible. For instance, regarding Condenser Discoloration, in the Handbook you put forth one idea and later found you were mistaken, and said so in the department. I made a notation on the margin of the book, referring to this article in the department. By the way, let me say I have a file of the department since November, 1913, with the exception of a few numbers that have gotten misplaced. I have then filed in a magazine filer, and it certainly is some swell reference work. Of course I have it all indexed. Can you tell me where I might get these missing numbers to complete my files. Perhaps some of the brothers have two copies of these they might let me have. If there are such I will be only too glad to buy them from them. Let me suggest that the department be printed so that it will not injure any other department of The World by removing it. This can be done as the department usually occupies two leaves.
> I had a member of a certain union to tell me it did not hurt a machine to belt a motor to the fly-wheel. Of course he is wrong, but I did not argue the question with him, as I saw at once he did not know what he was talking about. I will not give the number of the union he belongs to, for it might embarrass the others, and I do not blame them. I have been informed that projection is rather rotten in the city he belongs in, and if he is a sample of the kind of operators there, I do not doubt it—what says Friend Richardson about this?
> I am trying mighty hard to put on first class projection and believe I have made some improvement since I have been here, one that I know of, that is all my pictures goes on the screen in frame. I had an assistant who said it did not make any difference as to this as this was what the framing lever was for. Well he did not last very long. I am running two Powers' Six A, taking 110 A. C. from city lines using a converter and get mighty good results on the screen. Have been told the projection is equal to that of Houston, but as to this I cannot say, though I hope it is true. I try hard enough to improve my work. My manager was in Houston and saw a picture, and then we ran it, and he says it was much clearer here than in that city. I have operated about everything from an Optograph to a Simplex, and the more I study the more I find to learn about operating But if hard work and study will put me to the front, I will get there by and by. Accept my best wishes for yourself, the department and the Go-Devil.

Brother Irvin is the right sort. He does not say whether he belongs to a local or not, but if he don't he ought to. The I. A. needs men of this kind in its ranks. As to belting to a fly-wheel, why I have expressed my opinion on that proposition a good many times. It is bad practice. It is putting extra pressure on the high speed shaft which carries also one-half of the very heart of the projector, viz.; the cam. Common sense ought to tell anyone that belting to the fly-wheel would in the very nature of things be poor practice. The mere fact that the man made an error in this particular does not prove that he is not a good operator, but I presume Friend Irvin had other reasons for forming a poor opinion of the work of this particular man. That assistant ought not to last very long unless he changed his views quickly. As to my being a "champion," nothing doing in that line. I simply try to do right, as I see it. You can get the missing numbers from the M. P. World, I think. 10c. each.

Flicker Eliminator.

H. Cuppaidge, Worcester, Massachusetts, says:

> Enclosed find tracing of a French patent granted in 1909 for the prevention of flicker in moving picture machines. Did you ever hear of its being used, or do you know why it has not been? Can find no mention of it, other than the granting of the patent. The idea is to project an auxiliary beam of reflected light through the stereo, which is also provided with a shutter, operating alternately with that of the film.

Yes, Brother Cuppaidge, those schemes are old, but they crop up every now and then. I suppose that particular idea is presented to machine manufacturers, and to this department, on an average of at least once a month. As the Irishman says: "It's a fine scheme all right, the only trouble being that it won't work; outside of that it is all right." The reason it won't work lies in the fact that it destroys the high light and contrast in the picture.

To Be Tested.

Mr. Samuel Wein New York City, calls our attention to the fact that glass decolorized by means of selenium possesses an unusual clearness and brilliancy. He also makes other and more important claims, which I have referred to a large producing house, who have promised to make an effort to have experimental lenses made after the process suggested. We hope to hear more of this particular thing later.

Film Signal.

Herbert C. Conord, licensed operator, is the inventor of what is to be known as the Conord Automatic Signal, the idea being to automatically notify the operator of the approaching end of a film, so that he may prepare to project from the other machine.

Briefly, Mr. Conord's device operates as follows: First, at any desired distance from the tail piece, a narrow strip of tin foil is attached to the film, on the celluloid side, as shown in the illustration, with ordinary cement. The roller shown in the bracket consists of two metal end pieces joined by fibre, one representing either pole of the battery to which it is attached. On a Powers machine the bracket of this roller is attached by means of the two screws which hold the lower take-up bracket spring, 717, Plate 1, of the Handbook, P. 272, Handbook. Metal contacts of the fibre roller rests against the celluloid side of the film, and when the strip of tin foil comes along the electric current is completed and rings a bell.

The device seems to be reasonably positive in its action, is not in the least in the way, and is, in fact, an attachment which will undoubtedly do the work intended, but it would be up to the operator to put on the tin foil. The only real weakness I can see is that a pin point scratch across the tin foil might break the circuit, but I think this would not be very likely to occur.

Queer Situation.

Some weeks ago I published an editorial setting forth certain peculiarities incident to the situation as affecting unionism of New York operators and the improvement of his condition. I made certain statements, and at the risk of offending some of my good friends, I want now to strengthen those statements by saying that after five years of effort the New York operator, so far as his working conditions are concerned stands practically where he stood when he started, with the single qualification that, in the very nature of things, operating rooms and conditions, as regards ventilation, etc., have improved during that time. What I mean to say is this: The New York Operators' Union has accomplished practically absolutely nothing for the benefit of its members, notwithstanding the fact that it has collected several thousand dollars a year in revenue from the men. Now, I can imagine the little knots of men who will gather and discuss (and cuss) and dispute this statement, but I believe I know the New York situation about as well as anyone and am prepared to say that the statement is absolutely correct, and in proof can take any one of an inquiring turn of mind into literally hundreds of New York theaters where salaries are not one cent higher than they were five years ago, and that means ten to eighteen dollars a week. Let those who disagree produce concrete facts and figures in support of their contention. Let them show what the union has DONE besides collect money.

Now, don't swell your manly chest, and sport about the few houses that demand very high class service, and pay from thirty to forty dollars a week. There are some, yes, but these salaries are due only partly to union influence, and more largely to the fact that the very best possible operating talent is demanded in their operating rooms.

Now, I am not making these statements for fun. It is going to make a certain element of New York operators my mortal enemies, I suppose, and that it is not a pleasant thing to do. But unless somebody sticks a knife into the wind bag and lets some of the hot air out, it will be a long time before we get down to brass tacks, and get New York organized along lines that will really accomplish something. New York operators ought to have a minimum of twenty-one dollars (three dollars a day) and a maximum of fifty dollars for high class special productions, such as "The Birth of a Nation." Large photoplay theaters in New York City ought to demand high class talent in their operating rooms (I am not speaking of the Broadway houses, but of the larger, better class general run of photoplay theaters) and they ought to be willing to, or at least be made to, pay from thirty to forty dollars a week for that talent—it is worth it.

And now look at the absurdity of the present situation. Remembering carefully one of the reasons I set forth in a former article why the union has failed of its purpose, add to that the fact that Greater New York is something like thirty-six miles long in its extreme dimensions, and at least thirty miles long from its northern limits to Coney Island, and that in order to attend a meeting of the present local and return home the Coney Island operator, for instance, must travel more than thirty miles, with result that he seldom or never does attend a meeting, and therefore loses interest in what goes on. But when you talk to the Brooklyn man of a Brooklyn local he immediately and enthusiastically agrees, and then on second thought a look of horror overspreads his classic countenance, and he exclaims: "Why, my God, we would lose the Broadway jobs!" Ditto with the Bronx; ditto with Coney Island, and the whole thing falls flat.

When you talk to 306 about establishing active branches in the various sections, why you might as well ask a stone wall to promenade up and down the street. You would have just as much effect. It is a discouraging proposition, and I have about lost interest. If the New York operator is so backward (some of him) and so utterly foolish that he will allow things to drift along as they are now drifting, year after year, without accomplishing anything, why I suppose it is up to him, but it is an idiotic proposition, just the same, for which there is absolutely no sane excuse.

Three-Phase vs. Single-Phase.

Arthur H. Robbins, Rockland, Massachusetts, says:

> With regard to the question of three-phase vs. single-phase, I agree that good results may be obtained with a single-phase machine, but believe that it is good practice to install a three-phase motor generator set, provided, of course, a three-phase supply may be had. The three-phase motor operates with less vibration, costs less, weighs less, and is, in general, more reliable than is the single-phase motor. The superiority and reliability does not lie in the motor itself, but applies more particularly to the necessary starting equipment. In the question of the gas engine which you used for an analogy, is it not true that a two-cycle engine receives an impulse every revolution, and a four cycle engine every two revolutions? (Yes, that is correct; my mistake—your treat.—Ed.)
> Referring to the question of the piano light, I had the pleasure of making the electrical installation in the hall where I am operating once a week, and I provided the piano with a nice, little, portable, flexible arm with a half reflector and a 2 C. P. lamp. It gives perfect satisfaction.
> With reference to the question of the rotary convertor arrangement, as suggested by Gary, Ind., the scheme can be worked all right, but here are a few points which must be considered. It would be interesting to find out what arrangement could be made with the power company. It is quite general practice, I believe, for such companies to charge a large price for break-down service. They would rather, of course, get a man as a regular customer. The question of delivering power back into the power company's system should be considered, as it is evident that if the switches are not handled very carefully this may happen. The danger thus arising is the chance of throwing A. C. into the power company's lines some time when the supply is cut off, say at the power station's switchboard, and, of course, the transformers on the system will make the line alive with primary voltage, the existence of which the power company would not be aware of. Switches should be arranged so that the above condition cannot exist. The above suggestions apply to questions found in issue of August 28, and are given purely in a spirit of cooperation.

An excellent letter, written by a man who has evidently "looked into things." I believe Brother Robbins, who, by the way, is an electrical engineer, and an associate member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, has set forth the single-phase-three-phase matter about as it stands. Theater managers will do well to notice the 2 C. P. piano lamp. I had never really experimented with the necessary C. P. of a piano lamp, but guessed it at four; it seems I have guessed twice too much. If the 2 C. P. is sufficient to allow the pianist to do his work with reasonable comfort, it is better for all concerned.

As to the charge for break-down service, why even supposing it is high, if reasonable care is taken of the theater installation there ought not to be much of the power companies' current required, therefore its high cost per unit would not be a serious matter. As to the possibility of delivering current back into the power company's mains, and thus creating a dangerous condition in case power be shut off from the line with men working on them, why the point is very well taken. I have not the article before me, as I am dictating this at home in bed, having been presented, through the carelessness of a bicyclist, with the choice of wiping him off the map, or slamming my machine into the curb, choosing the latter with result of badly bruised pedal extremity, which caused the saw-bones to order me to keep quiet for a few days, and stay in bed on pain of being afflicted with wadda'y think? Haw! Haw! Haw! House-maid's knee!. I am not eligible to membership in the house-maids' union, therefore am sticking in bed according to orders, but my enemies need not get chesty, because I'll be up again tomorrow.

I would cordially invite Brother Robbins to supplement his excellent letter by another one containing a sketch of the proper switch arrangement for such an installation.

Relative Cost.

C. A. Musser, Shepherdstown, West Virginia, says:

> Am a regular fan of the department. Am much interested in the questions and answers propounded therein, and believe that much good is being accomplished. The World certainly is a textbook for the exhibitor, the operator and the purchaser. The practical questions discussed therein most emphatically tend to make conditions better. I have read the department so thoroughly that I am beginning to dream of some of those complex matters dealing with light rays, and proper illumination of theaters. It certainly has gone home in at least one case. In my little theater we have made a study of these conditions, and while we cannot hope to have everything the larger city houses have, yet we do pride ourselves on projecting a well illuminated, rock steady picture, run at proper speed. (That's two items all too many city theaters lack.—Ed.) We are getting good results from 60 cycle, 110 volt current, through a reducer using an Edison machine on an 80 foot throw, projecting approximately a 16 foot picture.
> And now here is a question I have not seen dealt with in the department, and which I believe is of sufficiently universal interest to justify attention. Using 110 volt, 60 cycle current, through a reducer, we use approximately 2½ K. W. per hour at the machine At a ten cent rate this makes our hourly cost about 25 cents. Now: Without taking into consideration the improvement in the picture, would it be more economical to use a 2 H. P. motor and a 1½ K. W. D. C. generator, and what would be the cost as compared to our ten cent rate? Would you consider such a proposition as being a good one, and what as to the units named?

You could not expect a motor generator set with an over-all efficiency much greater than 70 per cent. To deliver 1½ K. W. D. C. would require an input of approximately 2.2 K. W., which would be, at a ten cent rate, 22 cents per hour. If the current be generated at 60 volts this would provide you with approximately 25 amperes at the arc.

No, I would not consider it a good proposition, viewed merely as a financial one, but viewed as a financial proposition plus the improvement in the picture, I would. But I would not want so small a motor or generator. In fact I myself would not consider installing anything less than 3 K. W., 60 volt generator, or if you preferred it a 70 volt generator. A 3 K. W., 60 volt generator would provide you with 50 amperes, and if it were a 70 volt would provide you with about 43 amperes. The waste on a 70 volt machine would be greater but the arc would handle better. However, as a matter of fact, I would not get that kind of outfit at all, but one of the motor generator sets made for the purpose. They may cost a little more, but they will work better, and give greater satisfaction in the long run—that is unless you would consider an isolated plant to make your own current.

To Hide the Seams.

J. H. Genter, manufacturer of the mirroroid screen, writes to say that he has discovered a method of hiding the seams in metallic surface screens. Mr. Genter says he has experimented for a long time, first to discover the reason for the seams showing, and second to discover a method to prevent them from showing. He claims success in both counts. Let us hope his claims will be fully justified. I will have more to say about this when I have examined further into the matter.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances have been demonstrated to its editor.

Wants to Correspond with Amateur Cameramen.

A. L. Chocklett, 1014 Seventh avenue, Roanoke, Va., writes:

> I think the World made a wise move when it started the Photography page. This is a source of much interest to me. I turn to the page as soon as I receive the World.
> I have tried the direct positive formulas and find that they are not perfected as yet although it does turn the negative to positive, which is rather dense.
> I think it would be a good idea for amateurs to correspond; one may have some trouble for which another would know the remedy. If it would not be too much trouble I would like you to mention that I would like to hear from other amateur motion picture camera men.

Roanoke must possess a number of enthusiastic amateur camera operators as Brother Chocklett encloses a copy of the initial number of a paper called "The Amateur Cameraman" which is "Issued weekly at Roanoke, Va." It has a page editorial about the welfare of amateur owners of cameras, some short articles on cinematographic topics and some skits about young men in Roanoke who evidently have motion picture cameras.

The paper is very interesting and we hope to receive copies of the later numbers.

A Traveler's Camera.

T. H. W., Cambridge, Mass., queries:

> I want to find out whether or not you think the small Urban machine is the right kind of a camera to carry around on one's travels. I have heard that it is excellent for this form of work. If you do not think that it is the best, kindly give me a list of the cameras that you think are suitable for the traveler and at the same time light, compact and accessible.

The kind of camera for a traveler depends entirely upon what the traveler requires of a camera. If he is satisfied with ordinarily good results in straight scenic work under favorable conditions and does not expect to exhibit these results in a professional way, or in competition with professionally produced pictures, but only wishes to make a few feet of interesting stuff here and there for the edification of himself and friends, he will be able to get a great deal of satisfaction from almost any of the numerous small cameras on the market providing they are of the finger or claw type in which the claws make a positive engagement with the film in drawing it down between successive exposures. As a rule it is well to avoid the slip-claw, or sliding movement, in which the film is drawn down by a spring claw which passes back up the perforations like a rachet for the next engagement. Such a movement is liable to cause "creeping" to loose the loop and thereby cause torn perforations and "buckling." "Creeping" is the term used where the fingers fall short of engaging the fourth succeeding perforation each time thereby causing some of the "frames" to overlap for the space between two or more perforations.

A "frame" is a single picture in either a negative or positive film and is bounded on each side by four perforations; each "frame" is three-fourths of an inch in height making sixteen frames to the foot of film. Where "creeping" has occurred, there will be more than sixteen exposures on a foot of film and necessarily some of them will overlap.

Of the small amateur cameras that have been examined by this department, there are the Urban, the Alvista, the Alamo, the Ensign, the Erneman, the Kinak, and the Kinodak.

"Buckling" is the term used when the film tangles or "buckles" inside the camera and is not wound up or "taken up" properly in the "take up" retort or magazine.

The low price at which these cameras are sold prohibit their possessing the accurate workmanship and fine adjustment found in professional cameras, and while some of them are capable of doing surprisingly good work they cannot be expected to compete consistently with higher grade cameras. It is almost needless to say that any motion picture camera must be supported on a rigid base while the crank is turned or the turning of the handle will twise the camera and produce a weaving movement of the picture upon the screen.

For high grade work which will compare favorably with any of the best of professional pictures, the traveler will provide himself with one of the compact professional models of cameras and a light, but very rigid tripod, with turning and tilting top. The more compact professional cameras are the Pathe Portable, the Newman and Sinclair Reflex, the Debrie and the Universal, which range from $250 to about $800 without tripod or accessories, except lens and two retorts, which are included.

More About Direct Positives.

A. L. Smith, Portland, Oregon, writes:

> Kindly accept my thanks for the mention made in the November 2 edition of the Moving Picture World of my reversed negative process, and will state that I did not expect to receive any favorable mention on those samples I handed your Mr. Nelson, as they were far from being up to the standard which this process is capable of attaining.
> I herewith enclose another sample which is on Austin Edwards (Ensign) negative, and I believe you will agree with me that same is a good projectible film. This is a section of about 100 feet of film I took on the zone of the San Francisco Exposition, while I was working for the concession early at the opening of the Fair. The tonal values are correct, as the background is a lead-gray color, also the color of the comedian's coat is a mixed gray color, taken at 4 p. m. with F. 8 stop. Had there been any black objects in range, they would have been black, thus rendering proper tone. You will also notice the gradation seems perfect and details good. Shadows are transparent, in fact you can read a newspaper through the darkest parts, etc.
> I am expecting a shipment of Cramer negative which is as good as the Austin Edwards in every way for this process, and if you desire I will send you a hundred feet of reversed film in order to allow you to witness the results on the screen.
> I might mention that I left the Exposition as photographer there to join the Northwest Weekly to further exploit the reversed negative process, and we probably will very soon put up chemicals for ready use and develop films by this process, thus putting this process within the reach of every one.
> I am now working on a color process to be used with this reversal method and will send some samples as soon as I get a little better results. It is a hard proposition, but it looks possible. I have been working this phase of the proposition and the reversal process is really a by-product of my experimenting with the color proposition. I also ran across a number of other phenomena that may be of interest to your readers. One is on the refraction of light resulting from camera shutters being placed away from the film and under certain conditions resulting in the image appearing out of focus when developed. I believe I could give you rather an interesting account on the above should you ask it.
> I also wish to say that we will hereafter be known as the Economy Cinematographers Specialty Company, in lieu of the "Northwest Weekly."

The samples sent by Mr. Smith are very good indeed, comparing very favorably with ordinary positives printed from negative film.

If Brother Smith should be able to compound the chemicals in such a way that other operators can produce as good results as the samples which he sent to me I am sure he will be able to make a nice comfortable little pot of money for himself.

Any new phenomena that you have discovered in your experiments will doubtless be of great interest to all of us and we hope you will "come again soon."

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

BAD MONEY (Biograph), Oct. 18.—Alan Hale and Claire McDowell have the leading roles in this one-reel drama which introduces the spectator to a novel counterfeiting plant and furnishes plenty of excitement. A good detective drama.

THE LONELY FISHERMAN (Lubin), Oct. 18.—An artless romance, woven about a hunchback fisherman and a waif from the sea, is found in this one-reel drama. The picture is a genre study of fair merit and good local color. Melvin Mayo does only moderately well as the hunchback, and is supported by Dorothy Barrett and Jay Morley.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 85, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 18.—An exciting "tie rush" at Columbia College, New York, opens this number. Other items: Baby parade, Bayonne, N. J.; Marquis and Marchioness of Aberdeen at New York; football match between Carlisle and Harvard, Cambridge; a very sad day in Chicago—saloons all closed; tractor dragging artillery up hill, San Diego; Lord Wimbourne views regiment, Ballincura, Ireland; exhibition of London Fire Brigade; Italian lines in Trinitine Mountains; Boston Red Sox; submarines at Newport, R. I.

QUITS (Vitagraph), Oct. 18.—Seldom has the Vitagraph Company hit upon a brighter or more amusing one-reel comedy in which to let Wally Van work his will and exercise his comedy legs. There is a neatness of handling and a clever turn to the finish that is always the aim of the scenario writer. Frank Dazey and Cecilie Peterson come in for the credit, in this case. Charles Eldridge and Nitra Frazer give Mr. Van excellent support.

ADAM'S ANCESTORS (Kalem), Oct. 19.—The title of this one-reel comedy does not refer to any of the members of the ancient and honorable corps de ballet; but has to do with two knights of the road, who pose as ungainly specimens of prehistoric man in the studio of an artist and then start a riot out in the open. Bud Duncan and Rube Miller are the two frisky knights, and the action is filled with broad burlesque.

CUTTING DOWN EXPENSES (Lubin), Oct. 19.—Most of the action in this one-reel comedy takes place in a sleeping car, and illustrates the comic adventures of a bridal couple. It contains considerable innocent fun, and is spiritly acted by David L. Don, Mary Charleson and Jack Delson.

CARTOONS IN THE COUNTRY (Edison), Oct. 20.—The Edison Company has taken advantage of a novel manner of presenting animated certoons. In this particular instance the inmates of a boarding house in the country look with interest over a book of cartoons. At intervals an interruption comes in the shape of a new applicant for room and board. The cartoons themselves are amusing.

THE FABLE OF "THE SORROWS OF THE UNEMPLOYED AND THE DANGER OF CHANGING FROM BILL TO HAROLD" (Essanay), Oct. 20.—The inconvenience of having too much money is set forth in a highly moral but more highly humorous manner, in this one-reel George Ade fable. As usual, the sub-titles are half the show. Frank Wade, De Wess Seewir and Alice Edwards are in the cast. Directed by Richard Foster Baker.

BROWN'S SUMMER BOARDERS (Vitagraph), Oct. 20.—The plot of this one-reel comedy is extremely humorous and has been capitally screened by George Ridgwell. Marie Coolidge Rask is the author, her work being intrusted to a capable cast headed by Jay Dwiggins and including Arline Pretty, Thomas R. Mills, Garry McGarry, Charles Eldridge and Edwina Robbins.

THE VULTURE (Biograph), Oct. 21.—English high society forms the background of this one-reel drama. A titled lady who openly insults an actress, at a reception, and learns later that the woman she called "The Vulture" has befriended her. The drama is an adaptation from Truth's "Queer Stories," and is ably played by Augusta Anderson, Charles Perley, Charles Bennett and Clairette Clair.

WHEN SNAKEVILLE STRUCK OIL (Essanay), Oct. 21.—Given an ordinarily comic plot and four such skilled screen actors as Harry Todd, Victor Potel, Robert McKenzie and Margaret Joslin are sure to make it prolific of laughs. The one-reel comedy, "When Snakeville Struck Oil," is richly humorous in theme, a fact of which the cast takes every advantage.

BEACHED AND BLEACHED (MinA), Oct. 21.—The fun in this one-reel comedy is of the cleancut, unlabored sort that appeals to people who take their brains to the theater with them. It has a humorous plot, logically developed and is devoid of horse-play. Billy Parsons, Constance Talmadge and James O'Shea do excellent work in the leading roles.

ON THE TURN OF A CARD (Vitagraph), Oct. 21.—There is nothing strikingly original in this one-reel drama, but, Anne Maxwell, the author, has provided a number of strong situations, and William Humphrey has given it an intelligent production. Harry Morey, Garry McGarry, Carolyn Birch and Louise Beaudet make the picture an impressive one.

BRONCHO BILLY EVENS MATTERS (Essanay), Oct. 22.—The situations in this one-reel drama will bring joy to the admirers of Broncho Billy. It presents the character in a most enviable light and G. W. Anderson easily repeats the success he has achieved in former photoplays devoted to the deeds of the best known of his impersonations Marguerite Clayton is a member of the cast.

A WOMAN RECLAIMED (Lubin), Oct. 22.—It has been claimed that "crook" dramas have had their day, nevertheless, a well-conceived and executed story of crime will always interest. "A Woman Reclaimed" is an excellent one-reel drama of this class, written by Adrian Gil-Spear. Alan Quinn, Joseph W. Smiley, William Cahill and Lilie Leslie give ample proof of their fitness in the principal characters.

A SAFE INVESTMENT (Vitagraph), Oct. 22.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are almost always the safest kind of an amusement investment. This one-reel comedy, provided for them by Paul West, will return a handsome profit in the nature of chuckles and hearty laughs. "Gee Whiz" mine stock may not be a "war baby," but the Drews show the spectators how to collect five hundred per cent. on their investment.

THE BANKER AND THE THIEF (Biograph), Oct. 23.—The situations in this one-reel drama are more theatric than convincing. There is plenty of action in it, however, and the playing of Herbert Barrington, Hector V. Sarno and Isabel Rea is entirely satisfactory.

THE BROKEN WORD (Edison), Oct. 23.—W. Garey Wonderly is the author of this one-reel drama which deals in a realistic fashion with several dramatic phases of life in the Southwest. The rivalry of two suitors for the hand of a pretty school teacher is "the cause of the trouble." Grace Williams, Ben Turbett, Herbert Prior, Yale Benner and Sellie Grant comprise the proficient cast.

A MILE A MINUTE (Episode No. 50 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Oct. 23.—The action of this one-reel drama keeps up a mile a minute pace, and Helen Gibson, the new heroine of the series, shows any amount of nerve, leaping on and off moving trains in the most reckless manner. The story tells of the doings of two railroad thieves and their defeat by Helen. Robyn Adair, E. Z. Roberts and Charles Murchison are members of the cast.

PLAYING HORSE (Lubin), Oct. 23.—In this one-reel comedy, Billie Reeves again demonstrates his versatility by becoming a hypnotist. He is not much of a success at it, however, except from a comic point of view. Mae Hotely, George Clarke, Patsy De Forest and Earl White assist in the acting of the picture. Epes W. Sargent is the author.

IN LEOPARD LAND (Selig), Oct. 23.—One of the best actors in this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama is a full-grown elephant; another is a fearless little girl. A leopard is the villain of the plot and the elephant does him up in fine style.

General Film Company Specials.

INHERITANCE (Essanay), Oct. 18.—Joseph A. Roach has written a three-reel drama which is a faint reflection of Ibsen's "Ghost." It is a carefully considered study in heredity, put into effective photoplay form, and permits all the members of the cast to make strong impressions. Bryant Washburn, Ruth Stonehouse, Sydney Ainsworth, Florence Oberle and John H. Cossar carry the weight of the acting.

THE VILLAGE OUTCAST (George Kleine), Oct. 18.—Ethel Grandin is the star of this two-reel drama and makes much of the material given her. The theme is the oft-repeated tale of the maiden who "loved not wisely, but too well," and depends but little upon complication of plot. The familiar village types are portrayed by a satisfactory cast.

THE BRAVE DESERVE THE FAIR (Selig), Oct. 18.—Tom Mix comes near being the entire outfit in this two-reel drama, and shines brilliantly as author, actor and producer. As he keeps the location in the West, retains his "chaps" and shares the acting with a well chosen company, his success will occasion no surprise.

THE OUTER EDGE (Essanay), Oct. 19.—Another of Henry B. Walthall's powerful portrayals of the deeper emotions of life—the result of sin and suffering—is the distinguishing feature of this three-reel drama. The play is adapted from a story by Henry Oyen, and has received the benefit of a worthy production and in addition to Mr. Walthall, the finished art of Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Charles J. Stine, Jack Meredith and Thomas Commerford.

THE GODS REDEEM (Vitagraph), Oct. 19.—The lesson which James Oliver Curwood inculcates in this two-reel drama, cannot be too often repeated. Mr. Curwood has fashioned a deeply interesting photoplay about the lives of a girl pickpocket and a man who has sunk to the lowest social level. Their rise to better things brings the drama to a satisfactory finish. Leah Baird and Maurice Costello meet the requirements of these roles with complete skill.

THE MAN IN HIDING (Kalem), Oct. 20.—Harry Millirde, Alice Hollister, Nell Farrin, William McNulty and James B. Ross constitute the cast of this two-reel drama, by C. Doty Hobart. The situations are frankly melodramatic and there is plenty of action throughout the picture.

NELL OF THE DANCE HALL (Lubin), Oct. 20.—Edythe Sterling, L. C. Shumway, George Routh and Melvin Mayo have the leading parts in this three-reel drama, which deals with the reformation of a dancer and her marriage to a clergyman.

TO CHERISH AND PROTECT (Vitagraph), Oct. 20.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1664, issue of September 4.

WHEN YOUTH IS AMBITIOUS (Lubin), Oct. 21.—This two-reel drama has an underlying touch of poetry all through the action, and illustrates one of the deeper truths of life. The action is never forced, but the theme is an excellent one and reflects credit upon the author, Daniel Carson Goodman. Robert Cain, Mary Charleson, Francis Joyner, George Clarke, Rosetta Brice, Liela Frost and Kempton Greene are members of a well selected cast.

THE LAND OF ADVENTURE (Edison), Oct. 22.—Romance runs riot through the three reels of this drama, which was written and directed by Harry Beaumont. The plot is on the lines laid down by Richard Harding Davis in "The Soldier of Fortune," a South American revolution having its place in the picture. The list of characters is a long one, Edward Earle taking the leading juvenile role. Johnnie Walker, Margaret Prussing and Jean Dumar are prominent members of the cast.

THE SPIDER (Essanay), Oct. 23.—"The Spider and the Fly" would be a more comprehensive title for this two-reel drama, written by James Francis Dwyer, a pretty country girl just escaping the evil designs of an aged roue. The story is developed skilfully, and Lawrence Windom, the director, has given it a thoroughly good production. John A. Lorenz, Ruth Stonehouse and Hugh E. Thompson keep the quality of the acting at a high standard.

THE WOMAN IN THE BOX (Vitagraph), Oct. 23.—High-pressure romance, with scenes in Mexico and a U. S. Secret Service officer in love with the wife of a Mexican official, who is plotting against the United States, is found in this two-reel drama, written by Edward Wm. Fowler. The story is engrossing, the local color realistic, and the photoplay is vividly acted by Harry Morey, Peggy Blake, L. Rogers Lytton and George Cooper.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 42, 1915 (Mutual), Oct. 21.—This issu contains, among other interesting items, views of the St. Leger handicap run at Churchill Downs, the "K" group of submarines leaving for San-Francisco, Jim Corbett and some fellow-actors and friends in a frolic on Long Island, a view of Captain Peary and some interesting war pictures.

THE REFORMER (Casino), Oct. 24.—Alice Dovey is featured in this comedy which is quite amusing. The "reformer" in a campaign against white slavery finds herself in an embarrassing position, having caused the kidnapping of a bride. In spite of the fact that the subject is not all that might be desired, the picture contains good comedy.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST, NO. 7 (Gaumont), Oct. 26.—This film takes us on a delightful tour up the Hudson from New York to Albany, and is on the same reel with "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Oct. 26.—An animated cartoon in which Harry M. Palmer represents Mr. Jones in a state of near delirium tremens from the addiction of his family to the following of present-day tremens styles of dress.

ARTILLERY AND LOVE (Novelty), Oct. 27.—This is an acceptable farce comedy in which the villain plays coward, leaves the girl on a rock at sea and proceeds to save himself from which he believes to be a shower of cannon balls.

JERRY TO THE RESCUE (Cub), Oct. 29.—This is rather a good comedy where Jerry (George Ovey) and the villain have a "set to," and the villain falls over a cliff followed by Jerry who also takes a dive but bobs up again all serenely.

AN AUTO BUNGALOW FRACAS (Beauty), Oct. 30.—A neat little comedy, with John Sheehan, Carol Holloway, John Steppling and Dick Rosson in the cast. The wife inherits money and secretly buys an auto and a bungalow, her husband suffering greatly from jealousy until he learns who the men are she is dealing with. A pleasing little plot.

THE FISHERWOMAN (Thanhouser), Oct. 31.—A pretty story of the seashore. The fisherwoman allows her son to return to the city after his graduation from college. His wife deserts him for another; she is shipwrecked and the mother saves her life. The plot is interesting and the story handled pleasingly.

FREDDY, THE FAKE FISHERMAN (Falstaff), Nov. 1.—In which a young man poses as an expert fisherman to please the girl's father. The fishing trip is quite a wild affair, with plenty of accidents in it. This is nicely pictured and amusing.

THE FORTUNE HUNTERS (Novelty), Nov. 3.—Conventional comedy, in which Mrs. Moneybags and her girl friend exchange places to fool the widow's three suitors. Percy remains true and wins her hand in the end. The scenes and photography are good, but the story is one of only average interest.

CLARISSA'S CHARMING CALF (Falstaff), Nov. 4.—A nonsensical number in which a man appears as the belle of the small town. She wins the beauty contest and is offered a job in vaudeville. This contains some quite funny situations and is well pictured.

WHO'S WHO (Cub), Nov. 5.—George Ovey, the comedian, gets sadly twisted between two women who look exactly alike. Trouble arises out of the fact that one of them is the wife of another man. The plot of the story is quite a good one as farce comedy plots go, and most audiences will find considerable amusement in viewing this picture.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE SHERIFF OF WILLOW CREEK (Mustang), Oct. 22.—Director Cooley has made a very acceptable production of this two-reel feature. J. Forrest Taylor plays the male lead, and plays it well. The picture is full of human interest, and holds the attention well. The story is of how the brother of the sheriff, who has been away for a long time, returns and marries the girl that his brother loves, without knowing it. Later he is arrested for highway robbery, and the sheriff keeps the wife in ignorance of the reason of his absence until his return.

BUCK'S LADY FRIEND (Mustang), Oct. 23.—A three-reel comedy in which Buck is subject to considerable embarrassment on account of the instability and lack of faith of his "lady friend." The comedy of this production is very good. Buck is anxious to have his "lady friend" see him act. The play becomes rather too realistic for the director when Buck makes a violent attack on one of the actors who has presumed to make eyes at the lady. This is a good one.

OUT OF THE ASHES (American), Oct. 25.—A two-reel subject, featuring Edward Coxen, Winifred Greenwood, George Field and Frank Thorne. This tells of a young surgeon who goes West after presumably disgracing himself. Here he falls in love with the wife of a brute. A half-wit sets the town on fire and some exciting scenes occur. The fire was well handled throughout. At the close the brutal husband is killed, the surgeon saves the life of a child and is married to the mother. The plot is not in any way powerful, but makes an entertaining story.

THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS (Centaur), Oct. 27.—In this three-reel feature directed by Arthur Maude, the story used for the basis of the picture was written by Crane Wilbur, who also plays the leading role. Big things have been aimed at in the production which have to a certain extent been realized. The most effective portion of it is divided between the second and third acts. Quite a realistic picture has been drawn of the terrible realities of war, and an unusual but commendable point about it is that cowardice is represented by brutality. Although there are points of criticism about the production, especially in the costuming, for instance, the too picturesque garb of Kindheart, it represents at the same time a fair amount of thought, and is commendable in intention. Most audiences will take kindly to "The Blood of Our Brothers."

THE WHITE KING OF THE ZARAS (Centaur), Oct. 28.—The attraction of this two-part film lies chiefly in the acting of the animals. It is one of the Stanley series, and purports to take us into the African jungles. There is less realism than there might be about the sand storm scene where the habitations of the villagers are supposed to be blown over by a terrific wind.

THE IDOL (American-Clipper), Oct. 30.—A three-reel story, featuring E. Forrest Taylor, Helene Rosson, Jack Prescott and others. A young actor goes to the bad through drink. An actress, who has joined the Salvation Army in search of local color, aids in the regeneration of the actor. When he learns who she is he becomes very angry, this part in fact being considerably overdone. Later, however, they appear in the same play and make a joint success. The production is well-constructed, and while not free from obvious situations, makes, on the whole, an enjoyable offering.

THE COMMUTED SENTENCE (Thanhouser), Nov. 2.—A two-reel subject, in which a governor twice commutes the sentence of a convict. The first time he lets the prisoner out on parole. The convict meets with bad luck, being falsely blamed for a murder. The governor's father-in-law was the victim and the wife naturally wants the convict sent to the chair. But the governor is persuaded the prisoner is innocent and later the real murderer is found. The story is a mere recital of certain incidents and has no particular motive behind it, unless it is to show that innocent men frequently stand in the shadow of death. This is fairly strong.

THE SEVENTH NOON (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 48), Nov. 4.—This is an adaptation of the book by the same name by Frederick Orin Bartlett. The production features Ernest Glendinning and Winifred Kingston, who, with a fairly competent support, do as well as could be expected with a picture that has been stretched far beyond he limits of the story. It has been done in five parts, and treats of a combination of unhealthy subjects. One young man tests a poison that is expected to end life in seven days, and while making the test he rescues an opium fiend, the brother of a girl with whom he has fallen in love. The poison fails to act and all ends happily.

MR. MEESON'S WILL (Than-o-play), Nov. 6.—This is a three-part adaptation of a book by H. Rider Haggard. Flo LaBadie plays the feminine lead with good effect. The story is, of coure, rather an improbable proposition and has not in it the realism that the present day public craves. Nevertheless, it is an adaptation of a well-known literary work, and as such, will be accepted as above the ordinary.

North American Film Corporation.

THE GARDEN OF THE GODS (American), Oct. 25.—Chapter XXVI of "The Diamond from the Sky." There are no extremely thrilling episodes in this number, yet it has considerable action and forwards the main plot somewhat. Luke escapes from prison and makes an assault upon the young Italian into whose hands the diamond had fallen. He is the last person seen with it in this instalment. Arthur has a vision in which he follows Esther, but he is still in the power of Vivian and Blair. Esther has assumed charge of the Stanley home.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY, NO. 27 (American), Nov. 1.—"Mine Own People" is the title of this number, in which Hagar returns to her gypsy tribe, and Esther, renouncing her claim to the diamond, allows Hagar to send it to John Powell, while she follows Hagar "whither she goest." There is the usual brisk interest attached to this number that has characterized the series.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE YANKEE GIRL (Morosco), Oct. 25.—Blanche Ring gives an engaging performance in this pleasing adaptation of the musical comedy in which she appeared on the stage. The picture makes bright, wholesome entertainment because of an amusing plot skillfully treated by the scenario writer and director. Beautiful locations, many of them showing the Catalina Islands, are a feature of the production. Miss Ring is supported by an able cast.

THE YANKEE GIRL (Morosco), Oct. 25.—See extended review elsewhere in this issue.

THE SECRET SIN (Lasky), Oct. 21.—See extended review elsewhere in this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 83, 1915 (Pathe), Oct. 16.—A number of interesting scenes from the battle front appear in this issue along with the laying of the keel of the "California," the first electrically propelled battleship, at the Brooklyn Navy Yards; new methods of army transportation exploited near San Diego; a venison barbecue at Auburn, Cal., and fox hounds being exercised in England.

INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS, NO. 10 (Pathe), Oct. 25.—This number of the series shows the young of the domestic hen, the pheasant, and other species of birds. A concentrative study of the bird of prey, showing the characteristic shape of its beak, its wings, its claws, etc. On the same reel with "The Police Dog to the Rescue."

THE POLICE DOG TO THE RESCUE (Pathe), Oct. 25.—An unusually amusing Bray animated cartoon in which the police dog rescues a colored baby from another of his species.

WHIFFLES WOOS AND TROUBLE BREWS (Pathecolor), Oct. 27.—An attractive colored production from the Paris studios in which Whiffles and his lady love have the usual difficulties attendant on stealthy love making. The enemy in this instance finds an accomplice who is willing to impersonate the girl's father to Whiffles, and by this channel some amusing situations are arrived at.

DOUGHNUTS (Starlight), Oct. 30.—A good deal of dough slinging occurs in this picture which is rather a good sample of slapstick comedy. Heine and Louie have, as usual, their ups and downs dealt out to them forcefully.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 8, "The Sun Worshippers" (Panama), Oct. 21.—"The Sunworshippers" is an interesting number of the series. One of its thrills is the attempted sacrifice of Annette to the Sun God, which is welcomed by Hernandez as an effective method of getting the troublesome young woman out of the way.

NEW ADVENTURES OF WALLINGFORD, NO. 4, "The Master Stroke" (Pathe), Oct. 25.—The fourth of the Wallingford episodes finds Mr. Prine fleeced of some $75,000, or so, by the clever Wallingford and "Blackie Daw," after which another name is crossed off the list of those who helped to ruin Violet's father. Some views of a skunk farm have been tactfully worked into the picture, and it is from fear of some of the creatures becoming his next door neighbors that Mr. Prine is lured into purchasing the plot of ground next to his store, from Wallingford.

THE ELEVENTH HOUR (Victory Milano).—This is a three-reel European feature, rich in beautiful settings, and interpreted by a talented cast of European players. The story has a military flavor, a love element, and is, strictly speaking, a melodrama. A full review of this picture will be found on page 812 of the issue of Oct. 30.

COMRADE JOHN (Gold Rooster Plays), Oct. 29.—This five-reel Gold Rooster Play features William Elliott and Ruth Roland, and is of an exceptionally interesting character. It is a decidedly high class production as regards dramatic action, direction, construction, etc.; in some respects spectacular, and artistically beautiful. A full review of it will be found on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE MARTYRS OF THE ALAMO (Fine-Arts), Nov. 1.—A vivid picture of a most intense moment in American history, accurate in detail, of terrific action in the high scenes and impressive through its thorough presentation of the whole subject, including the final surrender of Santa Anna.

MATRIMONY (Triangle—Kay Bee).—An unusually fine domestic drama, characterized by delicate comedy moments and some unusually fine acting on the part of Julia Dean. The play is satisfying in every detail and will add variety to the average program.

HIS FATHER'S FOOTSTEPS (Triangle—Keystone).—The amusing story of a boy's honest love for a dashing and beautiful actress who completely won and discomfitted the father, Ford Sterling, in a series of lively adventures when father steals a "night off."

FICKLE FATTY'S FALL (Keystone), Nov. 2.—A story of swift and thrilling adventure on the part of Roscoe Arbuckle, the more amusing that it is largely aquatic and offers some shapely young ladies as an added attraction to Roscoe's antics.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 189 (Universal), Oct. 20.—Parades, sporting events, public ceremonies with President Wilson and Mayor Mitchel of New York participating, and war scenes in Mexico and Europe are included in this number.

A CIRCUMSTANTIAL SCANDAL (Nestor), Nov. 1.—An Al E. Christie number, featuring Neal Burns, Raymond Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Corrine Lesser. The young couples marry and live in the same court. They quarrel and a double flirtation ensues, but all ends happily. This is nicely pictured throughout and makes quite a pleasing number.

WHEN BEAUTY BUTTS IN (Imp), Nov. 2.—This number, by Roy Clements, features Victor Potel as the father of a happy family which he takes with him to the beach. He flirts with an heiress and some fairly amusing incidents occur. There is not much plot to this, but it is quite pleasing.

FATHER'S HELPING HAND (Nestor), Nov. 5.—A comedy number, by Malcolm Strong, featuring Raymond Gallegher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry. The extravagant young man carries out a scheme for collecting his own debts, thus saving a large commission. He then weds the stenographer. The office scenes are good and the story quite pleasing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE SACRED FIRE (Universal Special), Oct. 25.—No. 19 of "The Broken Coin" Series. This continues the story of Kitty and Count Frederick's adventures among the head-hunting natives. They manage to escape to a passing vessel, after numerous fights with the natives. Count Sachio makes an unsuccessful attempt to find the hidden treasure. The events of this number are quite interesting, but do not greatly advance the plot, which has moved slowly of late.

THE MAN FROM ARGENTINE (Powers), Oct. 31.—A two-reel number, by Harvey Gates, featuring Sydney Ayres, L. M. Wells, Walter Belasco, Carmen Phillips and Doris Pawn. The story is an entertaining one and concerns a South American youth who leaves after some military plans have been stolen in order to save his father's name. He has been attracted by Bonito, but, on coming to the United States, falls in love with a cabaret singer. Later he is torn with doubt as to which of the two he should marry; after boarding the steamer for home he leaves the party and goes back to the cabaret girl. The plot is pleasing and well handled.

THE LONG CHANCE (Broadway Universal Feature), Nov. 1.—A good story told in six reels and a true character study by Frank Keenan give this production a certain place among meritorious offerings. Scenes are laid in the west of a quarter of a century and more ago, and Mr. Keenan plays the role of a gambler possessing many likable qualities. The picture always holds the attention and is exceedingly well acted. Harvey Gates constructed the scenario from a story by Peter B. Kyne.

THE BROKEN COIN, NO. 20 (Universal Special), Nov. 1.—Count Frederick protects Kitty from violence at the hands of Lord Wyndham on board the vessel. He manages to hold up the wireless operator and send a message to King Michael asking for aid. King Phillips, disgusted at Count Sachio's failure to locate the treasure, threatens to renew war upon King Michael. The number does not accomplish much in forwarding the plot, but has some interesting episodes.

THE MEASURE OF LEON DUBRAY (Gold Seal), Nov. 2.—A three-reel number, by Harvey Gates and Henry Otto. Hobart Henley, Mrs. Benson, Luella Maxam and Wm. Quinn appear. The first two reels are a little drawn out, but are filled with the breath of out-doors and contain some very attractive scenes. The action is better in the final reel, where the hero aids the girl's father to escape from his pursuers. A novel revenge is worked upon the informer, who is dressed in the prison garb discarded by the father. This contains no very strong moments, but runs along in an entertaining way.

THE IDLE RICH (L-KO), Nov. 3.—A two-reel subject, featuring Harry and Mrs. Gribbon. Mr. Raspberry is at his best in this number, and does some very amusing stunts of a low comedy type. He shoots the bird in the cuckoo clock because it wakes him up in the morning. Then he gets a black eye while flirting and tells his wife he got it while saving a child from death. The scenes at the lawn fete are also amusing. This is free from vulgarity and better than the average offering of the sort.

THE WHITE FEATHER (Laemmle), Nov. 4.—A two-reel number, written and produced by Rupert Julian, who also plays the leading role. A jealous stenographer, whose love has been rejected, sends a white feather to her employer, who is over the age of enlistment. He leaves his family and goes to war, where he saves the life of the stenographer's brother. The war scenes are realistic in the extreme, if anything, a little too sanguinary. At the same time, the number is well constructed and filled with modern interest. In spite of numerous unpleasant features it makes a strong offering.

THE REWARD (Imp), Nov. 5.—A three-reel subject, featuring King Baggot, Robert Fisher, Edna Hunter, Clara Beyers and Harry Spingler. This is an underworld story handled in a way free from the usual sordidness, in spite of the manner in which all of the leading characters become involved. The heroine's father is king of the underworld, the hero is a young man of good instincts who turned gambler after a quarrel with his father. The latter stands for the brother's crime in order to protect the girl's name, but later is cleared by the youth's confession. The settings and work of the cast, as a whole, are excellent. The plot, while not very new, is well constructed and holds the interest.

THE METTLE OF JERRY McGUIRE (Bison), Nov. 6.—A two-reel number, featuring Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and L. D. Maloney, in their new affiliations. They are assisted by a little girl who runs away with an engine and a train of cars, this forming the main situation of the story. Helen Holmes is attractive in the part of the mother and provides a genuine thrill in her leap from the automobile to the runaway train. This situation is led up to by an entertaining story. The offering, as a whole, is better than the average railroad photoplay and contains good suspense in the last reel. An exciting story.

World Film Corporation.

DIVORCED (Equitable—Triumph), Oct. 25.—An absorbing five-reel photodrama, or, more strictly speaking, melodrama. Hilda Spong is featured in the picture and does a remarkable piece of work from first to last. To be sure the play dwells rather too heavily on the weaknesses of human nature, but it is an unusually interesting production just the same. A fuller review of this picture will be found on page 811 of the issue of Oct. 30.

THE BETTER WOMAN (Equitable—Triumph), Nov. 1.—Lenore Ulrich gives an unusually sincere and interesting performance in a five-part picture produced by the Triumph Corporation under the direction of Joseph A. Golden. She has the role of an ignorant western girl, who falls in love with a civil engineer, tricks him into marriage and experiences many unhappy hours before they reach an understanding. The picture is well staged and sincerely acted.

Associated Film Sales Corporation.

THE PARADOXICAL BURGLAR (Alhambra), Oct. 25.—A melodrama in which a burglar turns benefactor, and saves the master of the house from committing suicide. The husband is an inveterate club man, and neglects his wife for the sake of his men friends. Unaware of the presence of the burglar in the house, the wife writes a note, telling her husband that she is going away for good. The attempted suicide takes place on the husband's return.

THE PLAID COAT (Banner), Oct. 25.—This is a comedy of rather an ordinary character. The plot of the play is not of much account. The picture might, at the same time, appeal to many audiences.

SHOT AT SUNRISE (Monte), Oct. 25.This is a good military burlesque number with Irene Rogers and a score of males. A clever play has been made on descriptive nouns as names for the officers of the army. This comedy would be welcomed by any audience, and is exceedingly funny.

BREAKING INTO SOCIETY (Santa Barbara), Oct. 25.—Rather an amusing comedy in which a newly rich woman, in order to get even with her more aristocratic neighbors, who have snubbed her, hires two tramps to pose as counts and her guests.

Associated Film Sales Corp. Specials

O'HARA OF THE MOUNTED (Federal), Oct. 25.—A two-reel western production with plenty of atmosphere. Good virile types have been chosen for the masculine roles. In the chase for Pierre through the woods there are spots that are not quite convincing, for it is hard to believe that the crackling of the dry brush would not be heard by the watcher. Some scenes of this picture have been taken in the winter. The photography is fairly good and the production would be welcomed by the average audience.

THE RECKONING (Ramona), Oct. 25.—In this three-reel melodrama, which, in many respects, is commendable, too much padding has been resorted to in stretching the production to its third reel. The scenes of the picture are laid in the oil fields and starts out in an interesting manner. The re-telling of vengeful attack of one man on another is an unwarrantable bit of padding, which has not been done with technical accuracy. There is a cripple type in the pcture that has been portrayed particularly well.

Miscellaneous Specials.

THE SOUL OF BROADWAY (Fox), Nov. —.—Valeska Suratt is starred in this five-part melodrama that bears little resemblance to life on Broadway or elsewhere. Wearing striking costumes, Miss Suratt gives an exaggerated portrayal of a heartless courtesan. Herbert Brenon supplied an adequate production and made the most of a generally competent cast.

Mutual Forces Extending

Gaumont Will Send Sixty Players to South Jacksonville—Thanhouser Southern Studio Ready Dec. 1.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of extensive plans for the enlargement and increase of activity of various of the Mutual Film Corporation's producing companies. Progress in all its branches has attended the advent of the Mutual's new regime. The most recently perfected plan of changes in equipment and working arrangements is at the Gaumont studio at Flushing, L. I. In order to handle its four Mutual brands—the tri-weekly Rialto Star Features, in which a well known Broadway player has the leading role, the weekly Casino Star Comedy, split-reel scenic and animated comic, "See America First" and "Keeping Up with the Joneses,'" and the Mutual News Weekly, the Gaumont Company will open up a winter studio in South Jacksonville, Fla.

On Nov. 1 a company of 60 members of the Gaumont forces, players, three directors and technical men will leave for the south, taking advantage of the trip down to film a photoplay on the boat. While the two drama companies and one comedy company are busy in the south, important changes will be made in the studio at Flushing, which will, nevertheless, not interfere with the work of picture progress there. The personnel of the going and remaining forces has not been chosen. The plans are to keep at least one company—a comedy company—at work at Flushing. The Rialto star feature will be made in Florida, the stars chosen for each production being sent down to the south by boat for their short engagements.

Thirty thousand dollars is being expended by the Thanhouser Company for a glass studio at Jacksonville, Fla., which will be ready for occupation on Dec. 1. At that time some of the New Rochelle contingency will go south, where the scenery of Florida, the West Indies and the Bermudas will be used as the setting for one and multiple reel dramas and comedies for the Mutual. Simultaneously, two companies will go to the Hudson Bay country to produce dramas of life in the frozen north. Activities will by no means be slackened in New Rochelle. On the contrary greater activity will be assumed with the installation of costly developing, printing and perforating machinery, a better ventilating system, additional factory space and better studio arrangements. No changes will be made at present in the Thanhouser's output of Mutual pictures—the two Falstaff comedies, one multiple reel and one part drama, of weekly release, a bi-weekly Than-o-play multiple reel production, and an occasional Masterpicture.

Charles Sutton

Charles Sutton.

CHARLES SUTTON, veteran character actor of the Edison forces, is a fine type of the sterling actor which the screen has drawn from the stage. Though one did not know his histrionic history, his portrayals on the screen impress with that certain something which comes only from long association with the classic drama, "finish," some might say, but it is something more than that; at times one glimpses in his work a tinge of the heroic called for in many Shakespearean plays in which he, of course, has appeared, on the speaking stage with illustrious associates.

Born in Providence, R. I., and still possessing much of the well-known New England reserve, for all his quiet geniality, he secured a sure character foundation in stock work. Later, in New Orleans, he was long a member of the Chaufau Stock Company which, in the olden days, enjoyed much more than mere local fame.

His long and varied experience now taxes too much his memory, but recalled are: his engagement with the well-known English company of Ted Henley in "Deacon Brody"—Mr. Sutton being the only American in the company; in A. N. Palmer's "Saints and Sinners" and another of their plays; two years in "Quo Vadis?" Whitney's production; nearly two years with Ted Lyons, considered the greatest Bottom in "A Midsummer's Night Dream;" prominently supporting the great McCullough in his ever-remembered "Virginius;" first with Ward, the great Shakespearean actor, and later with him when the company became Ward and James and made memorable tours in Shakespearean repertoire—when, among other parts, he played Pythias in "Damon and Pythias;" Marc Antony, Julius Caesar and Iago; also Virginius in the play of that name.

That he is versatile in comedy as well as the more serious roles is evidenced in his spending considerable time in a sketch of his own, "Madonna of the Tubs," and by his work on the screen for Edison, where he has been six years. He is called upon so often that to list his films would appear an Edison catalogue. His portrayals are always character and are marked with honesty, sureness and virility that strikes a responsive chord of sympathy and reality. He is numbered among that cast which made "The Stoning" one of the most commented upon plays of the year. In that release he played the unyielding, old-time father so typically as to secure an individual success.

SMITH BRINGING BARKER FEATURES.

Jack Smith, general manager of Barker Motion Photography, Ltd., of Soho Square, London, is on his way over, and we understand is bringing with him some of the firm's big feature films. We shall be able to tell you more about these after having seen the pictures.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

ALTHOUGH the fall and winter theatrical season has little more than started, there are unmistakable indications that the motion picture theater will be even more successful during 1915-16 than they were last year, and their popularity with the amusement public continues to outstrip that of the old-line theaters. Despite the claims and efforts on the part of managers of the latter houses, their box-office returns, with but few exceptions, are not holding up either at home or on the road, while the picture house managers are serenely pursuing their course and are chock full of confidence. In some quarters business has not been as good at times as expected, but in this city and vicinity any failure of realization of hopes is attributed to the changeable weather. Confidence in the belief that the motion picture season will be a record-breaker is based upon the observance that thus far when the evenings have been cool the houses have been filled to capacity. The conclusion is that when the cool weather season sets in for a run, and the leading weather prophets tell us we are to have a winter worthy of the name, the picture people will reap a harvest. As between the regular theaters and the picture houses on the question of popularity, a statement by a well-known manager who controls several houses along the Hudson river, is worth more than passing notice. On a visit to this city a few days ago he said: "I have been in the theatrical business for many years and at no time in my career have the people shown such a decided change in choice of amusements as they show now. It has been my policy to book all the good straight attractions I could get hold of, with a generous sprinkling of repertoire shows, booking vaudeville and moving pictures on off nights. Now it is all vaudeville and pictures. Thus far this season I have not had one booking in the straight line and do not intend to make any this season. In all the places where my houses are located the cry is for vaudeville and pictures. I am not opposed to straight attractions and would not injure them by adverse comment. I speak solely from a business standpoint."

Similar reports are coming to this city from all parts of the country, those differing in any way emphasizing the continued increase in popularity of motion pictures. New theaters are multiplying so rapidly that the reports at times are confusing. It is almost unbelievable that there could be room for so many. Last week's list of projected theaters showed over forty planned, or in course of erection. All are of the larger and up-to-date style, the cost ranging from $5,000 to $40,000. Yet people associated with the old-line interests are industriously circulating reports that the photoplay has reached the zenith of its success and the present season will show a decline with a gradual rehabilitation of the old-line houses. A straw that strikingly shows the reverse comes to us from one of the most prominent play houses in Brooklyn, Keith's Crescent. After closing a very successful season as a stock house the place was turned over to moving pictures for the summer. In September it was reopened as a stock house with a well selected company and equally good plays listed. Business opened and continued bad. This was at first attributed to the Mardi Gras week at Coney Island. Then the management concluded that the weather had not become sufficiently cool for indoor amusements. Even unlimited "papering" of the house failed to get the people, and finally the house was closed and is now undergoing changes preparatory to being opened as a permanent moving picture house. The Vitagraph, Knickerbocker, Strand and other photoplay theaters on and adjacent to Broadway, in Manhattan, are additional witnesses to the story. It may well be said that the men who predicted that with proper subjects faithfully picturized the photoplay would cripple the straight line theater were not dreamers, or lunatics.

Illinois is on the map again with another jab at the motion pictures. This time it is a cry for the elimination of scenes depicting cigarette smoking and wine drinking, and on the latter issue the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association of that city have become of one mind. The W. C. T. U. says little more than that "nobody wants drinking scenes in films." The liquor dealers are more explicit. They say that the pictures are exerting an influence more or less detrimental to their industries. Why the W. C. T. U. should co-operate to hamper work that is confessedly exerting such an influence is beyond understanding. One would think an encouragement of such pictures would be more consistent with the objects of the W. C. T. U. As to the liquor dealers engaged in the movement, they have practically started a campaign of intimidation against the manufacturers and exhibitors of motion pictures in the state of Illinois, a step which the motion picture interests should closely watch. Their association has appointed committees who are to keep a record of such pictures as they object to and report same with the date of exhibition, the theater, and names of the film manufacturers. So there, we have another group of self-constituted censors in our midst. We can well see through this committee work. The exhibitor with a weak backbone is to be intimidated into running such pictures as meet the approval of his neighboring saloonkeeper and the W. C. T. U. people blandly nod assent. Queer combination, isn't it? But, to the initiated, it is not a remarkable one. The writer was personally acquainted with conditions a few years ago wherein W. C. T. U. and liquor interests were presented in a far more striking light, so that the spirit of unity between two factions so diametrically opposed to each other in Illinois is not a complete surprise. The conditions referred to hinged upon a warfare waged by the W. C. T. U. against liquor men violating the liquor laws, such as selling on Sunday, to minors, etc. The president of the local W. C. T. U. was the wife of a prominent lawyer. The local union lodged the complaints, and they were many, but it was often remarked that many saloonkeepers never went to court and continued in business. The community was mystified for a long time, but the truth leaked out at last. The lawyer husband of the Union's president, by constituting himself a license court, was building up a lucrative practice. When a saloonkeeper found himself caught in the act he hurried for legal advice and strangely enough found himself in the office of the lawyer already mentioned, who invariably received a retainer. In due time the protest was withdrawn before it reached court, upon the promise of the saloonkeeper to conduct his place within the requirements of the law.

There is no desire to intimate that the motives that inspired the lawyer who built up the land-office business figure in the Illinois matter. The incident is referred to with the object of showing that a movement such as has been inaugurated in Illinois should not receive the O. K. stamp of the public on account of its approval by the W. C. T. U. Organizations, like individuals, are not infallible. They are just as liable to err in judgment, or be misled, as most of the censorship boards. In the Illinois case the W. C. T. U. has erred or been imposed upon. No moving picture can be made that will more bitterly reflect upon the liquor interests than the literature of the W. C. T. U. To be consistent in its claim that "nobody wants drinking scenes in films" the W. C. T. U. must eliminate from the literature the word pictures it draws of the results of intemperance. Placing records side by side it can be shown that since their establishment moving pictures have accomplished more genuine work in behalf of the temperance cause than the W. C. T. U. has done during the same period. This is said with all due respect to the organization and without any attempt to discount anything it has done, or is trying to do. It is but a justified claim that moving pictures have shown themselves to be the most important factor in the line of temperance work in the history of the movement, and should receive the full endorsement of all organizations and people engaged in the work. They reach the people who cannot read. The evils of intemperance brought before the eye upon the screen is vastly more effective than when produced in print. All saloonkeepers in business near a motion picture house when speaking the truth will admit that the house has cut into their revenues, and that means a reduction in the consumption of their goods. There are on record scores of saloons that have been put out of business by their patrons becoming patrons of the motion picture houses. It can be shown, as a piece of practical work, the W. C. T. U. is not in a position to accomplish, that every nickel and dime the thousands of workingmen throughout the country spend in taking their wives and children to the moving picture shows is a check to the credit of the pictures in the cause of temperance work. Why then should the people whose cause is receiving from them most invaluable aid, join in a movement that unreasonably harass the motion picture interests? So far as the committees appointed by the liquor association is concerned, the moving picture people will lose no sleep over them.

Binder Entertains Chicago Men.

TWENTY-EIGHT men, representative of the film industry, the supply and equipment dealers from the city of Chicago, were the guests of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America today (when? ? ) at a luncheon given at the La Salle Hotel by Executive Secretary J. W. Binder. Out of those present twenty-six are now membership applicants and two, representing large supply concerns, will come in later.

After the coffee and cigars, Mr. Binder told the objects and purposes of the Board of Trade. He spoke also of the things that led to its organization. He paid a glowing tribute to the tremendous potentialities of the motion picture industry and to the men in it who are officers of the Board of Trade as well as those who are daily coming in as members.

The following named film men were present: Ben Judell, Mutual Film Corporation; W. J. Sweeney, Exhibitors' League; N. F. Sawyer and H. J. Aldous, Industrial Film Corporation; F. W. Redfield and C. L. Worthington, Fox Film Corporation; C. D. Paulson, American Seating Co; F. M. Brockell, Famous Players Film Service; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Co.; Neil G. Caward, Motography; Mr. Hildreth, Billboard; Paul C. Hinz, Moving Picture World; Theodore S. Meade, Motion Picture News; Capt. Boening, U. S. Cinematograph Co.; John T. Rock, Vitagraph Co. of America; Tom Quill, Goes Lithographing Co.; Ben W. Beadell, National Waterproof Film Co.; Frank Hough, George Kleine, Inc.; Geo. Magie; W. K. Cochrane, Cochrane Adv. Agency; Mr. Spanuth, Central Film Co.; Watterson R. Rothacker; R. R. Nehls, American Film Corporation; Homer A. Boushey, Essanay; Mr. Van Runkle, V-L-S-E; Irving Shuman, U. S. Treasury; Charles C. Pyle, Bartola Music Co.; Mr. Gerlach, J. P. Seeburg Co.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Fake moving picture operators' schools are doomed to disruption in Chicago, if Prosecutor Harry B. Miller has his way. The latest one to fall under that gentleman's watchful eye is the Coyne National Trade School, at 45 East Illinois street. The names of three officials of this school are given in a warrant issued on a conspiracy charge recently. L. H. Calbeck, a pupil of the school, who, it is said, confessed his part in the alleged conspiracy, is also made one of the defendants. According to Calbeck's story:

"He enrolled as a pupil in the Coyne school, about three months ago, for a course in moving picture operating. After completing the course, he learned that it would be necessary for him to have six months' operating experience in another town, or serve as an apprentice in this city for one year, before he could become a licensed city operator. Mr. Cook, one of the officials of the school, suggested that he frame up a letter stating that he had been an experienced operator in a certain town outside of Chicago, mail it to some friend out of town, and have it returned to him with the proper post-mark, which he did."

He gave the letter to the city inspector, who, in turn, wrote to the authorities of the town to verify the statement, and secured contradictory reports. Victor H. Tousley, chief electrical inspector for the city, signed the complaints against the four men.

The Kenmore theater, 1039 Wilson avenue, will be given over for a benefit performance on Wednesday afternoon, October 27, for the Bonnie Hame Association of this city. An attempt will be made to secure enough funds to open a kindergarten in the home and provide a teacher for the younger children while the older ones are in school. Mrs. George K. Spoor is one of the committee in charge.

Lasky's "Carmen" remains at the New Strand this week. The management is well satisfied with the attendance so far. A children's program was provided on Saturday morning, beginning at 10:30. Among the pictures shown were "Beauty and the Beast" and "The Kingdom of Flowers." Several educational subjects were also shown, and Morris Kowsky entertained at the piano. The children's program grew to be very popular at Orchestra Hall and promises to continue so at the Strand's new home.

Mae Marsh, the talented young actress of the Griffith school, stopped off in Chicago, accompanied by her mother, Friday, October 22, en route from New York to California. She was supposed to have appeared in person Friday evening at the Colonial, where "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown, but 'tis said when she applied for admission—on the arm of Manager Bowles—she met a stern rebuff from the ticket taker. "The city ordinance limits the attendance to only those over twenty-one," said he. So Miss Marsh was obliged to go elsewhere.

Plans are under way for a large moving picture theater and hotel to be erected in this city in the near future. The exact location of the theater-hotel project has not been made public, but it is understood that it will be on a corner in the "Loop." The Epoch Producing Corporation has been asked to take a ten-year lease on the theater with special construction. J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Corporation, returned to New York Tuesday, October 19, to lay the plans before his company.

Friday night was Mayor's night at the Olympic theater, where "The Battle Cry of Peace" is running. Mayor Thompson made a brief speech during the intermission. "The picture," he said, "is a lesson for the youth and for the aged of the country and should be taken to heart." The Mayor was the guest of J. Stuart Blackton.

E. Glickman, proprietor of the Palace theater, at Twelfth street and Blue Island avenue, recently installed a Style A Seeburg pipe organ-orchestra in his theater. The instrument was featured on Monday night, October 18, and the management received many complimentary remarks from its patrons. The Palace is one of the largest picture theaters in the outlying districts. It has a seating capacity of 1,600, and runs features only.

"I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," a Selig Red Seal play, which will be released through the V-L-S-E on December 13, was written by Gilson Willets. The words and music of the song haunted him, he says, and he was not contented until he had written a photoplay on the theme. Harry Mestayer will take part in the production, in which will be seen many elaborate and realistic battle scenes. The picture will be in four reels, and will have a strong appeal to patriotism.

Aaron A. Jones, president of the Central Film Company, left this city for Los Angeles Wednesday, October 20. He intends to remain in the west for about six weeks, during which he will visit the principal studios and look over the feature market.

The Charity Circle, a society composed of thirty young women, gave a benefit performance at Ascher's President theater, at Garfield Boulevard and Calumet avenue, on Friday afternoon, October 22. The program included moving pictures and musical selections by members of the organization. The Circle's funds are to be donated to the poor.

Word comes from Seattle, Wash., through Joe Bloom, of the Celebrated Players Features Company, that the Pantages theater has changed hands, and is now called the American. John Hemrich, formerly manager of the Colonial theater, Seattle, is the new manager and part owner. The American has been recently remodelled and has a seating capacity of 1,800. Metro service is used exclusively and is controlled in that territory by Grombacher & Bailey.

Perry E. Grosse, president of the Premier Film Company, 143 North Dearborn street, this city, was again arraigned before Judge Heap in the South Clark street court, last week, with the charge of taking money by false pretenses. There were three more complainants this time. Anna Judge, Bessie Thurston and R. W. Headstrum appeared against him. They allege that Grosse swindled them out of money ranging from $5 to $35, after he had induced them to join his school for moving picture actors.

The city authorities are certainly "going after" these fellows. Here is another one: Charles Heatherington, whose fraudulent activities were reported in these columns before, was brought back to this city from Hamilton, Ont., by Detective Howe, on Wednesday, October 20. He is now awaiting trial for operating a confidence game.

The Prairie theater, at Prairie avenue and Fifty-eighth street, at present in process of completion, has been added to Alfred Hamburger's circuit, which now totals sixteen houses. The Prairie will open early in November.

The Ascher Brothers have added another link to their chain of houses with the Terminal theater, Lawrence and Kedzie avenues, which opened Saturday, October 23, with a brilliant bill featuring Ethel Barrymore in "The Final Judgment." The Terminal is one of the most comfortable and spacious houses in Chicago, with a seating capacity of 1,000. It is well lighted, has a splendid air-cooling system, and the pictures are projected on a gold fiber screen. A large pipe organ with an echo board is used in accompaniment to the pictures.

Plimpton Forces in New Studio

Building Is of Two Stories, 100 by 50, and Situated in Mount Vernon—Duncan McRae to Direct.

DUNCAN McRAE will be producer at the studio of Plimpton Epic Pictures, Inc., in Mount Vernon. For a workshop he will have the two-story structure heretofore known as Katz's Hall, in Yonkers avenue, near the junction with Webster avenue. The studio proper will be on the second floor. The ceiling is high and there are large windows on four sides. Seventy-two lamps are being installed in banks of nine, which will be movable the length or width of the 50 by 100-foot room. At the front Miss Gertrude McCoy, who will head the playing forces of the company, will have a dressing room 12 by 7 feet. Alongside is another large room which will be used as a dressing room by the other women in the cast. Over these rooms is a balcony on which will be an office for Mr. McRae and also dressing rooms for men.

Duncan McRae.

The main floor will be renovated for offices accommodating Mr. Plimpton, the secretary, cashier and casting director. Here also will be the costume room and large spaces for carpenter shop and property department. There is a big cellar, in which will be situated the developing and printing departments. At the rear there is a good-sized yard in which will be built a vault for film.

S. N. Unanda will be stage director. Mr. Unanda is a skilled interior decorator. While he has had no experience in a motion picture studio, he has for many months closely followed the larger picture productions. He will give especial attention to the artistic side of stage settings. Horace G. Plimpton, Jr., will be technical director. He has had engineering experience. The plans for the renovation of the Plimpton studio were drawn by Mr. Plimpton and are being executed under his supervision.

Frank Bannon will have charge of publicity for the Plimpton forces as well as other responsibilites. Miss Bessie Bannon, his sister, also will resume the position she so long filled with conspicuous ability—that of private secretary to Mr. Plimpton.

Mr. McRae for nearly two years had been at the Edison studio, having been consecutively leading man, actor-director and then chief director. He was born in London. Part of his stage training was acquired in association with Dion Boucicault the younger. He is a brother of Bruce McRae and a nephew of Sir Charles Wyndham. His childhood was spent in India. His first work on the stage was at the age of fifteen. He appeared in many of the leading productions of the English stage. In July, 1913, he came to New York, and after a short engagement with Fanny Ward took up work in pictures, in which he has been successful.

Pavlowa Film Shown in Los Angeles

Three Thousand Guests of the Universal Witness "The Dumb Girl of Portici" at Clune's Auditorium.

ANNA PAVLOWA made her film debut last Friday evening when three thousand people, guests of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, filled Clune's Auditorium, the largest theater in Los Angeles, to witness the private view of "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

Mayor Sebastian and other city and county officials were present, together with the leaders of Los Angeles society and other prominent citizens of the community.

A full orchestra accompanied the picture, which consists of eleven reels, with appropriate music. The general verdict of those present was that it is a great picture.

Lois Weber, who adapted "The Dumb Girl of Portici" for the screen, and Phillips Smalley, who assisted her in directing the picture, were both present and heartily congratulated. Pavlowa's interpretation of the role of Fenella excited constant admiration. The excellence of the supporting cast, including Douglas Gerrard, Edna Maison, Laura Oakley, Rupert Julian, Betty Schade and Hart Hoxie, was highly commended.

AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO. EXPANDS.

Western Studio at Santa Barbara Is Being Enlarged—Will Be a Model Plant.

S. S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is enlarging his big studios at Santa Barbara.

The largest building in that city is the glass studio and adjoining property room of the American Film Manufacturing Co. now going up on the newly acquired grounds at State and Mission streets. The great structure is not only the biggest now in progress in the city, but it will have the greatest open floor space of any roofed in place in Santa Barbara. The floor of the glass studio will be 130x80 feet, with everything from one end to the other up to 22 feet above the floor.

The studio roof slopes all one way like a "lean-to." Meeting its roof will be another exactly as large sloping the other way, forming a complete roof with the studio, and covering three stories of dressing rooms. There will be two stories of shops and scene painting space where the people will be "made up." In front of these two big structures, joined as one, will be a 46-foot addition which will include a handsome tower at the corner.

For the 46-foot addition in front of the studio and property building and for the tower, no preparation at all has yet been made on the ground.

For a big drive-way that will later run past this building and join with the other drives of the American Film plant only enough is now being done to allow the hauling of material from the State street corner to the construction work.

Besides the infinite amount of interior and exterior finishing, furnishing and fitting that is yet to be done, there is an immense amount of ground work to be done on the four sides of the big structure when it is completed. A wall similar to the artistic Mission type of wall along the front of the present plant is to be continued out to State street, immediately this new building is finished. The grounds inside this wall will be terraced as on the other grounds about the buildings. On the State street side of the driveway to be cut by the building, a retaining wall will be built, and beyond the retaining wall will sometime be another wall inclosing the grounds.

This by no means ends the building that the American Film Company has definitely planned.

A feature of the new building will be its battery of lights for night work. To handle this new lighting, a house is being built at the rear of the studio to accommodate three big transformers to take and deliver the city electricity as it is needed for studio work.

An upholstering department, furniture department, carpenter's shop, paint frame, scene dock, machine shop, and numerous other work rooms will take up much space in the new building. Three stories of dressing rooms will accommodate the many actors that the big studio is to use.

Much acreage has been purchased and will be used at present for outdoor sets, but later will be the site for more additions to the producing home of Flying A films.

TEASES TERRIBLE TIGER.

Kalem Comedy Promises to Be a Roarer.

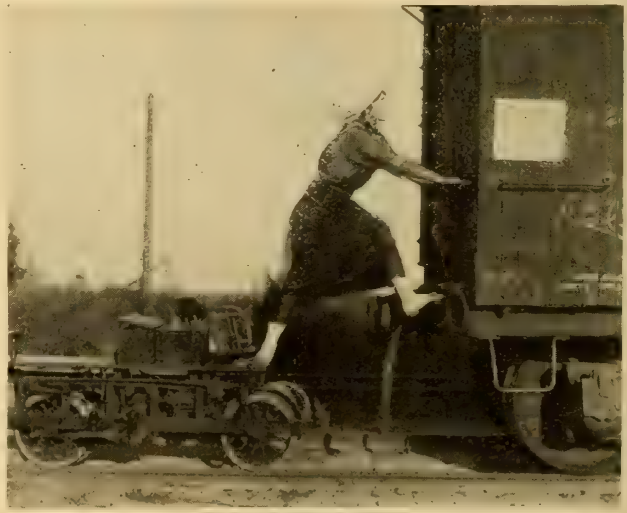
Chasing a ferocious and formidable looking denizen of the forest and jungle through the wilderness with a shotgun almost twice as big as himself, Bud Duncan, the little midget Kalemite, made a star comedy that will "knock them dead," so to speak. The picture is the most comical one ever made at this studio, and when flashed upon the screen ought to make every one present suffer intensely with rib pains, for the film is inoculated with microbes of joy and not a gloom can be seen.

The tiger of course is a piece of hide with a well moulded and enormous head, with eyes like saucers and a mouth like the entrance to a rhinoceros' throat. A man inside the brute works the limbs, eyes, mouth and ears, and the effect is most comical. Bud, in love with the resort hotel keeper's daughter, in the high mountains, goes out to kill a tiger, but when he meets up with the beastie, he finds that the poor animal wants to make friends with him, so he takes Mr. Tiger back to town with him. Here the rival in love's battle is about to marry the girl when Bud comes back with the ferocious animal and puts them all to rout. Events follow and in the final scene Bud wins the girl, while the ardent suitor is treed by the phoney tiger. This picture is a riotous lot of funny footage. The production was made by William Beaudine at the Hollywood studio.

Bud Duncan and the Tiger.



Scene from "A Race with Death" (Kalem).

Over at the valley studio James Horne is doing wonders with "Stingaree," the new serial which he recently started. Everything at this place is humming along at a lively rate with full forces busy all the time.

The "Hazards of Helen" serial, stories of railroad life and strife, are still pulling strong on the producing end, and are being made more lively and full of "pep." This week the plucky girl of the rails did a very perilous stunt when she chased bandits by riding alone on a skooter, one of the small gas propelled hand cars. After overtaking the train on which the bandits were riding, the intrepid Helen made a flying leap from the little vehicle to the hand ladder on the box car. The picture shows her in mid air making the leap while the train was still in motion.

"KEEP YOUR EYE ON INCE."

O'Hara's Words Still Compel.

At the Exhibitors' convention in San Francisco, last July, Kenneth A. O'Hara made them sit up and open their eyes, they even rubbed them to see better, for O'Hara had hung out a shingle over the portrait of Thomas H. Ince, which said in a few pointed words, "Keep Your Eye On Ince." That's all.

Today Ince is working harder than ever.

He sent Tom Brierly up to San Francisco to buy an old boat. The vessel was purchased and towed to San Diego. There the battleship-to-be was anchored and a detachment of artificers changed her from a discarded whaler into a formidable-looking cruiser, with guns, torpedo tubes, stacks and everything. Later the U. S. S. California, under the command of Captain Robertson, trained his big guns onto the old boat and sunk it. But while this was going on, Ince's cameraman and directors were doing their part.

Watching the Sinking of the "Bowhead" from the U. S. Cruiser "San Diego."

These figures will convince one that it costs something to produce this part of the large film play:

The conflict lasted for two hours.

Six thousand feet of film were exposed.

Nine cameras and a dozen operators were on the job.

The vessel, which was sunk, cost eighteen thousand dollars.

Thirty mechanical workers were two months rebuilding the ship.

Fifty men worked at the battle.

Range of fire, twelve thousand yards.

Broadside and fore and aft eight-inch guns were used.

The big fight scenes were made sixty miles off the coast of Southern California, and the old whaleboat went to the bottom, in fifteen fathoms of heavy salt water.

EXHIBITORS AGAIN ORGANIZE.

Will Combat Adverse Legislation—If It Comes.

With the primary idea of protection, and to combat adverse legislation, either State or local, motion picture exhibitors of Southern California have formed in an exhibitors' league, which supplants the old Southern California Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

An active campaign for membership will be waged, as the leaders in the moving picture industry believe if the exhibitors act as a unit, they will be better able to deal with the producers and exchanges.

A. P. Tugwell, chairman of the Los Angeles Board of Censors, has been elected president of the new organization. S. MacIntyre is secretary.

The league will make its public debut with a ball early in December at Shrine Auditorium. It will probably be given in compliment to Mary Pickford on her return to Southern California. With the proceeds the league plans to have a fund ready for action in case adverse legislation is proposed. It is possible a lobby may be maintained at Sacramento during sessions of the Legislature.

Seth D. Perkins, manager of the New Garrick theater, has been placed in charge of arrangements for the ball. A competent committee will aid him.

QUINN PUTS A NEW ONE OVER.

Gets Half-Page Advertisement Which Is Paid For by Auto Dealer.

The jump from bad business to capacity audiences at Quinn's Superba theater, since J. A. Quinn regained the ownership of that beautiful play house, is town talk. He has surrounded himself with practically the same staff that helped him to success before. The only newcomer is Maitland Davies, a clever discriptive writer and advertiser. Stanley Warde Hart is still Mr. Quinn's assistant and "Uncle Charlie" Hilton, resident manager.

J. A. Quinn is an aggressive advertiser and a shrewd judge of the whims of the public. His name spells success, and he not alone throws himself, heart and soul, into every project, but he carries his associates along with him by sheer weight of his personality.

Upon receipt of the reel of eastern motor races, Quinn immediately went to the Stutz motor agent, Walter M. Brown, and put a proposition to him. Mr. Brown, whom we know personally to be a live wire, fell in with the idea and contracted with a local daily for a half-page advertisement. The announcement bade every picture and auto fan to come to Quinn's Superba to see the winning Stutz.

The house was packed and both advertisers were well repaid.

UNIVERSAL CITY ENTERTAINS RAILWAY.

American Electric Railway Association Inspects Laemmle Studio.

With worries cast aside for the day, and with interest at a high pitch, six hundred members of the railway men's association of this country, here for a big convention, spent the day as the guests of Henry McRae, director general of the big city, and saw how the pictures were made. Among the many guests present were representative railway men from all parts of the country, including the association president, C. L. Henry, and the vice-president. W. O. Woods. Congressmen Stephens and Randall of this state were also present, as were city officials of Los Angeles and members of the City Council. There were also four state senators as guests of the Universal. There were delegations from the local Chamber of Commerce, Realty Board, Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, and other organizations; also President Paul Shoup of the Pacific Electric, the large railway serving Los Angeles. The visitors were welcomed by Henry McRae and George E. Kann, the new business manager of the city. After a trip around the manufacturing plant the visitors were treated to a Spanish barbecue and later escorted around the stages and shown a real western rodeo, followed by animal shows.

Railroad Men's Banquet at Universal City.

TALLY TABOOS TICKETS AT TWO DOLLARS.

T. L. Tally, veteran exhibitor of this city, believes in treating his customers squarely. Many good pictures are well liked by the majority of patrons, while some pictures are not liked by many persons. For this reason Mr. Tally is not charging more for an extra large picture, because everyone will get a chance to see it at the regular price.

Hence, when Geraldine Farrar puts in an appearance on the Tally screen, it will cost no more to see her than it cost to see Mary Pickford the week before in another Paramount production.

Furthermore Tally would not consent to showing the picture at all unless it be at his regular prices, ten, twenty and thirty.

The Lasky company, with good reason, is very proud of "Carmen" costly photoplay, and its efforts to induce Mr. Tally to raise his prices are entirely within reason, when it is considered that Miss Farrar received the highest salary ever paid to a legitimate star who acted temporarily as a photoplay star. But Mr. Tally considers that his success in the exhibiting of motion pictures has been due principally to a long-established policy of showing the highest-class feature productions obtainable at a fixed scale of admission prices.

"No picture is too good to be shown in my theater," Mr. Tally says, "and unless they are of unusual length, necessitating a much longer show, I will not make any change."

PATHE'S NEW SERIAL.

Balboa Commences Production of "Who Is Guilty."

Scenario Editor Will M. Ritchey, who made a success in writing the "Who Pays" stories, has been toiling for a long time on this new idea and at last the big picture has reached the camera.

This serial will be a follow-up to the "Who Pays" stories with which Balboa attracted the attention of the entire film world, earlier in the year. "Neal of the Navy" being completed, the decks are now cleared for another big production. Mr. Ritchey has the new series already well in hand, half of the twelve stories being completed.

The "Who Pays" series was largely owing to the ingenuity of H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the company. All serials have consisted principally of episodic stuff, featuring a succession of punches and thrills, but the "Who Pays" series was novel in that it was made up of twelve stories, each different, yet all along the same line. Common interest held the attention of the audience.

That the idea was a good one is evidenced by the series that have since been issued by other picture producers. In the "Who Is Guilty" series the criminal sense of the word "guilty" is not to be implied; rather its meaning as to who is to blame for the things that go wrong in so many lives.

LOS ANGELES FILM BREVITIES.

May Allison, the popular "American" player, is to be featured in "The Other Side of the Door," a coming "Flying A" production now being prepared for the screen by Director Thomas Ricketts. The picture play is an adaptation from the book by the same name, and the story is laid in a period immediately following the civil war. Little May will portray a demure Southern maiden and Harold Lockwood will take the hero part in this play.

Helene Rosson was supposed to register suffering from sprained ankle as the result of a fall in "The Marguerite," a current "American" production. She took a risky fall down an embankment, and when the leading man carried her up again, Helen said faintly: "Gee I guess that was realistic, all right—at least it feels that way in my foot." Sure enough the ankle was badly sprained and Helen is inclined to think that realistic acting might be carried too far.

William D. Taylor, who is leaving the "American" to join Morosco Photoplays, was given a surprise party at the Chalet cafe in Santa Barbara, by members of "The Diamond from the Sky" company. He was dined, wined, speeched, and generally fussed over to show how sorry they all were to see him go. Lottie Pickford wrote a song for the occasion and as a grand climax Mr. Taylor was presented with a handsome silver loving cut appropriately inscribed with love and best wishes from "The Diamond from the Sky" company.

Mabel Normand, the popular Keystone girl, has now fully recovered from her severe illness and is up and about again. Miss Normand will, however, take several weeks' vacation before resuming work.

Sam Bernard, the well-known Broadway star, arrived at the Keystone studio this week and was enthusiastically greeted by a number of old friends and fellow thespians who are at the present time aggregated under Mack Sennett's direction.

There were Weber and Fields, Harry Williams, Jean Havez, etc., down at the Santo Fe station to meet the popular actor and bring him to the bungalow which Mr. Sennett had leased in anticipation of his arrival. Mr. Bernard will immediately start his first Keystone picture. Weber and Fields have now completed their first picture play and are working on their second.

"Panama" is the name of a new brand of photoplays to be released by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company. One of the biggest releases on the Equitable program in December will be a Balboa production called "The Lady of Perfume." It is in five reels featuring Lillian Lorraine and Henry King.

Another victim to the matrimonial epidemic which has been raging of late at the Balboa studios is Andrew Arbuckle. His case was hopeless from the start and resulted in a midnight elopement with Mlle Blanche Duquense. Arbuckle is Balboa's foremost comedian and the happy bride a grand opera singer of international reputation. This is now the third elopement in 60 days.

An exact replica of the New York stock exchange will be the first set to be created at Ince's new studio at Culver City. This set will be used for many of the scenes in a current Ince-Triangle production in which H. B. Warner is to be starred. Work on the Culver City plan is now progressing rapidly and one of the eight new stages is expected to be completed within a week or so.

Rollin S. Sturgeon is again working on the desert, this time near Randsburg, filming scenes for "Flower of the Desert," a coming Vitagraph feature. This company includes Mary Anderson and William Duncan. They are to be gone a week or more. When they started, the principals voiced some different opinions. Said Mary Anderson, who has not been on a desert before, "Oh, goody, now I'll see the real desert and cactus and snakes and things and perhaps sleep in a tent." Said William Duncan, who has been there before, "Oh, shucks, more dust and sand and hard beds and bad food. I'll be glad when we are back." Said Rolin S. Sturgeon, "Well, it's all in a day's work—let's hurry off."

The Vogue Motion Picture Company has taken over the studio at Pasadena avenue formerly occupied by the Lubin Company, according to reports. No details could be obtained at time of going to press.

Digby Bell, well remembered in "The Education of Mr. Pipp" and other stage successes, has joined the Universal forces this week and started his first picture under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse. The story chosen for Mr. Bell is a picturization of Geo. Ade's Comedy "Father and Boys," a five-reel feature arranged for the screen by Ida May Park.

Cecil D. De Mille, director general of the Lasky Feature Play Company, has completed the first installment of the "Chimmie Fadden" productions in which Victor Moore is to be starred. The title of these pictures is to be "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

For the final scenes in this production the Lasky company rented the entire town of Newhall for two days, including the city hall, city jail, Grand hotel, department store, railroad depot and other public buildings. A special train of nine cars was required to carry the company from Los Angeles to Newhall.

The Lasky Company has now acquired title to the remainder of the block on which the Western studio stands. This gives them a space of 650 x 300 feet.

Frank Cook and Howard Persons have taken a lease on Parker Building, Sixth and State streets, Redlands, Cal., for a moving picture theater. The building will be remodelled and a pipe organ installed.

L. O. Vaugh, proprietor of the Temple theater, Third and Bush streets, Santa Ana, Cal., is remodeling his house.

Helen Holmes to Continue Series

Demand for Its Continuation Causes Universal to Change Plans—Jane Novak to Have Lead in "Graft."

SO INSISTENT was the demand for the continuation of the "Helen Series," in which Helen Holmes has been playing the leads, that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company feels in duty bound to its exhibitors to give them what they want, and instructions have been sen to Universal City to continue featuring Miss Helen Holmes in the series her remarkable acting made famous.

This seemed but a trivial matter to the officials of the Universal in New York City, but it was looked upon from an entirely different point of view by the Universal City directors, who had already decided upon the discontinuance of the Helen Holmes series, as the original number of pictures had been produced, and Miss Holmes already cast to play the leading role opposite Hobart Henley in the big new Universal serial, "Graft," the scenarios of which are being written by fifteen different authors, and of which Irving S. Cobb has already completed the first installment.

In fact, Director-General McRae at Universal City had already begun rehearsals of the first installment with Hobart Henley and Miss Holmes, and the receipt by him of a telegram from President Carl Laemmle to continue the Helen Holmes series was received with disappointment, as it was planned to start taking the pictures the following day. Telegrams went back and forth for a day or so, but all to no avail. The Helen Holmes series must be continued, and there was naught left for the Universal City directors to do but to select a new leading woman. This was no small job.

A list of eligible stars was made up. Their work in big productions was analyzed and after considerable dallying the directors chose Jane Novak.

"Madame Butterfly" Completed

Mary Pickford Starred in Famous Players' Adaptation of Great Classic by John Luther Long Under Direction of Sid Olcott.

"MADAME BUTTERFLY," John Luther Long's most universally beloved work, is to be given to the motion picture public with Mary Pickford in the role of Cho-Cho-San, by the Famous Players Film Company on Nov. 8. It was over a year ago the producers acquired the film rights to the story.

"Madame Butterfly" was written about twenty years ago and first gained the attention and admiration of the theatrical world when David Belasco produced it with Blanche Bates in the leading role, in which she scored one of the greatest successes of her career. In 1904, the great Puccini, charmed by the infinite pathos of the tale, wove about it one of the most exquisite musical settings that has ever been heard on any operatic stage. Two years later the opera was introduced into this country by Henry W. Savage, and it has ever since been one of the most popular offerings of the musical world.

Scene from "Madame Butterfly" (Famous Players).

Now it is to be immortalized upon the screen as a Paramount picture. It is unique and altogether fitting that Mary Pickford should be chosen to appear in "Madame Butterfly," which has the distinction of being the first work of an American author to be made the basis of a grand opera. Coincidentally it is Little Mary's first Oriental role.

For the exquisite Japanese settings of this pathetic tale Sid Olcott, under whose direction it is being produced, obtained the exclusive use of the most beautiful Japanese gardens in the United States. That no detail of costume or native usage might be overlooked, one of the most dependable authorities on Japanese matters—a member of the New York Nipponese colony—was especially engaged to superintend the buying of costumes and the acquisition of all properties used.

In support of the star is Marshal Neilan in the role of Lieutenant Pinkerton, the faithless lover. Mr. Neilan is already familiar to the motion picture public by reason of his excellent work in leading roles. It is safe to say, however, that he has never had a better opportunity to display his ability than in this characterization. Others who appear in the cast are W. T. Carleton, Olive West, Jane Hall and Lawrence Wood.

HOWARD ESTABROOK SIGNS WITH ARROW.

Howard Estabrook, Broadway's favorite leading man, has been signed by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation of 71 West 23rd street, to play a stellar role in the forthcoming Arrow-Pathe releases. Mr. Shallenberger's arrangements with Mr. Estabrook include the latter's exclusive services.

For this reason Mr. Estabrook has resigned from the cast of "Miss Information," in which he has been playing opposite Miss Elsie Janis. He cannot leave the cast of that popular production until November 6. But from that time on Mr. Estabrook will not be seen in the flesh except as he goes to and from his home to the Arrow studios in Yonkers.

Business Good in Canada

So Reports Kleine's Canadian Manager on a Flying Trip to New York.

D. COOPER, of Toronto, manager of George Kleine's Canadian interests, was a visitor in New York last week. "It's the usual question," said Mr. Cooper in response to an inquiry; "Canada is neither bankrupt nor going to be. Business in Toronto is 'fair-to-middlin' ' in the parlance of Missouri, and the picture business is exceptionally good. If you could see the number of big new houses going up in my territory, you would not think the war god such a demon commerce destroyer as he's generally supposed to be. Now and then a one-legged soldier, fresh from the battlefield, stumps down King street and promptly becomes the cynosure of curious eyes; and every little while a Highlander fife and drum corps goes by in search of recruits; but these are the only external evidences of the war, unless you count a few theaters in the poorer section of the city which have reduced admission prices from ten to five cents.

"Intelligent exhibitors are making money just as usual. Take the beautiful Strand theater for example. Mr. Marvin, whom I regard as one of the shrewdest exhibitors in America, is getting more money out of his house than ever before. He had a ten-cent gallery that wasn't doing much business. You know how difficult it is to induce good patrons to go upstairs for pictures even when the gallery is on a dead level with the curtain and better for viewing purposes than the main floor. Well, Mr. Marvin pulled out two rows of these ten-cent seats and put in some very pretty loges. These he offered at a quarter and fills them every night.

"The new Kleine-Edison program is pleasing exhibitors mightily and I think is better represented among the Dominion playhouses than any other. We are going to open more offices in Canada very shortly, which is the best proof of the increasing popularity of the Kleine-Edison product. 'The Woman Next Door,' 'The Money Master' and 'Vanity Fair' are booking solid and seem to be giving the utmost satisfaction to theatergoers.

"I am looking for a sane and normal increase in all lines of business. The Canadian giant was a bit dazed by the first blow of the war, but he's on his feet now and coming back with all his native strength and youth."

Metro Fall Announcement

Four Big Features Planned for Early Production with Many Noted Stars.

METRO'S second autumnal announcement includes four big feature productions in which a number of noted stars and favorites of the screen and stage will be presented. Simultaneously, work has begun upon this group of pretentious picture masterpieces under the foremost makers of photoplays. A fifth feature picture will be put in production shortly, when Mary Miles Minter finishes her work in "Barbara Frietchie" at the Popular Plays and Players studio at Fort Lee, N. J. Among the artists who will be seen in the new Metro features are Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Emily Stevens, Lionel Barrymore, Henry Bergman, George Le Guere, Valli Valli, Grace Elliston and Edward Brennan. This will mark Miss Elliston's initial appearance upon the screen, after a successful career as a star in spoken drama.

Following the phenomenal success of Emily Stevens in "Cora" and "Destiny or the Soul of a Woman," two Rolfe-Metro features, every effort possible was directed to obtain a third vehicle suitable for this talented dramatic actress. This was found in "The House of Tears," a powerful five-act photodrama. It affords Miss Stevens unlimited opportunity to display her great scope of histrionic artistry and genius.

Another great Metro achievement will be the five-part picturization of Booth Tarkington's famous novel, "The Turmoil." Valli Valli will be starred in this production, playing the delightful role of "Mary Vetrees." George Le Guere, the master delineator of young men parts on the screen, will be featured with Valli Valli in the lovable and poetical role of "Bibbs Sheridan," one of the best characterizations ever penned by Mr. Tarkington.

Grace Elliston, the gifted dramatic actress, who has been starred in many productions by Charles Frohman on Broadway, but is perhaps best known throughout the United States and Canada for her wonderfully artistic performance in "The Lion and the Mouse," is the newest star added to the long list of Metro artists. She will make her bow on the screen in a five-act picture which will be produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. This photodrama is from an original script, and is yet unnamed.

Lionel Barrymore, who has long been a favorite star in the silent drama, will have the stellar role in the original five-part photoplay, "The Passing Throng." William Nigh, under whose direction "Emmy of Stork's Nest," with Mary Miles Minter, was made, is the author of "The Passing Throng," and he will also direct it. The picture will be in five parts and will be produced for the Metro program by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

After "Barbara Frietchie," Mary Miles Minter's next picture will be the five-act photoplay, "The Green Witch," a picturization of the novel by J. Breckenridge Ellis. Charles Horan will direct "The Green Witch" for the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and a masterpiece for the Metro is expected.

Three productions are ready for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. They are "Richard Carvel," a picturization of the gripping historical novel of the same name by Winston Churchill; "The Yellow Dove," another picturization from a novel by George Gibbs, which D. Appleton & Co. will publish this month, and "Pigeon Island," a Harold MacGrath thriller of international politics which gives Mr. Bushman exceptional opportunities.

Marguerite Snow, who is now in California completing "Rosemary, That's for Remembrance," will come east soon with her own company, when she will be starred alone in a production for the Metro program.

Edmund Breese will be seen in "The Spell of the Yukon," the third of the Robert W. Service poems picturized for his especial stellar talents.

Three new photodramas of a decidedly new type have been selected for Mme. Petrova, and work will be started on them immediately upon her return from her road tour under the management of the Messrs. Shubert. The new plays, which will be directed by Mme. Alice Blache, of the Popular Plays and Players, are regarded as exceptionally well suited to the talents of Mme. Petrova.

Metro pictures are not only keeping up to the high standards set by their producers, but are exceeding in power and artistic quality the previous best efforts of this young giant among the picture companies.

World's Baseball Series

Tele-Photo Lens Gives Intimate View of Plays and Players in Recent Championship Games.

THE use of the tele-photo lens has revolutionized fast camera work, making it possible to get big and clear pictures of action photographed at a considerable distance.

An admirable example of its efficacy is shown in the World's series base ball pictures, taken by the company of that name at Suite 1005, Candler Building, New York City.

Three cameras were trained on the field. Instead of getting views dim and small because of the length of the "shoot," each play loomed up big and intimate. You can even see Speaker sweat as he slides to second, and note Niehoff's vexation as he misses him.

The fault of all base ball, football and other athletic pictures has always been their vagueness. The plays were executed at such a distance that the players could not be recognized, and to recognize the individual player is the chief charm to the spectator.

It is probable that this World Series Pictures will continue to draw base-ball fans over the country for many months to come when the base-ball diamonds of history are hard and frozen and bleacher and grandstand empty of yelling enthusiasts. The American boy and the American man loves his base ball and wants it—early and often.

This series, advertised in thousands of newspapers in miles and miles of columns will be an attraction to those who lived far from the cities of victory and who have the natural desire to see how the championship was won. The thousands who thronged the streets before the score-boards, subject to rushing, worrying policemen, attest the power of the national game over the hearts and imaginations of the people the country-wide.

In addition to the recording of the games themselves, "shots" were taken of the many personages in society and sport who lined the boxes. The first and closest motion picture of President Wilson with his fiancee, Mrs. Galt, is prominent among these.

ARROW FILM GOES TO YONKERS.

Within the next fortnight the executive offices of the Arrow Film Corporation will be moved to the Yonkers plant at 120 School street. Mr. Shallenberger, because of his extensive motion picture interests, will maintain an office for himself downtown; but the Arrow office and studio work will be done in Yonkers after November 8.

K. & E. Joins Paramount

New Alliance Between Feature Film Distributors and Big Theatrical Concern Calculated to Extend Service.

BEING already associated in the presentation of motion pictures with the Chas. Frohman, David Belasco and Oliver Morosco interests, through contracts with its producing companies, the Paramount Pictures Corporation has now signed contracts with Klaw & Erlanger by the terms of which a new $2,000,000 corporation to be known as the Paramount-Klaw & Erlanger Company has been formed.

The executive board of the new corporation will consist of W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players' Film Company; Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company; Marc Klaw, Abraham L. Erlanger and Raymond Pawley, treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. An associate board of directors will be announced later.

At its formation as the first feature program company in the motion picture business, a year and a half ago, the Paramount Pictures Corporation instituted the continuous service system of booking photoplays, which has been used successfully in the legitimate theater by Klaw & Erlanger, and it was therefore natural that these two interests should form an alliance.

It was announced that it is the intention of this new organization to extend the service of a company which already exists, and to better generally the exhibition of motion pictures throughout the country; it will not interfere with the present interests of the Paramount Pictures Corporation or its feature producing companies, the Famous Players' Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures, Inc., on the one hand, or Klaw & Erlanger on the other, which means that the present relations of the theaters booking the service of either of these organizations will not be disturbed.

What the Paramount Pictures Corporation has done to revolutionize the motion picture business, and what Klaw & Erlanger has done in the legitimate theater, are well known. What the result of their alliance will be is not hard to imagine.

Penny-a-Liners Won't Do

Virile, Vital, Understanding Authors Needed Badly for Film Stories.

ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL, head of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, and at present in the city attending important board meetings of that concern, threw a bomb into the Equitable camp this week when he displayed a number of copies of letters and cablegrams he had sent during the past four weeks while at the helm of his large merchandising plant at Chicago.

Mr. Spiegel called a meeting of those directly responsible for the success of Equitable and without opposition Russell Edgar Smith and Marc Edmund Jones, heads of Equitable scenario department, were instructed to follow up Mr. Spiegel's lead, and secure such of the old and new fiction classics as were protected by copyright and procurable in form, suitable for screen adaption.

"The Penny-a-Liner," to quote Mr. Spiegel, "who writes for the yellow back novel, the cheap magazine and the boiler-plate newspaper at so much a line, without consideration of the matter he is writing, who simply compiles laboriously a flow of rhetoric because he is getting so much for so much, is of no earthly use to the film world.

"We need, ever so badly, more brain power in the story department, and we have decided to get it, if we have to exhume the dead masters' bodies and get their 'mark' on a contract.

"We need unconventional denouements. We need different kinds of climaxes. We must creep, not run, away from the eternal triangle. We must have less of the two women and one man, or one woman and two men. We must so construct our stories that the average auditor of the most humble brain power, or the most intelligent with the greatest brain power, will have to use a certain amount of perspicacity to fathom the plot. Our weakness is the finish of the stories. The first, second and third reels are great. We have novel situations, novel climaxes and novel dramatic action—then comes the last two reels and we see the hero drawing closer to the heroine. We note the coming downfall of the adventuress, the coming expose of the bribe taker, forger, the exonerating of the convicted hero—the forgiven intruder, the punished unfaithful one—and then—tableaux—hero and heroine in each other's arms.

"The fifth reel of the average picture, were the characters dressed as those in almost any other picture, would be just as appropriate on any other film as the one for which it was made.

"Within the week, we have changed the titles of three pictures, because when we had completed them and dressed them up with original ideas, such as we are demanding from our writers. we found that our stories were so much stronger, so much more novel, and contained so much real interesting material, that the original titles were not applicable in the sense we wish them. We renamed 'The Fisher Girl' 'A Daughter of the Sea;' we called 'Justice' 'Not Guilty;' we called 'The Silence of Dean Maitland' 'Greater Love'—and if we are persistent enough, if our ambitions are maintained—we are ging to get and give big things, and in a such a novel way, that a revolutionary innovation will be noted.

Coles' Picture Machine Corporation

New Organization Formed to Market the Cameron Projector.

OF INTEREST to the trade is the news that there has been formed for the purpose of manufacturing and selling the Cameron Motion Picture Projector, the Coles Picture Machine Corporation, H. B. Coles, president, 120 West 41st street, New York. Mr. Coles is well known to the trade and needs no introduction here. His extensive experience, ability and close application to business augers well for the success of his present undertaking. He has devoted himself exclusively to the motion picture machine business for the past eight years or more and has been connected in an executive capacity with two of the foremost companies in that line of business during the period of their most rapid development.

H. B. Coles.

The Coles Picture Machine Corporation is not a stock jobbing proposition. No stock has been or will be offered for sale, as it is soundly financed to carry on the work it has in hand.

As a foundation for its business, it has in the Cameron Projector a machine which gets away from the generally accepted style of motion picture projector. The machine is much easier on film than the other types on the market, it is claimed, for it has no intermittent sprocket, and handles the film with less liability of damage. Other radical improvements and innovations are incorporated in its design. It is remarkable for its simplicity and the ease with which it can be threaded, taken apart and put together.

Full assurance of its excellence lies in the fact that over twenty-five (25) machines have been in practical operation for about three years in various theaters where the operators were not specially instructed in their care, and in all cases the machines have fully demonstrated their superiority.

Not only will the machine itself be of interest to the trade, but we are assured by Mr. Coles that his selling plan will appeal strongly to the better class of machine and supply houses throughout the country.

Mr. Coles has asked our representative to extend through these columns his hearty invitation to the trade to call at his office and see the machine in actual operation.

Director "Bob" Vignola returns to Kalem's Jacksonville, Fla., Studios as soon as he completes the four-act production of Kiralfy's famous extravaganza "The Black Crook," upon which he is now engaged. While South, Mr. Vignola will confine his attention to three and four-reel features.

Rothapfel Talks in Philadelphia

Head of the New Rialto Tells Exhibitors How He Sought and Got Job as Operator—Speaks on Theater Management.

A HUNDRED of Philadelphia's prominent motion picture exhibitors gathered at the S. L. Rothapfel-Mutual Tour banquet held in that city Thursday night. Mr. Rothapfel was the guest of honor and principal speaker. "Not so many years ago I was walking the streets of Philadelphia looking for a job as an operator in one of your theaters," Mr. Rothapfel said in opening his talk. "And I got the job," he continued. He told of the steps by which he fought his way upward and the methods that had brought him success. He received the closest attention throughout his address, which lasted nearly two hours.

Among the subjects discussed by the speaker were the handling of music for the theater, the psychology of entertainment, the treatment of lights, the balance of a program, and the relation of the employer and employe.

Edward O'Keefe of Atlantic City was toastmaster. Among the speakers of the evening were Jay Emanuel, Marcus A. Senn, C. Stamper and Charles Goldstein.

The banquet got a touch of excitement from a short but warm debate between Mr. Rothapfel and an exhibitor. Mr. Rothapfel had reached the conclusion of his address and invited questions. Edward J. Jeffries, the owner of two theaters, challenged the speaker's statements on some points of theater policy. "I'll be back here after this tour is over—I am coming at my own expense just to show you in your own theater what I mean, and I will demonstrate to you in person," exclaimed Mr. Rothapfel. "That goes now, and I'll be back."

Lillian Cook

ALMOST like a fairy tale runs the story of how dainty little Lillian Cook, the World Film Corporation ingenue who is at present working in "Camille," came into the pictures.

Miss Cook (who boasts all of seventeen summers to her credit) has been an actress for some time. She started in as a child, playing stock for some time. Then she distinguished herself in a great pageant, in which, then a child of 13 years, she played a difficult role which it would have been hard even for a mature actress to play.

Later Miss Cook came to New York. She secured a position in the road company of "Excuse Me," playing first the Bracelet girl and then the lead.

Last season she played in "Potash and Perlmutter" at the Cohan theater, and then went on the road with the company, scoring a great hit all over the country.

Lillian Cook.

But it was last summer that the really exciting part of the romance of Lillian Cook's career came. She went out to Fort Lee to the World Film Corporation's studio to see if there was not something she might do. She had managed to find time to play a part in "Mother" the summer before, and she asked to see Mr. Tourneur. While she was waiting in Mr. Tourneur's office for him to arrive, a very nice appearing man—evidently connected with the firm—came into the office and asked her whom she wanted to see.

"I'm waiting for Mr. Tourneur," she answered.

In a few minutes the man came back, and said, "Would you like a position in our stock company? If you would there is one for you."

Miss Cook says that she was dumfounded, and could not believe at first that it was true. She thought the man must have been playing a joke on her, but when she discovered that he was the president of the company, she knew that it was, and that her fondest dreams had been realized.

Lillian Cook has been at the World Film studio all summer. She first worked in "The Cotton King," then in "The Code of the Mountains," and is now engaged in "Camille."

The young actress has light hair and blue eyes, and is exceedingly talented. Her intelligence and keen business ability is a wonderful asset in her work as a picture actress. She is clever and hard working and will be heard from in big things in the future.

Ovation to Valli Valli

Metro Opening at Montreal a Personal Triumph for Well Known Star.

THE opening of Metro in Canada was signalized by the personal as well as the screen appearance of Valli Valli in "The High Road" at the Imperial theater, Montreal, Monday evening, Oct. 18.

The occasion was notable in the history of motion pictures in Montreal by reason of the fact that more people were turned away from the Imperial than had ever been accorded in the theatrical annals of the city. Police reserves had to be called out to handle the crowd as early as seven o'clock in the evening and before eight o'clock the entire street was blocked, so that cars had to be diverted to another route. Hundreds of people coming in carriages and automobiles waited for the second show, at which Miss Valli appeared in person and on the screen. She was presented with a gorgeous flower basket of sterling silver, nearly three feet high, filled with roses, the gift of the officials of Metro Pictures Limited, the Canadian distributors for Metro Pictures. Edward Brennan, who supported Miss Valli in "The High Road," also appeared on the Imperial stage and was given almost as much of an ovation as the star herself.

Metro Pictures have already won a warm welcome in Canada, as was evidenced by the turn-out to greet Valli Valli.

The business management of the company is in the hands of Herbert Lubin, who as managing director is upsetting many established precedents in the film industry in Canada.

PETE SCHMID SCORNS OFFICE.

Pete Schmid, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company P. A., emphatically denies the report which has been spread to the effect that he has dabbled in politics to the extent of becoming a nominee for Sheriff. P. J. S. states that his activities in connection with his duties in the Morosco offices would not allow him the time to select a shining badge, much less become mixed up in politics. Pete further deposes and says that the Sheriff story was the invention of an ambitious, though somewhat immature youth, who is trying to realize the dreams of his lifetime, namely, to become a press agent by trying out his ability on Pete.

"QUO VADIS?" DOES EXTRAORDINARY BUSINESS.

George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" first of the great film masterpieces and unquestionably the best known picture in the annals of the business, packed the Hamilton, Canada, Grand Opera House for three days last week. "Quo Vadis?" was given a modest billing throughout the city and played Oct. 14, 15 and 16 to almost $1,000 at popular admission prices. "Quo Vadis?" was released in the spring of 1913 and has played Hamilton return dates, as well as every other city of its size, in both the United States and Canada.

OPIE READ WILL WRITE FOR MIRROR.

Opie Read, the novelist, has signed contracts with the Mirror Films, Inc., whereby he will write original scenarios for that organization. The deal was closed here between the novelist and Captain Harry Lambart, who is in the west on business for the Mirror.

One of the Read novels have been done for the screen, but the author has never written anything for pictures. He will write human interest photoplays of every day American life for the Mirror.

EDISON TO MAKE "THE DESTROYING ANGEL."

"The Destroying Angel," Louis Joseph Vance's famous novel, is now being filmed by the Edison Company for release on the Kleine-Edison Feature Service program Dec. 8. Mabel Trunnelle, Marc MacDermott, Walter Craven, George Wright, Fred Jones, John Sturgeon and William West will handle the various leads. "The Destroying Angel" is one of the most popular of Vance's many noted stories.

Gaumont Players Go South

Director William F. Haddock and Party of Screen Favorites Go by Water to Jacksonville.

WITH the cheers of several hundred friends ringing in their ears, fifty actors and members of the producing staff of the Gaumont Company sailed from New York on Tuesday, October 26, for a winter in Florida. The last farewells to little old New York were said at one o'clock when the "Mohawk" cast off and the stubby little tugs pulled her out into the stream. The party was in charge of William F. Haddock, a director of one of the Gaumont photodramatic companies.

Gaumont Directors Who Sailed for Jacksonville.

In South Jacksonville the Gaumont Company has leased the Dixieland theater property. Here the companies making the Rialto Star Features will begin work at once. A little later a comedy company will also share the studios, making Casino Star Comedies.

This first invasion by the Gaumont organization has been heralded to Jacksonville by the arrival there last Monday of John S. Martin, the New York representative of the company. Mr. Martin arranged the final details and took over the Dixieland theater property. He plans to return to New York shortly, as his time is well taken up with engaging Broadway stars for Gaumont productions.

George Du Bois Proctor, Gaumont's new scenario editor, has accepted several tense photodramas for immediate production, and an announcement of these features and the stars who will appear in them will be made as soon as the order in which they are to play has been arranged.

The party included Miss Lucille Taft, Miss Mathilde Baring, Miss Flavia Arcaro, Miss Madge Orlamond, Miss Martin, Fritz Orlamond, technical director, Charles W. Travis, Leonard Craske, Albert Macklin, Sidney Mason, Henry W. Pemberton, James Levering and John Reinhard. Among the unofficial members were Mrs. Haddock, Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Reinhard.

CENTURY BREAKS GROUND FOR STUDIO.

The Century Film Corporation, located at Roundup, Mont., broke ground for its studio Wednesday, October 20, and will commence building operations immediately so as to be ready to produce its first picture by the middle of November, if possible.

The studio is being located two miles east of the town proper, in the old or first town of Roundup, which stands just as it did forty years ago, with its log houses and typical frontier saloons, that can be used as they are in many western pictures—and who does not prefer the natural to the handicraft of the stage carpenter and scenic artist?

The company will feature western drama, comedy-dramas and snow pictures in their natural element; in fact, the studio is located in the midst of some of the most natural and beautiful scenery that is left to the west, and within a few miles of the studio are coal mines, lakes and rivers.

Some of the best cameramen and directors in the film world have been engaged, and the company will spare no reasonable expense to make the quality of their productions such as will create a demand for them.

Gerda Holmes

GERDA HOLMES, whose work with Thanhouser, Essanay and other feature producers during the past few years, attracted the attention of numerous other concerns of equal importance, announces through her manager that she has contracted to appear under the management of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and that within the next two weeks will leave the plant of Essanay for New York to assume her new duties.

Miss Holmes, who made her first big mark in Klaw and Erlanger's production of "The Round Up," in which she played the featured feminine role, was drafted from that production by the film field, because of her work. Her appearance in films was the means of such rapid advancement, so unusual in itself, that Essanay contracted with her for appearance with the male stars on their roster and then, after a year with Essanay, during which she played leading business with Francis X. Bushman and Richard Travers, she starred in one picture, "The Victory of Virtue," and her work in this picture was the direct reason for Equitable's contracting for her.

Gerda Holmes.

Just what productions will have the personality of Miss Holmes as an asset have not been definitely settled by the powers that be of Equitable. Numerous male stars are under contract and option to that concern, including Robert Edeson, William Courtenay, Henry Kolker, Charles J. Ross, Robert T. Haines and William Courtleigh, and it is now thought Miss Holmes will be seen opposite one of these stars at no distant date.

Dark featured, slight of form, graceful, as the result of long tuition in dancing, of recognized histrionic ability, Miss Holmes' personality and attractiveness will be more than a passing potency to the Equitable program.

DIRECTOR RICHARD GARRICK GONE SOUTH.

Richard Garrick, director for Rialto Star Features of the Gaumont Company, left New York Monday, Oct. 25, for Jacksonville, Fla., to arrange for the reception of his Gaumont dramatic stock company which will soon follow. Mr. Garrick has just completed the beautiful phantasy of disembodied souls, "The New Adam and Eve," based on Nathaniel Hawthorne's story of the name. Miss Grace Valentine will be starred in this Casino Star Feature, which is to be released Nov. 17 on the Mutual program.

DEVORE PARMER WITH TRIANGLE.

Devore Parmer has been engaged by John Emerson, who is producing films for the Triangle people in New York, as "heavy" in the support of Douglas Fairbanks in "His Picture in the Papers."

Mr. Parmer recently returned from a hunting trip on the estates of Guy Hedlund, where his prowess as a hunter was proven by the bringing down of two fine bucks and numerous smaller game.

BECKY BRUCE WITH RAVER.

The Raver Film Corporation announces that the leading lady who will support James J. Corbett in its inaugural feature production is none other than the charming little Becky Bruce, lately seen on Broadway in the metropolitan casts of "A Pair of Sixes," "Prunella" and "The Show Shop." Miss Bruce plays the character of Catherine Foster, the other girl in Augustus Thomas' drama, "The Other Girl."

Studio Management

A Little Inside Information on an Important Subject by E. D. Horkheimer, of the Balboa Company.

A STUDIO is not a factory. To consider it so is a gross mistake. Hence, factory methods cannot be applied to studio management. Right now, this matter is being widely discussed among moving picture producers, because some observers have declared that there is too much waste motion in the filming of silent dramas. No doubt some studio suffers in this regard; but I believe that the leading producers have their business well in hand.

E. D. Horkheimer.

I know we have at Balboa, although it might appear to the outsider that a lot of time is lost every day. But it really isn't, in the long run. To begin with, the producing of moving pictures is different from any other manufacturing process. While in a broad sense picture making comes under the head of manufacturing, yet, strictly speaking, it is not such an operation. There is a wide difference between the two activities.

I do not believe it possible to overcome all so-called waste in the production of picture plays. Much of what seems like waste to the uninitiated is really not such. Rather it is time given to the turning out of careful and artistic work. If your purpose is primarily to "manufacture film," then of course you can rush your output. But the result will tell on the screen.

Each silent drama put on is a separate problem. The studio's business is not like that of a shoe factory, which makes thousands of duplicates of a given pattern. Where the same thing is done over and over again, it is possible for the so-called efficiency expert to devise time-saving methods. But the same theory cannot be applied to the making of moving pictures.

I don't want to be understood as contending that system cannot be applied to picture-making. On the contrary, I am an ardent advocate of methodical procedure. The Balboa studio has worked out a comprehensive system whereby all its varied departments dove-tail. Productions move with all possible celerity from the scenario department to the company's projection room. But each one is treated as an individual "job" so to speak. There is no effort to make all fit into the same mold.

We are our own efficiency experts. So many different considerations enter into cinematography that I do not believe an outsider could come into a studio and make an intelligent survey. Balboa's system is not red tape, like so many efficiency programs prove to be in the last analysis. I feel competent to judge because I am an engineer by profession and had years of practical experience before becoming identified with the film industry. To my notion, the most efficient results are obtained by having competent employees, men who do not cross each other's tracks, but follow harmoniously, one after the other.

As I see it, the actor's time is the hardest thing to regulate economically. But one cannot expect him to punch a time clock like a stage hand, because his work is of an entirely different order. I mean this independent of so-called temperament. Artistic considerations must be allowed for. Then again, in an outdoor studio, everything depends on the sun. Until it appears, nothing can be made. But it is possible to have such a system that everything will be in place and all players ready for "shooting" the minute the light is right.

We have a number of innovations at Balboa which help us to get results. For instance, we get daily reports from the U. S. Weather Bureau. They are tabulated. Then, we have instruments of our own for independent observations. By striking an average between the two, we are right 99 per cent. of the time on what tomorrow's weather is going to be. Accordingly, we lay out our work, prepare for big scenes and order extras.

A "location book" is kept for the assistance of directors. It contains snap-shots of all sorts of locations. By consulting this our producers can find the spot they need without unnecessary loss of time. We also keep on record a "still" of every set erected on the stage. Each item in our property rooms—and there are a hundred thousand of them—is card-indexed so that it can be found on the instant. All props must be kept clean and dusted. We have a complete stock of furniture of all periods and rent nothing. In this way, an inconceivable amount of time lost by most studios is saved at Balboa. It takes a large investment, but more than pays for itself in the long run.

Wherever the human element is as important as in the making of motion pictures, it will not be possible to stop all the leaks, as when you are working mechanically as most factories do. Until we use automatons to enact our silent dramas we will always have the wastage problem before us, I fear. It is the mechanical that we want to get away from in pictures—the tendency to sameness.

It is the constant change that holds the public. That is the principal objection to all studios following a uniform method of production as the carshops do. In view of the continual change in output, we feel that Balboa has achieved a high degree of efficiency. The many trained observers from other studios and technical newspapermen who visit us say so, too.

Templer Saxe

TEMPLER SAXE, Vitagraph player, whose experience on the speaking stage fitted him to play a wide range of characters, has brought this experience to the field of motion pictures, where he is seen alternately in a strong dramatic role and then in the lighter comedy parts. He was born at Redhill, twenty miles from London, England, and his birthday falls on Aug. 22.

Templer Saxe.

Mr. Saxe was destined for the Diplomatic Service. He graduated from two universities, of Bonn and of Brussels. At the latter he obtained the degree of Ph. D. M. A. Oxford was to have come next, but reverses of fortune compelled his father to abandon the idea of a diplomatic career for his son. During his college days he was interested in amateur theatricals, and when it became time for him to choose a profession he turned to the stage.

Coming to this country, he made his debut as leading juvenile in "A Ladies' Paradise" at the Metropolitan Opera House. He sang the principal baritone parts in "The Sultan of Sulu," "Piff, Paff, Pouff," "The Earl and the Girl" and "The Blue Moon," all of these engagements being in New York City. On the road he appeared in "The Gay Musician," "Countess Coquette," "Morocco Bound" and "Yama."

With the exception of desultory work with several of the minor picture producing companies, all of Mr. Saxe's experience has been gained under the Vitagraph banner. He has appeared in a number of pictures both single part and feature and has made good in every character where he has had to face the camera. A number of the most important of his picture productions include "One Performance Only," "Pat Hogan, Deceased," "The Breath of Araby," "Billy's Stratagem," "The Butterfly," "A Mistake in Typesetting," "A Disciple of Plato," "The Missing Clue," "Heredity," "Sam's Sweetheart" and many others.

"The Upstart"

Three-Reel Universal Production Tells Entertaining, Well Enacted Story of Girl Laundress.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

HARVEY GATES has written a bright, entertaining story in this photoplay, which pictures the adventures of a pretty girl laundress. Stella Razeto is very pleasing in the leading role and is assisted by a good cast, including Charles Lyke, Jay Belasco, Laura Oakley, Mark Fenton and Helen Wright.

The production is unusual from the fact that while it is not strikingly original in plot, there is at least a freedom from the usual obvious types and situations. There are any number of complications, which dovetail together in an easy, natural manner. The characters are carefully introduced and may be firmly fixed in mind as they appear.

Scene from "The Upstart" (Gold Seal).

Nana, the laundress, finds a note from a wealthy man named Newell to an actress known as Vera. Nana's admirer, Sam, gets possession of the note and forces Mr. Newell to pay him $5,000 for its return. Sam then buys Nana a great many clothes, with her father's approval. Once she has these, she acquires the virus of social ambition. She meets Paul, the son of Mr. Newell, and passes herself off as the actress, Vera.

When Sam desires to marry Nana she turns him down, having tasted high social life and fallen in love with Paul. The observer is not apt to regret this, however, as Sam is a despicable character. She attends a reception with Paul and is introduced as the actress. Mr. Newell is there and tells Paul she is an adventuress. Sam turns up and shoots the girl in a jealous fit. She goes to a hospital, where the real Vera calls upon her, learns her story and they become friends. Paul also comes and remains true to Nana despite her deception.

"The Secret Sin"

Blanche Sweet, in a Well Made Five-Part Lasky Production, Is Shown in a Dual Role.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS no simple matter in these days of the frequent use of double exposure to create substantial illusion with a player in a dual role. In "The Secret Sin," a five-part Lasky subject from an original scenario by Margaret Turnbull of the Lasky staff, Blanche Sweet successfully portrays two parts—those of twin sisters of opposite temperament. The story is laid in Chinatown. Frank Reicher, the producer, and Wilfred Buckland, the art director, are to be commended for the faithfulness with which they have created the atmosphere—the street scenes in San Francisco are material factors, but the studio sets are of even greater importance. The Chinese restaurant, one of the more exclusive sort, is finely, even lavishly, done; the interiors of the Chinese joints, with the "fake" victims planted for the gratification of the curiosity of morbid tourists, bespeak the care devoted to the staging of this subject.

Miss Sweet has two roles—of the sister addicted to the use of drugs and of her twin, a normal, likable personality. Her portrayal of the difficult part of the former—the beginning of the habit, its gradual growth, insidious, always progressive; the expedients she adopts to obtain the drug and to conceal it, the lies she tells to throw suspicion on the other sister—is convincing in its realism.

The story rings true all the way—of the family in poverty, of the breadwinner finally obtaining work and sticking to his employer when the others quit, being rewarded with a partnership; of the discovery of oil and the riches that follow; of the partner falling in love with the normal sister, only to have his regard chilled by the tale of the drug fiend, and the exciting scenes in Chinatown that lead to the undoing and uncovering of the victim and the straightening out of matters all around—these make an interesting tale of an unpleasant subject, and that is an achievement in itself.

Miss Sweet has good support. Thomas Meighan as the employer and later the partner of the father of the two daughters gives a good performance. Sessue Hayakawa as Lin Foo, the keeper of the Chinese den, is one of the factors in the story. Hal Clements and Alice Knowland are Mr. and Mrs. Martin, the parents of the daughters. There are many Chinese in the larger scenes, both of the street and in interiors, and they contribute to the atmosphere.

"The Better Woman"

Leonore Ulrich Gives Interesting Performance in Drama Produced by Triumph Company for Equitable.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN DRAMATIC material and the manner of its handling, this five-part story, written by Richard Campbell and produced by the Triumph Film Corporation under the direction of Joseph A. Golden, is eminently satisfactory. It is an original work finely calculated to bring out the most interesting qualities of the exceptional personality of Lenore Ulrich, cast as the emotionally intense daughter of the proprietor of a hotel in a small western town. Miss Ulrich is becoming accustomed to the requirements of picture acting and appears to marked advantage in a character demanding forceful interpretation She gives the impression of strong feeling in portraying the unhappiness of the girl whose craving for love will not be denied.

Scene from "The Better Woman" (Triumph-Equitable).

As presented by Miss Ulrich, the character of Kate Tripler arouses sympathy as well as understanding. Her ambitions are at variance with the possibilities of her environment, and when a handsome young civil engineer stops at her father's hotel she sees an opportunity that is altogether too rare to be missed. She loves him and determines to have him even at the cost of a dishonest trick—a trick that leads Frank to believe that the girl he left in the East has married another man.

Under the influence of drink he marries Kate and, as might be expected, there is no end of trouble, for try as she may, the untutored Western girl is out of place in more particular society, and the husband is none too tolerant. Out of this situation—the wife struggling to please, the husband remaining aloof—scenes of certain appeal arise prior to a clash of dramatic power. Finally Kate gives up the fight, returning to the humble home of her childhood, and, as might be expected, the husband follows to effect a reconciliation at the conclusion of the photoplay. Suspense is slight in the last five hundred feet of the film, for the reunion is a foregone conclusion.

In the first reel there is a fight of the most realistic kind. Settings and locations are of the best and the acting of Lowell Sherman, Ben Graham, Charles Hutchinson, Will Browning and Edith Thornton is convincing.

"Comrade John"

William Elliott, Featured in Gold Rooster Play, Loses None of His Individual Magnetism in Transferring His Personality to the Screen.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE adaptation of the novel of Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster to the screen has brought to the public a picture play that is different from other picture plays. "Comrade John" has an individuality of its own. Its two central male figures are creatures of two distinct moral planes. Two feminine types there are also, presented not in the usual tawdry fashion. The one is an idealist. The other may have been while she was still under the spell of an illusion. But the play deals kindly with the feminine side of the question, and fails to eliminate that purity of soul reputed to dwell in the mother of man, or to tarnish with any large desire for revenge the character of the castaway of the filthy religious fanatic, Herman Stein.

William Elliott in the role of John Chance (Comrade John), an architect under contract with Herman Stein for the sum of $500,000 to build a "city beautiful," gives us a fine example of what intelligence and poise mean to a screen actor. In fact so different is his method of pursuance that one is inclined to place him in a class by himself. William Elliott does not "act," but in the simplest, most unaggressive manner holds up before his audience a type of hero that is universally admired.

Opposite him plays Ruth Roland, always beautiful, fresh and spontaneous, modelled to fit the idealistic type of Cynthia. Her conception of the role is satisfactory.

To get back to the play, an unusual opportunity has been provided all of the principal players in the delineation of characters that stand out well. For instance, the role of the Prophet Herman Stein, portrayed so forcefully by Lewis J. Cody, is fully equal in opportunity to the title role. In other words, the villain, more aggressive in type, is thrown as much into bas relief as the hero, and the second feminine lead, played with fine effect by Madeline Pardee, claims almost as much of our attention as the more attractive role played by Ruth Roland.

A general summing up of the play would place it as a well-balanced one. It has all the properties of a drama, and also those of a spectacular melodrama. The burning of the temple, which has been cleverly presented, contributes the big spectacle of the production.

Scene from "Comrade John" (Pathe).

This five-part photodrama was made for the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., at the Balboa studios, California, and is set for release Oct. 29.

"The Yankee Girl"

Blanche Ring Appears in Spirited Adaptation of Popular Musical Comedy Produced by Oliver Morosco.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SELDOM does a musical comedy plot provide adequate material for a photoplay; but in "The Yankee Girl," done into a five-part picture by the Morosco Company, we find a pleasing exception. This production, presenting Blanche Ring in the role that she played so successfully on the stage, is genuinely entertaining on its own account and need not depend upon the prestige of a well remembered name. It is light romantic comedy, brightly acted in the most picturesque of Californian locations and consistently interesting in presenting a skilfully developed story. After the first reel, the least attractive of the five, the picture is a perpetual delight to the eye, with its views of the Catalina Islands of the historic Fernandez Sanchez ranch house, of the Hotel Huntington at Pasadena and of old buildings that date back a century.

Scene from "The Yankee Girl" (Morosco).

Miss Ring appears as Jessie Gordon, a resourceful young woman who takes an active hand in straightening out the difficulties arising over a copper concession in South America. Following the necessary exposition, in which we meet the various characters and are prepared for the squabble over the copper property, everybody moves to the Latin republic. The pace of the story quickens as Jessie takes command of the situation and fools the susceptible president of the republic, in league with the crowd that is determined to own the valuable concession. Morales holds her father prisoner and for a time the girl must depend entirely upon herself in outwitting the crafty South Americans. Suspense is worked up to a high pitch as the time of the expiration of the option approaches and the necessary money is not forthcoming. At the crucial moment, in true musical comedy fashion, the young United States consul out-maneuvers the plotters and the situation is saved.

Unaffected and pleasing in manner, Miss Ring scores in her performance of Jessie; Forrest Stanley, as Jack Lawrence, is quite the ideal matinee idol type; Harry Fisher, Jr., has the best comedy opportunities in the picture as the insipid Willie Fitzmaurice and Howard Davies is naturaly forceful in his playing of James Seavey.

"The Woman From the Sea"

Kalem Three-Reel Melodrama, with Jackie Saunders in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS three-reel offering under the Kalem brand and called by them "The Woman from the Sea," is fortunate in having Jackie Saunders in a role that is perfectly suited to her. She is not only young and pretty, but undeniably a good actress. The story is melodramatic, but has, with its melodramatic artificiality, a fresh combination of exciting incidents and holds markedly, except in that part in which the narrative goes back to unravel a story within a story—always a dangerous expedient. A convincing heroine, an exciting story and many pretty scenes are the assets of the picture and make it a worthwhile offering to the public. Direction that is either too hasty or not imaginative enough to make it at all times convincing in the small, foundation scenes, and the presence of scenes that are not at all needed and that drag while they are on—these are its weaknesses, but do not hamper it too much. I think that most people would be willing to pay again to see another picture that they know was going to be as good.

The "woman from the sea" is cast up unconscious on the English coast. Rescued by a baronet, she finds that she has forgotten her past history. The young hero falls in love with and marries her. He is intrusted with plans that a foreign government wants—it's presumably the Hungarian or Russian government. At an embassy ball she sees a foreigner and at once begins to remember. The foreigner is her husband. He threatens to tell if she doesn't give the papers (some of Miss Saunders' best acting comes in these scenes) and she consents. The hero's cousin, in the power of the foreigner, is to get the papers. He comes, steals the plans, but outside begins to repent. There's a struggle between him and the two foreigners, while the wife, inside, is telling her husband all. The result of the struggle is the death of the woman's foreign husband and the happy ending is an accomplished fact.

"Matrimony"

Five-Reel Triangle Kay-Bee by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thos. H. Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

RARE, and none the less delightful that it is rare, is pure high comedy, like "Matrimony." There was a time when it was like a Summer day with fleecy clouds in the sky as compared to the overcast menace of intense drama or the storms of melodrama. It was then, and is still more now, a decided relief. We all like it. "Matrimony" is a high-class domestic comedy, holding the audience fascinated by its humanness, now making us think, now turning our sober thoughts to keen amusement and not dull for a moment. Calf critics may depreciate its long and frequent subtitles, but calf critics imagine that there are arbitrary rules on that subject. The subtitles of "Matrimony" made a hit at the first showing in New York. They aroused spots of individual enthusiasm to the delectation of the audience in general, the story being a subtle and spicy battle of the sexes.

A subtle and difficult role fell to Julia Dean, a role exacting much that a charming actress hates to give, views of that unbeautiful side of married women who imagine they have done their complete duty in having one child and thereafter relapsing into idle and shiftless stupidity, no credit to their husbands, neither useful nor ornamental in a world that requires every human creature to be one or the other. Miss Dean gives a remarkable portrayal of such a woman, one emerging through high intelligence to a better expression of herself. The rest of the cast is fully up to the demands made on it, and the play will win.

World Film Five-Part Drama Gives Convincing Presentation of Interesting Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BARRY O'NEILL, formerly a director for Lubin, and Lawrence McCloskey, for a long time scenario editor for the same company, combined in producing this Shubert-World Film five-reel feature. Mr. O'Neill may be congratulated on the success of his first World Film picture. It presents a first rate story in an impressive manner; the action is swift and to the point and the characters are clearly drawn, with Frederick Lewis playing the role of a young author, who sees failure written across every sheet of manuscript, and Ethel Gray Terry cast as the girl who becomes his wife.

Much of the opening reel is devoted to showing the hardships of the young author, to whom the simplest of food is a luxury and even this he shares with a starving neighbor. It happens that the daughter of a wealthy stock broker has had an indiscreet love affair with a man who does not live to marry her, and a husband "in name only" being needed to save the young woman's reputation, Frambers is offered the position and $10,000 besides. He turns from writing unmarketable stories to making himself useful on the stock exchange. He also plays the part of a self-sacrificing husband without a murmur, until he believes that his wife is flirting a bit too obviously with other men. By this time he is able to buy his freedom; but he is called again to the stock exchange to save his father-in-law's fortune, and in the end, of course, he reaches an understanding with his wife, who comes to love him in all sincerity.

The love element, however, takes a secondary position in this picture, which is first of all an exciting melodrama. In the last two reels the stock exchange panic is developed with much skill to keep up the suspense. It is realistically staged and acted with spirit. Director O'Neill has contributed a valuable photoplay to the World Film program.

"The Long Chance"

A Broadway Universal Feature in Which Frank Keenan Gives a Capital Character Study.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ON the screen as on the stage, Frank Keenan is the ideal gambler of American western romance. He has the impressive bearing, the repose, the suggestion of an indomitable will that seem to belong to such characters, and his gift for subtle expression is exceptional. Audiences that see this six-part Broadway Universal Feature will be greatly impressed by Mr. Keenan's playing of Harley, and they will find a thoroughly interesting picture, for which Harvey Gates is largely responsible. From a story written by Peter B. Kyne, Mr. Gates constructed a scenario that is logical, clear and holds good all the way, which is the more of an accomplishment in that the original work did not appear to offer a plot of extraordinary possibilities. Director Edward Le Saint supplied a first rate production.

From beginning to end, Mr. Keenan is the center of attention. As the immaculate silk-hatted gambler, reputed to be the worst man in town, he wins sympathy, owing to a clever arrangement of scenes that emphasize likable qualities—his manly strength, his sense of justice and his consistent love for one woman. We see how Harley rebuffs the advances of a pretty singer in the town saloon, how surely he dominates the men in that place, and how unselfishly he sacrifices himself when the woman he loves prefers another. All of these things go to build up a character that inspires respect, with the result that "the worst man in town" becomes the hero of the photoplay.

Scene from "The Long Chance" (Universal).

The story covers a long period of years during which the woman that Harley loves dies, leaving an unprotected daughter. In the crude western town, where little is thought of a girl's reputation, the gambler becomes her protector and remains true to his charge to the end. The final scenes, closing with the death of Harley, are at once dramatic and appealing, as played by Mr. Keenan and a supporting company including Stella Razetto. The success of this production seems assured.

"Love's Old Sweet Song"

An Attractive Two-Reel Western for the Associated Film Sales Corporation Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JUST a simple story of the west has been used in the making of this production. But the story is a human one, and in its presentation on the screen it has been developed with spirit. Gertrude Bondhill and Ralph Gray play the leading roles, assisted by numerous excellent types of the western country, and one exceedingly villainous villain.

According to the story a young woman comes west to introduce cabaret style dancing. In her search for a place to live, a cottage for rent by the owner of "Bar X" ranch presents itself, and proves to be an important link in the shaping of the young woman's future. The owner of the ranch falls in love with his tenant, marries her, and later has an opportunity of proving his good sense and manliness when the villain from the east enters the scene and tries to destroy the woman's chance of happiness by dragging in tales, true though they may be, of her past life. The villain finds himself obliged to board the train for the east at the point of a revolver, and on quick notice.

Scene from "Love's Old Sweet Song" (Associated).

The sub-titles of this picture aid materially in stamping the main idea. For instance, the question put by the man to the woman, "Have you always been a good woman?" meets an appropriate answer in the form of a counter question, namely, "Have you always been a good man?" The cowboy "ketches the idea," realizes that his morals are quite as much open to criticism as the woman's, and together they move on into the future forgetting the past.

"The Green Cloak"

Kleine Subject—An Unusually Fine Detective Story, By Owen Davis and Henry K. Webster.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HOLDING interest largely through superior construction, "The Green Cloak," produced by George Kleine, illustrates as well as any story recently adapted from literature for the screen that motion-picture structural methods, when rightly understood and handled, are far superior to those of printed fiction in grasping and maintaing tense interest. Only some clever artisan like Conan Doyle, who has a hundred verbal tricks all his own, could utilize successfully such a plot as that of "The Green Cloak," and then he would not attain anything like the absorbing fascination of the pictured version. It holds through a mystification that is purely psychological. The novelist might say, "Strange that Paul Duncan should be suddenly terror-stricken at the sight of Wilkins!" That is merely a trick of speech to arouse curiosity. How much more powerful the effect when the young man's ghastly fear is there before our eyes!

Scene from "The Green Cloak" (Kleine-Edison).

From the outset, from the first significant symbol, there is gradually built up a sense of impending tragedy. The elaborate pains taken by statuesque Wilkins to secure a position in the household to be visited by Ruth McAllister start a line of suspicion that the man has a desperate mission to perform, and, when murder is done, his guilt is most delicately suggested. Suspense is not destroyed by any glimpse of his participation. With the exception of a few unimportant faults, "The Green Cloak" sets a standard in structure. Honors of psychological interpretation go to Irene Fenwick and Richie Ling, though the cast is generally and discriminately good.

"Dora Thorne"

Biograph Adapts Old English Novel Into Four-Part Drama of Sustained Interest and Strong Heart Appeal.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

TO THE younger generation Bertha M. Clay's "Dora Thorne" is little more than a name. As a novel it belongs to a school that has passed, but as material for a heart interest photoplay it is well worth the revival afforded in this four-part drama. The production in question may well become one of the most popular of the Biograph Company's adaptations of books that pleased readers a quarter of a century ago. "Dora Thorne" possesses a first-rate story based on human emotions that do not alter with changing fashions; there is enough action to warrant the use of four reels; the settings are in perfect taste and able actors were chosen to interpret the many characters met in this tale of English life.

Scene from "Dora Thorne" (Biograph).

The exposition in the first reel is clear. We see how Ronald, Lord Earle's son, comes to marry the lodge keeper's pretty daughter despite parental opposition. Then step by step we follow the young man's disillusionment and realize that the coming break is inevitable, for Dora is a simple girl, superficially educated and quite naturally she has little appreciation of her husband's artistic ambitions. As the story unfolds an audience sympathizes with both of these young people, the victims of an unfortunate marriage. The barriers of class may be ignored, but those of temperament are less easily cast aside.

After the rupture and Dora's return to her parents with her twin daughters, the story is carried into the second generation and once more we find the family torn by a tragic love affair. Beatrice, too, has promised to wed below her social station, but she jilts her sailor sweetheart and is thrown from a cliff into a lake. Much is made of the pathetic scenes preceding the reconciliation of Dora and her husband.

William Russell, Lionel Barrymore, Millicent Evans, Thomas Jefferson, Isabel Rea and Alan Hale are among the members of the Biograph stock company who contribute largely to the success of the picture.

West, Edison, Still Alive.

Since the death of a motion picture player of the same name, the family of William West, that veteran and able character Edison player, has been greatly embarrassed through acknowledging the condolences of many friends who confused the Edison actor with his namesake.

"THE GOD WITHIN" (Biograph).

This is, perhaps, the best one-reel drama that has been released in the series of Biograph re-issues, which means much when one takes into consideration what has gone before. It is notable for many things, but chiefly because of the sincerity with which this human story has been interpreted on the screen. The acting of the entire cast, which includes Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Claire McDowell, Charles H. Mailes, is flawless; the detail of the settings is perfect; the direction of D. W. Griffith is up to his usual standard, and with a story such as this and the usual Biograph photography, a perfect picture must result.

Scene from "The God Within" (Biograph).

The woman of the camp implores her lover to marry her, which he promises to do, but goes away to an adjoining camp. She becomes the target of the camp's jeers, and in time her child is born—dead. The doctor fears for her reason if she discovers that all her shame and anguish have been in vain. On the outskirts of the camp the trapper's wife, called the "Saint" by the boys of the camp, dies in giving birth to her child. For the sake of the baby and the woman the doctor persuades the father of the child to surrender it to the care of the woman. The woman's quarters being unfit surroundings for the child, the doctor insists that she go to the trapper's cabin, and he moves out to make room for her. The sight of his child drawing life from an alien breast has awakened the trapper's soul. And the touch of the baby's hand stirs the God within the woman. In the neighboring camp the woman's former lover also feels the God within him awakening and, bent on making such amends as he can, returns. It is then that the doctor suggests that she choose between them, and after a long hesitation the woman finally chooses the trapper.

This re-issue is released Friday, November 12, through the General service.

"RIGHT OFF THE BAT" GOING WELL.

"Right Off the Bat," the five-reel Arrow comedy drama in which Mike Donlin is featured, is making a hit all its own. The All Feature Booking Agency, of 71 West 23rd street, is handling this big baseball feature on its own account in New England and in New York state and disposing of state rights outside of that territory.

H. K. Brin and Bert M. Moran, two of the All Feature road men, have turned in more first run bookings on "Right Off the Bat" than any photoplay ever released independent of the big exchanges. Messrs. Brin and Moran, the former the manager of the All Feature Booking Agency, are booking "Right Off the Bat" on the same principle that a big road attraction plays. Its first appearance in a town is what corresponds to a "first run."

Massachusetts and Connecticut cities now have four prints of "Right Off the Bat." Maine and New Hampshire are keeping two others busy. There is a total of seven prints working every day in New England, a record of which Brin is very proud, and deservedly so. Apparently the women are just as enthusiastic over this play of love and the national game as the men baseball fans themselves.

From the middle west and Pacific Coast there are numerous inquiries regarding territorial rights on this Donlin feature. No fewer than six Chicago exchanges have telegraphed or sent representatives to New York to open negotiations for "Right Off the Bat" in the Mississippi River section.

SELIG VISUALIZES FEIST SONG.

"I'm Glad I Raised My Boy to be A Soldier," adapted by Gilson Willets, the famous author, from the Feist song hit, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be A Soldier," will be released on Monday, Dec. 13 as a Selig Red Seal play in four sensational acts.

Harry Mestayer, the notable stage star, will play the leading role, that of Jerry Warrington, who felt duty call and left monther and sweetheart to go on the firing line in defense of his country. Mr. Mestayer will be supported by Miss Eugenie Besserer and an all-star cast of Broadway favorites.

Gilson Willets, inspired by the popular song, has written a strong preachment on the horrors of war and graphically picturizes the sacrifices of wives, mothers and sweethearts when Mars, the God of War, holds sway.

Thousands of soldiers participate in the battlefield scenes, which are said to be most realistic. The slogan of "preparedness" now being discussed is also touched upon in a deft and yet vitally convincing manner.

"I'm Glad I Raised My Boy to be A Soldier" will be released through V-L-S-E, and it is freely predicted that for heart interest, appeal to patriotism and talented acting the Selig Red Seal production will be a most exceptional one.

The story is written in Mr. Willet's best vein and a special musical score is being prepared by a composer to be issued simultaneously with the photoplay. Words of the popular song are also utilized for the subtitles.

MEXICAN SCENES IN "THE WOMAN IN THE BOX."

A story of Mexico, during the days when intrigue and war alarms were threatening the precipitation of the present struggle in our sister country, is vividly told in the Vitagraph Feature production, "The Woman in the Box," now nearing completion under the direction of Harry Davenport. Typical Mexican street scenes showing the Peon in his home life and pursuits, scenes that picture high officials of the War Department and the men of authority, who represent the wealth of Mexico, are graphically pictured, introducing the inner workings of the secret service and showing the palace of society members, whose vast estates are the beauty spots of the land.

Scene from "The Woman in the Box (Vitagraph).

The action of the story revolves around Milton Asheton, of the United States Secret Service, and Senora Vallantino, the American wife of the Secretary of War for Mexico. "The Woman in the Box" is thoroughly Mexican and is of unusual interest because of its visualization of scenes in a country that has been prominent in the newspapers for the past four years. The players enacting the principal roles include Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, George Cooper and Peggy Blake.

"NEDRA," PATHE GOLD ROOSTER PLAY.

There are many of us who remember "Nedra," George Barr McCutcheon's well-known novel, and the various thrills that chased up and down our spines as we read of shipwreck, cannibal isles, savage battles, and romantic love. Pathe has had it put into a Gold Rooster Play, and it has been splendidly done by Edward Jose, who seems to get better with every picture he makes. Having a good story to start with, it is evident that he has spared neither effort nor expense to do it justice.

Scene from "Nedra" (Pathe).

Fine tropical backgrounds, found in the Bahamas, where he took a large company, the employment of large numbers of "extras," and, above all, a really exceptional cast in which George Probert is most capably supported by Fania Marinoff, Margaret Greene and Craufurd Kent, are some of the noticeable characteristics of this picture.

The story is that of two wealthy young Chicago people, a manly young chap and a charming girl, who decide to elope in order to get married quietly without fuss. They intend to go to Manila, where lives the girl's uncle, and pass themselves off on the steamship as brother and sister. In consequence various embarrassing situations arise as a result of which the man is thrown much into the company of a young English lady and his fiancee into that of a handsome young American who is also a fellow passenger. The steamship is wrecked and the Chicagoan and the English girl are cast up alone on an island peopled by savages. They are made the rulers of the tribe and as such aid it materially in defeating a hostile army. The inevitable happens and mutual love awakes. Their rescue and marriage end a most virile story. "Nedra" will be released November 12.

BERNHARDT IN "JEANNE DORE" (Universal).

Scene from "Jeanne Dore" (Universal).

One of the big productions of the current screen season is the appearance of Sarah Bernhardt in the picturization of "Jeanne Dore," adapted by Louis Mercanton from the play by Tristan Bernard, and which is being released by the Universal Film Manufacturing company.

This picture was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Mercanton, who was responsible for the two other pictures in which Madame Bernhardt has appeared, "Queen Elizabeth" and "Adrienne Lecouvreure."

One of the attractions of the new film is its perpetuation of the facial expression of this famous actress of the present age. Future generations will not be able to say of the histrionic artists of our present, as we have to say of the actors and actresses antecedent to ours, that we have no direct or persuasive record of the means by which they exerted so powerful an influence over their contemporaries. "Jeanne Dore" not only tells its own tale, but it enables us to make a study of everything except the voice that pertains to the method and the fascination of the Rachel of her age, from the elegant play of her features to her mode of gesture and pose.

"Jeanne Dore" was the play in which this great actress was appearing at the Sarah Bernhardt theater in Paris when she was compelled to undergo her recent operation. She considers this story her favorite of recent years, in that it offers her the fullest possible scope for the projection of her own individuality.

"THE END OF THE ROAD" (American).

Thrills cascade through "The End of the Road," the forthcoming American Mutual-master, in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison are featured. It is a story of the old South and Director Ricketts has staged his dramatic situations in matchless locations. There is a terrific storm in which an old mill harboring a band of "moonshiners" is struck by lightning and toppled over into a rushing mountain torrent. The lightning scenes were obtained under the most trying conditions, as the director would have nothing but nature's own flashes. As California is not accustomed to electrical storms, it was necessary to send a cameraman up from the Chicago studios of the American Film Co., Inc., to Wisconsin, where a terrific storm was raging.

Scene from "The End of the Road" (American).

He succeeded in obtaining the desired effects and these have been worked into the picture with a vividness that awes the spectator. The mill, demolished and wrecked, carries Harold Lockwood into the torrent with it. This scene is a remarkable one and the height of realism has been obtained. Mr. Lockwood's rescue of a young boy from the mountain waters is a thrilling instance, as the strength of the current is plainly shown by the force the actor uses to carry his supposedly unconscious burden to safety.

A fall from a horse is made, too, by Mr. Lockwood that one would imagine must result in injury to him. But it doesn't. However, he comes within an inch of possible fatal injury when, to get the real effect, he permits an overhanging limb to topple him off his horse, intsead of "taking" the fall and giving the impression of an accident.

Miss Allison's part enables her to bring into play her deft dramatic touches and Helene Rosson does some fine work and gains much sympathy in her role. Altogether, the picture is an unusually strong offering.

REAL AND MAKE-BELIEVE.

In taking the scenes in "Roses of Memory" (Edison) in which he and Bessie Learn are featured, Edward Earle, a cripple, falls unconscious in a struggle with a burglar. In falling his head struck a nail which had been left in the carpet and he received so severe a cut that a physician had to be called. A bit of nerve was his remaining motionless, after the accident, rather than spoil the "take." Later in the play, he goes over a cliff in an automobile and is supposed to suffer a bad cut on his face—which he supplied in a make-up so clever that those who heard of the accident were condoling him for his face "bruise" instead of the real one on his head.

George Phillips, formerly a member of the well remembered Frawley Stock Co., with his sixteen years' experience on the stage, has turned his exceptionally fine talents to Moving Pictures playing heavy leads for the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, one of the releases of the Associated Service.

THE LAW OF DUTY (Reliance).

"The Law of Duty," Reliance feature, like some other recent photoplays from the Griffith lot in Los Angeles, is the work of Francis Powers, both as author and director. Mr. Powers was formerly stage director for David Belasco.

It is a gripping story of love and adventure laid partly amid scenes of the present world war. Most of its central male characters are military men. There is a romance between Lieut. Von Lomberg, Teuton, and Valerie Du Bray, Frenchwoman. Von Lomberg is the son of a general in active service, while Valerie is the daughter of a great French scientist. Young Von Lomberg is at first a student in France, residing in the savant's house. At the outbreak of the war he becomes an aviator attached to a French aerial corps. His father, the elder Von Lomberg, comes as a conqueror to the part of France in which the son and the Du Brays are. There is thus a conflict between father and son. In the end, however, not to reveal entirely the plot, the strained relations are satisfactorily adjusted, and all are as happy as life on this mutable earth will permit.

Scene from "The Law of Duty" (Reliance).

The interior sets are especially rich and impressive. In one of these the Emperor, whose subject General Von Lomberg is, appears on his throne.

The production is very atmospheric throughout and shows the careful stage touch of the former director for David Belasco.

The costuming of so ambitious a photoplay made necessary the active employment of the large force at the Reliance studios. The results of the labors of the costuming department of the studio are many rich and eye-satisfying creations.

The cast is a strong one. Daisy Robinson, who as a child was little Mina with the eminent American actor, the late Joseph Jefferson, in "Rip Van Winkle," and who played the grown up Mina with Thomas Jefferson, Joseph's son, is Valerie Du Bray, the heroine. As such she acts with naturalness and charm and with a fine technique.

Frank Bennett is the hero, the younger Von Lomberg. He is manly, sincere, and satisfied the eye of the spectator, too. Joseph Singleton, another favorite with Reliance audiences, is General Von Lomberg. Edwin Harley, the noted character actor, contributes a fine portrait, as Hans Schact. Maxfield Stanley, Charles Mack and Miss Kathleen Aamold are other principals.

LOUISE RUTTER IN ARNOLD DALY'S PATHE PICTURES.

Louise Rutter, who is supporting Arnold Daly in Pathe's Ashton-Kirk series, was born in Baltimore, Md., and certainly the reputation for charm which Southern girls possess does not suffer at her hands. Her first engagement was in "The Bonnie Brier Bush," which was followed by others in "The College, Widow," "The Heir to the Hoorah," "The Man of the Hour," and "The Devil," with George Arliss. She first appeared with Mr. Daly in "The Sins of Society" and "Know Thyself." An engagement with Ethel Barrymore followed and then one with William Gillette. Recent plays in which she has appeared are "Passers By" and "A Rich Man's Son."

Miss Rutter is the leading woman in the "Ashton-Kirk" pictures which have elicited much favorable comment from the reviewers.

ATLAS COMPANY STAGES "THE BATTLE OF NOT YET."

The Atlas Comedy Company of the Associated Service, inspired by many of Henry Ford's views on war, have made a screaming comedy, "The Battle of Not Yet." For this production a steel submarine of the Ford type was built at a great cost, and it takes a prominent part throughout the action.

WORK RESUMED ON "BELLA DONNA."

Pauline Frederick Being Starred by Famous Players Under Direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

WORK on the picturization of Robert Hichens' celebrated novel and play, "Bella Donna," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred by the Famous Players Film Company, has been resumed under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. The progress of the adaptation of this great dramatic and literary success was cut short by the disastrous fire which destroyed the Twenty-sixth street studio of the concern on September 11, and it was not until this week that the work could be again taken in hand as both directors were immediately engrossed in the replacing of some of the lost scenes in "The White Pearl," which they had completed, with Marie Doro as the star, two weeks before the outbreak of the fire.

Pauline Frederick, Thomas Holding, Julian L'Estrange and several other well-known stage favorites were sent to St. Augustine, Fla., under the guidance of Messrs. Porter and Ford for the purpose of obtaining the scenes in the desert which form such an important part of the story. The players had returned to New York with these scenes just two days before the fire, and for several days it was feared that this portion of the film, which had been placed in the film vault, was destroyed. The opening of the vaule disclosed the fact that the views had been entirely saved from the flames. Now, after a month's delay, the work is being taken up again.

With enthusiasm aroused to the highest pitch by the wonderful reception accorded "Zaza," in which the same players appeared under the same directors, they have entered upon the task of placing "Bella Donna" before the motion picture public with the firm intention of eclipsing their artistic performance in the first-named feature. Seldom have critics and public been so unanimous in their acceptance of a motion picture as they were in their praises of "Zaza."

AL RAY WITH ASTOR COMPANY.

Al Ray, the young director, has left the Federal Film Company, and joined the producing staff of the Astor Film Corporation, which releases on the Pathe program. Mr. Ray produced all of the Federal comedies on the Associated program under the Federal brand, until he joined the Astor company at Rockville Center, Long Island, where they have their studios and laboratories. He will as usual produce only comedies, and has taken Harry Fischbeck, his former cameraman with the Federal Company, with him to the Astor organization.

"THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" (American).

An aeroplane falling through space, striking a treetop, turning and dropping nose foremost to the ground, is one of the spectacularly sensational scenes in the twenty-eighth chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky." The giant, man-made bird is seen to rise from the ground and ascend in a tremendous spiral, with the easy grace of the creature of the air it is made to imitate. Circling high above the ground the pilot is seen to discover something wrong. The machine swerves to one side, dropping slightly.

The man at the wheel realizes all too late the approaching disaster. The planes seem to have lost their organized energy, the machine topples, turns, and down to the ground it comes. The reason for the accident is written into the plot—the villain, played by William Russell, tampers with a bracing wire in the hope that John Powell, the aviator, might meet with a fatal accident and thus leave the coast clear for him to claim the rights and titles of the Stanley family and the possession of "The Diamond from the Sky." And this is only one thrilling scene of the many in this chapter.

"Scene from "The Diamond from the Sky" (American).

"GREATER LOVE" (Equitable).

William Courtenay's first appearance on the screen, in which Equitable is presenting the noted actor in "Greater Love," will be an experiment in the blending of noted motion picture artists and stage stars.

Mr. Courtenay, who appeared last year in "Under Cover," and who is starring at present in "Under Fire" at the Hudson theater, bears an enviable reputation as a protrayer of virile roles. His principal support in "Greater Love" will rest in two noted screen players, whose work during the past five years has stamped them as personalities of more than passing interest and who have created their own field, by reason of their attractiveness and histrionic ability, viz, Mary Charleson, late of Vitagraph and Lubin, and Arthur Ashley, who starred in the biggest features of Thanhouser, Metro and World Film.

Scene from "Greater Love" (Equitable).

Miss Charleson, who co-starred in Lubin's "The Road O' Strife" and before that in important Vitagraph features, will play the principal female role and Arthur Ashley will handle the most important role, next to that of Mr. Courtenay himself. The working of this blending of stage and screen talent, which will be under the directorial jurisdiction of John Ince, will be watched with keen anticipation. If the experiment is justifiable, Equitable will continue the policy of blending its casts.

"THE RIVER OF ROMANCE" (Essanay).

This is a strong play of the out-of-door type, with the rough and rugged characters found in the open. The scenes were taken at Starved Rock, Ill., one of the wildest and most picturesque spots in the country. The plot is intense, dealing with a young engineer's attempt to find a way for a railroad through an unmapped mountainous region and his battle with natives who looked on him with suspicion, taking him for a government officer. The engineer falls in love with a daughter of one of the mountaineers and incurs the enmity and jealousy of a rival. He is finally shot but only is wounded. The girl nurses him back to health and falls in love with him. She shows him the way through the mountains and he wins a great reward from the railway officials as well as the hand of the girl. John Lorenz, an Essanay leading man, takes the leading masculine role and Elizabeth Tinder the leading feminine role, that of the mountaineer girl. The play was produced in conjunction with the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald, Miss Tinder winning the prize contest. Four other young women of Birmingham took minor parts in the drama. The scenario was written by Morgan D. Jones and was the choice of several thousands submitted.

"AT BAY" HAS AN EXTRAORDINARY CAST.

George Fitzmaurice, who is producing George Scarborough's "At Bay" for Pathe, has been making use of some extraordinarily elaborate sets in his picture. The accompanying photograph illustrates a cabaret scene in which were a large number of persons and where an unusually deep set was used.

Fitzmaurice's cast, by the way, is one of the highest salaried, if not the highest, which has ever been used in a picture. Florence Reed is his leading woman, and she is supported by Frank Sheridan, Charles Waldron, Lyster Chambers and De Witt Jennings, not one of whom but is a real Broadway favorite. Excellent progress has been made on the picture, which will soon be completed and placed upon the Gold Rooster program.

HOBART BOSWORTH PLAYS THE RUFFIAN.

For the first time in his long and varied career before the motion picture camera Hobart Bosworth plays the part of a ruffian. He has pictured many types of western men, but he has never been known to side in with a bunch of gangsters, or to be the leader of a notorious gang. In fact, it has always been his lot to be pitted against such machinations, but in "Tainted Money" Mr. Bosworth is a sure-enough leader of bad men. And he does dirty political jobs and gets in jail for it—actually serves time—the same as all other bad men who do those petty little things before the camera, so it goes without saying that Hobart Bosworth is as bad a bad man as he is a good good man when he plays that part.

Hobart Bosworth in Ruffian Role.

In producing "Tainted Money," from George E. Hall's story, adapted to the screen by F. McGrew Willis and produced by Ulysses Davis, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has given filmdom another Bosworth masterpiece. Supporting Mr. Bosworth are E. Clark, J. Curtis, William Mong, Frank Newberg, W. Harris, Grace George and Jane Novak, whose excellent work in this picture prompted the Universal officials in choosing her for the leading lady role in "Graft," the new Universal serial.

FEATURE FILM CORPORATION TO MAKE BIG SERIES.

The Feature Film Corporation, releasing through the Pathe Exchange, will in the near future start work upon a series to be written by one of the best writers of the day. The series will be produced by Managing Director Edward Jose, whose various Gold Rooster Plays are winning for him a fine reputation. Geo. A. Smith, serial manager of the Feature Film Corporation, has left upon an extended trip which will cover all the big cities west of New York to arrange for the newspaper syndication of the stories. Arrangements for this series are now practically complete, and it is promised that it will represent the best of talent in authorship, cast and production.

KERRIGAN IN NEW O'ROURKE SUBJECTS.

J. Warren Kerrigan is going to appear in a new series of Terence O'Rourke pictures. Beginning November 22 and continuing for three weeks only Mr. Kerrigan will appear in a two reel picture each week of his greatest characterization, Terence O'Rourke, which will be released so as to follow immediately after the last episode of "The Broken Coin." It had been originally planned by the Universal to issue "Graft," the new Universal serial written by fifteen different prominent authors immediately following "The Broken Coin" but the Terence O'Rourke pictures will serve to kind of ease the strain on the followers of the popular Universal serial, and give them something of a different nature as a matter of diversity.

J. Warren Kerrigan in New Terence O'Rourke Series.

The first picture to be released under this plan, will be Louis Joseph Vance's great Egyptian novelty story, "The Palace of Dust."

SHIPLOAD OF ITALIAN RESERVISTS LEAVE RIO DE JANEIRO.

In some of the pictures sent recently from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to the Travel Series Department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who are distributing a series of South American Travel Pictures, there appears a great transport loaded with Reservists returning to their native country to fight.

The pictures are interesting, since they convey the fact that the great countries to the south are cosmopolitan.

Here are shown five thousand or more men filled with enthusiasm as the boat leaves the dock—and it is quite evident that they are either carried away by their patriotism or else do not agree with General Sherman in his idea of war.

"A BUTTERFLY ON THE WHEEL" (World).

There is a Court Room Scene in "A Butterfly on the Wheel," a forthcoming World Film Feature, in which Holbrook Blinn and Vivian Martin are appearing.

Director Maurice Tourneur, who is a stickler for microscopical accuracy of detail in his productions, was not averse to accepting the advice and criticisms of members of World Films' legal department when he came to stage this courtroom scene.

The result is that this part of the picture has an authoritative O.K. No pains are too great for World Film to take in order that their productions should be critic proof.

TRAVEL SERIES PROVE POPULAR WITH EXHIBITORS.

An unusual jump in the number of contracts being received by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for the exhibition of their travel pictures shows that the exhibitors everywhere are beginning to realize the advantages of, and are grasping every opportunity to capitalize on the publicity which is being dealt out to South America by the press of the country.

While the trade searchlight is on the great country to the South is the time to show South American pictures, and many exhibitors have lately seen the advisability of getting in on this exceptional series of travel pictures while the enthusiasm lasts.

E. & G. FILM SERVICE, HANDLING ASSOCIATED.

Monroe Isen, who has charge of the Associated program for New York, reports great success of the Associated. Since the E. & G. have signed up for the program, the business has more than doubled, and they find they are taxed to almost their limits in supplying the great demand of the New York exhibitors for the Associated Program, the service evidently having made a tremendous "hit" from the very start which they rightfully deserve. Mr. Wm. Weisfeld, vice-president of the E. & G., is so tickled with the new program that he has actually bought a new automobile and a green velour hat and that is going some for William, I tell you. If things go any better we hope to see William in a new suit.

STRONG CAST IN DAILY PICTURE.

Arnold Daly announces as the cast for his next Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The House of Fear," the following: Mr. Daly in the lead, supported by Sheldon Lewis, Ina Hammer (who has supported Maude Adams and Robert Edson), Martine Sabine (who was leading man with John Drew), William Bechtel and Charles Laite. This is a remarkably strong cast, and the picture under the direction of Mr. Daly and Ashley Miller should be an exceptionally good one. Like the others of the Arnold Daly series it is adapted from the "Ashton-Kirk" story written by John T. McIntyre.

HADDOCK'S DEPARTMENT STORE STUNT.

Rather a clever bit of work was recently done for the Gaumont Company by "Silent Bill" Haddock. This was the directing of a number of scenes in the big Bloomingdale store, New York, during business hours. These scenes were part of a forthcoming three-reel Gaumont release to be called "The Devil's Darling." Taking the scenes and handling the shoppers was difficult enough, but Mr. Haddock says the real finesse of the job was in getting permission to take the scenes at all. But Bill is a diplomat, as everybody knows.

"THE MUSKETEERS OF PIG ALLEY" (Biograph).

This remarkable Biograph picture of the underworld is notable for the detail with which it depicts the doings of the gangsters on the East Side of New York City. When it was first released a few years ago it created quite a sensation and will, without doubt, meet with the same success when re-issued.

Lillian Gish, the little lady of the tenements, is on her way to the sweatshop when she is accosted by "Snapper Kid," a gangster, but will have nothing to do with him. Returning home she finds that death has released her mother from a long suffering illness. Time passes, and a girl friend takes her to the gangster's ball where she is introduced to the leader of a rival gang who tries to dope her. "Snapper Kid" sees the transaction as he comes into the room, and seizing the glass from which the little lady is about to drink, arouses the wrath of the rival gangster. This precipitates the long impending gang war which culminates in a raid.

Lillian Gish, Walter Miller, Elmer Booth, Lionel Barrymore, Jack Dillon, Alfred Paget, Robert Harron, Harry Carey and W. C. Robinson are included in the cast directed by D. W. Griffith.

Scene from "The Musketeers of Pig Alley" (Biograph).

This one-reel Biograph reissue will be released Friday, November 5 on the General Film program.

Producer Thomas Santschi will shortly begin work on a Selig special two-reel story entitled "The Private Banker," which depicts the life and habits of an Italian colony in a large city. The plot abounds in thrilling situations.

Graham Baker, cartoonist and former newspaper man, has written a series of motion picture scenarios for the Vitagraph Company, that introduces a new comedy character to the screen in "Itsky, the Inventor." The pictures already listed for release include "The Patent Alarm Clock," "The Pest Vamooser," "The Cold Feet Getaway," "The Screech Killer," and "The Patent Food Conveyor," and are said to be the funniest comedies yet seen on the screen.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

THE NAME of the Charles K. Harris feature picture, "School Bells," has been changed to "Hearts of Men." It will be released through the World Film Corporation on November 22.

Robert Whitworth, Leo Delaney, J. S. Gordon, Arline Pretty and Arthur Cozine are at Milford, Pa., taking scenes in the Emerald Valley for "Wasted Lives," being produced for the Vitagraph company under the direction of Theodore Marston.

Balboa's new enclosed studio is rapidly nearing completion. At a considerable expense, the Horkheimer Brothers have fitted up a model enclosure where picture photography can continue uninterruptedly no matter what the condition of the weather. Owing to the contracts which Balboa has, it must produce a certain quota of pictures each week. For this reason facilities for indoor work are necessary during the winter months.

"Hughie of the Circus," a feature comedy, now being produced by Wally Van, will introduce Flora Finch Hughie Mack, Nitra Frazer, Donald MacBride and Harry Fisher, representative Vitagraph comedians as the principal fun-makers.

George Spink, composer of many successful vaudeville acts, among which are "The Country Club" and "At the Waldorf" has been added to the Scenario Department at Lubin's. Mr. Spink will write both comedy and dramatic subjects, basing some upon his more successful song lyrics.

Prior to the releasing of "Neal of the Navy" which Balboa has been filming for Pathe, all of the Long Beach studio's output was given out under the "Balboa" brand. But with this big serial photoplay production, the Horkheimer Brothers have added to their list the "Panama" brand. It will be kept before the public, in the future, as several big pieces already being made will be put out by Balboa under the Panama brand.

A five-part drama, entitled "One Night," from an original script by Marguerite Bertsch, features Robert Edeson, Harry Morey, Eulalie Jensen and Belle Bruce, and will be a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature produced under the direction of Harry Davenport.

A large number of carpenters, scenic artists and property men are hard at work preparing numerous and heavy sets for the forthcoming Selig Red Seal Play, "Thy Neighbor's Wife." Colin Campbell, dean of the Selig producing staff, has the production in charge and it will be necessary to utilize an ocean liner to add atmosphere to the story. Tyrone Power, Kathlyn Williams and other Selig stars will appear in this play.

Arthur James, director of publicity for the Metro Pictures Corporation, who has been ill for a week, is recuperating in a week-end vacation and motor trip around the Wading River section of Long Island.

* * *

An all-star cast that includes Charles Richman, James Morrison, Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Anders Randolf, Charles Wellesly and Paul Kelly are enacting the final scenes in Cyrus Townsend Brady's Navy drama, "Colton, U. S. N." The players under the direction of Paul Scardon are now at Annapolis, Md., where they will take scenes showing the Naval Academy.

Charles R. Keilty has been engaged as purchasing agent for the Mirror Films, Incorporated, of which Clifford B. Harmon is president. Mr. Keilty came to the Mirror Films from the Philadelphia Inquirer on which paper he was the New England representative for the advertising department. Mr. Keilty was for some time purchasing agent for the Boston Traveler.

One of the releases on the Equitable program in December will be a production made by the Horkheimer Brothers at their Long Beach studio with Lillian Lorraine, the erstwhile beauty sensation of Broadway, in the lead. Word to that effect has been received from H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa who is now in the East, on business. Henry King directed the picture, which is in five reels, and played opposite Miss Lorraine.

* * *

"The Two Edged Sword," a four-part drama, which was written for the Vitagraph company by Lulu Case Russell and Eugene V. Brewster, is nearing completion under the direction of George D. Baker. Edith Storey, Evart Overton, Josephine Earle, Robert Gaillard, Marion Henry and Nellie Anderson are the players prominent in its enactment.

* * *

For the Lasky production of "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," under the direction of Frank Reicher, the whole stage at the studio has been transformed into a gambling saloon. An exact replica of the Famous Casino at Monte Carlo.

One of the largest and most ferocious Bengal tigers in captivity will be used in the Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animal drama in one reel, "The Sacred Tiger of Agra."

Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Van Dyke Brooke are at work on the Vitagraph production of "A Question of Right or Wrong," a two-part drama, written and being produced by Mr. Brooke.

The Socialist Party of Cliffside, N. J., secured as the feature of a recent entertainment the Bosworth, Inc., film, "In the Valley of the Moon," Jack London's subject starring Myrtle Stedman.

Lillian Walker, Wilfrid North, Donald Hall, William Dunn and Edward Elkas have begun work on a three-part drama for the Vitagraph company entitled, "Mrs. Dane's Danger," by Charles L. Gaskill. Besides playing the leading male character, Mr. North will also direct the picture.

Ann Neilsen, the wife of Guy Coombs, who has been starred in several Kalem pictures, is playing a prominent role in the supporting cast now making "Barbara Freitchie," the five part feature production now being made at the Popular Plays and Players studio for release on the Metro program. Little Mary Miles Minter is starred in the new production and Guy Coombs is being featured with her.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are producing a one-part Vitagraph comedy, "The Home Cure," of which Dr. Drew is the author and producing director.

An entire English village is being constructed by the Quality Pictures Corporation in Hollywood, Cal., for "Rosemary," a five-part picturization of the play by the same name, in which Marguerite Snow will be starred and Paul Gilmore will be featured. The picture will be an early release on the regular Metro program.

Theodore Marston has begun work on the second series of episodes of the Vitagraph production of "The Patriot," in which the action is brought up to the present day. The first two parts depict scenes in the Eighteenth Century. The final scene in part two, in which the characters appear in the costumes of the period, dissolves into the first scene of part three which brings the action into the Twentieth Century. The way it was handled by Director Marston, makes it appear as if a lapse of two centuries intervenes. The cast selected by Mr. Marston, for the modern characters, include Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, Leo Delaney, Frank Currier, Robert Gaillard, Donald Hall, Lillian Burns and Audrey Berry.

Trade News of the Week

Gathered by Our Own Correspondents

FRANK H. VINE TO MANAGE BOSTON EXCHANGE.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ENGLAND exhibitors will be pleased to hear that Frank H. Vine has returned to the World Film as the manager of their Boston office. He succeeds Stanley W. Hand, who has been in charge of the office since July.

Mr. Hand joined the World forces in April after he had resigned as manager of the New York office of the South Bend Watch Company. He was assigned to the Boston office of the film concern as a salesman. His success in the film business was assuer when he was appointed the manager of the office. He will now leave for New York City to assume an executive position in the home office of the World.

Mr. Vine needs no introduction to the exhibitors of this territory. He has had several years' experience in the film business, having been assistant manager of the Boston office of the General Film Company, manager of the old Eclectic office and later manager of the World office, from which he resigned last May.

R. E. Shanahan Visits Boston.

R. E. Shanahan, representative of the Knickerbocker Star Features, was a Boston visitor during the past week. He was the guest of Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the New England office of the General Film, and was present at the runoff, when two Vim comedies, products of his concern, were exhibited. They were "The Midnight Prowlers" and "A Pair of Birds." The comedies met with the approval of a large number of New England exhibitors who were in attendance.

Grafton Corbett Goes to Albany.

Grafton Corbett, who has been connected with the General Film for the past year as a roadman travelling from the New England office, has been transferred to the Albany branch of that concern. Mr. Corbett made many friends among the New England exhibitors during his connection with the General.

Society Takes Up Pictures.

Boston society has adopted the moving picture for the winter and at many dancing parties the screen will be much in evidence. The new entertainment is not designed to detract from the dancing, but to be an adjunct to it. The innovation was tried out mildly at some of the big country houses during the summer and proved to be a great success. Many of the ballrooms and picture galleries are preparing for this novel entertainment.

Empire Sold.

John Sullivan, proprietor of the Majestic, at Pittsfield, Mass., has purchased the Empire, at North Adams, from Benjamin Taylor. John Ernest, formerly manager of the Empire, at Holyoke, Mass., is managing the new enterprise for Mr. Sillivan.

Holyoke Strand Opens Dec. 1.

Alexander Cameron will open the new Strand, at Holyoke, Mass., on December 1. This is the most modern and up-to-date house in that city and will have a seating capacity of 1,200 persons. The policy of the house is yet to be decided.

Daniel Horgan, roadman for the New England office of the Pathe exchange, has returned from a successful trip through Western Massachusetts. He reports that exhibitors find business on the boom and that the new Gold Rooster features are meeting with great favor.

The official German war pictures, made by the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, which are being booked through the New England United Film Service, will be the attraction at the Globe theater, Pawtucket, R. I., for three days beginning Nov. 1. These pictures played to capacity houses at the Empire theater, Lewiston, Me., during the past week.

Ankatelle Joins United.

William J. Ankatelle, one of the oldest film salesmen in the New England territory, has joined the sales forces of the United Film Service of New England. He has been connected with the film business for the past eight years, having been associated with Warners' Features and the United Booking offices. He will take care of the United program in the Vermont and New Hampshire territory.

Watching Two Carmens.

New England exhibitors are watching with great interest the results of two producing companies for the best honors for the picturization of the opera "Carmen." The Fox Corporation is on deck with its production, featuring Theda Bara, while the Lasky Company has the photoplay in which Geraldine Farrar is the stellar attraction. It is expected that the Lasky production will play the Park theater, Boston, during the week beginning Nov. 1, while Manager Harry F. Campbell, of the Boston office of the Fox Film will book his masterpiece into the Modern theater, a few yards distant from the Park, during the same week.

Visitors in Boston.

Colonel Henry Kincaid and H. C. Wardwell, owner and manager respectively of the Kincaid theater, Quincy, Mass., were visitors to New York City during the past week. They visited many of the studios and saw the pictures in the making.

PORTLAND, MAINE, BANS "HYPOCRITES."

Exhibitor Abrams, of Casco Theater, Gives Out Statement—Thinks Picture Will Be Shown Later.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of The Moving Picture World.

RESENTATION of "Hypocrites" at the Casco theater, Portland, Me., was canceled at the suggestion of the mayor following several days of discussion regarding the morality of the production, this week. When it was first to be shown, Monday, it was examined by a committee consisting of Corporation Counsel Connelan, the chief of police and county attorney, who were unanimous in the opinion that the picture contained absolutely nothing which could by any stretch of imagination be considered as offensive or likely to harm the morals of the public. The picture was thrown on the screen Tuesday afternoon and evening, during which time 1,200 people were turned away. Then the ban was placed on the picture by the city authorities.

Hiram Abrams, who controls the theater, has made the following public statement:

"In compliance with the suggestion of the mayor I directed that 'Hypocrites' be not shown at the Casco theater yesterday. I propose to write to the mayor suggesting the institution by me of proceedings which will result in a judicial determination of the question as to whether or not the photoplay is immoral, and I do not believe there will be the slightest objection on his part to the plan I shall propose.

"I suppose the mayor will give to the press a copy of the communication I shall address to him. Should the court decision be in favor of the picture, sustaining my contention that it is not immoral, as I feel absolutely confident that it will be in view of decisions of boards of censors in other cities and the opinion of the National Board of Censorship, the photoplay will be returned to the Casco theater for public exhibition."

EASTPORT'S IMPERIAL PROSPERS.

The Imperial theater, which opened up in Eastport last week, under the direction of Manager William Tooze, is showing to capacity houses every night. Eastport can boast in this theater what many larger Maine cities and towns cannot—it has a daily change of program. Even in Bangor, the largest city in Eastern Maine, the theaters change their programs only thrice a week. By changing daily Mr. Tooze often secures the same patrons night after night.

JOHN BUCK OPENS SHOW AT ORLAND.

Buck's auditorium has just been started as a moving picture house in the town of Orland by Mr. Buck. There is a show two nights a week. Mr. Buck has a good site, about three miles from Bucksport, and his show is very welcome in a thriving community. There are many lakes with fine fishing in his neighborhood and in summer his show will be doubly popular.

Pine Tree Personals—Business Notes—Hits.

Charles M. Stern, exchange manager of the Universal Film Company, of Bangor, on his return from a trip through the Western Maine cities and towns reports that generally speaking business is fine and all the exhibitors are looking forward to a good winter's business.

Proprietor Stithan of the Bijou theater Pittsfield, Me., was a visitor to Bangor this week and reports that he has taken on the Broadway Universal features.

H. Moore, proprietor of the Opera House in Princeton, was in the city during the week.

For a moving picture house in Maine to show a return engagement of a long serial has been up to the present time unknown. It remained for Proprietor Ponsant of the Bijou theater at Waterville to make this record, by engaging for a second time "The Trey of Hearts."

A Bangor man who paid a visit to Wallace Gould's new Pastime theater in Brunswick during the past week reports that Mr. Gould has a handsome house, replacing the Pastime burned in the fire last winter.

S. A. Anderson of Harrington, proprietor of the moving picture show in the town hall, is using Universal service.

PENNSYLVANIA CENSORS BAN "CLOSING NET."

Manager G. H. Atwood, of the local Pathe exchange, on Vine street, recently received a notice from the Pennsylvania Board of Censors stating that their picture, entitled "The Closing Net," could not be exhibited in this State. It also declared that it was not merely a question of cuts or eliminations, but that the film was disapproved of as a whole. According to the opinion of the censors the picture is an exact contradiction of Standard numbers 6 and 10 of the motion picture rules based on the reorganization of the State Board of Censors.

An appeal has been made to Mr. Breitinger and an answer is being waited upon before further actions are taken in the matter. This is merely another instance where censorship is shown as fast becoming an intolerable menace in local moving picture circles.

N. CIOTOLA OPENS NEW HOUSE.

N. Ciotola has recently opened a new motion picture theater in Hazelton, Pa. This theater is of the most modern constructure and is thoroughly equipped with the latest moving picture apparatus, much of the equipment having been purchased from the Calehuff Supply Company of Philadelphia. Mr. Ciotola declares that he will exhibit nothing but the best of pictures and is of the opinion that his new location will prove a success.

NEW CHANGE MAKER.

It has been announced at the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, that they have taken the agency for the Caille change-making machine. This latest invention is of a most wonderful nature and should certainly prove to be of great advantage to the exhibitor. It reduces mistakes in currency to a minimum and also saves time and labor. For instance if change for twenty-five cents is desired all the operator has to do is to press that key and the desired change is on hand.

MAX WALDMAN'S WOODBINE, N. J., HOUSE.

Max Waldman enters upon the scene of the moving picture industry by opening a new theater in Woodbine, N. J. This house will exhibit nothing but first class pictures and should prove to be a great attraction to the Jersey moving picture fans.

NEW $1,000,000 COMPANY.

The Pennsylvania Theater Company has recently been chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware to establish and conduct places of amusement and to act as promoters and managers of all forms of entertainment. The new concern has been incorporated for $1,000,000, F. R. Hansell of Philadelphia, George H. B. Martin, S. C. Seymour of Camden, N. J., being the principal stockholders.

UNION MADE MISTAKE.

John Ivazian, manager of the Pastime, South Broad and Dye streets, Trenton, N. J., was recently forced to call the police in order to disperse some young men who were marching up and down in front of his theater, bearing banners stating that the theater was employing a non-union operator for its picture machines. The situation was satisfactorily cleared up, however, when it was discovered that the entire affair was a misunderstanding on the part of the banner bearers.

The Logan Construction Company has been awarded the contract for alterations upon the moving picture theater located at 4817-19 North Broad street. L. A. Magazyn, owner of the property, declared that improvements to the theater will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000 and that the theater will be of a first class nature when finished.

Clayton House Progress

At Wilmington, Delaware, Work on Transforming the Clayton House into a Fin Up-to-Date Picture Theater Is Progressing—Some Details of Construction—Expects to Open the First of the Year.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

WORK upon the transforming of the Clayton House, Wilmington, Del., into a first class theater is progressing in rapid strides. Situated at Fifth and King streets in the heart of the business section of the city and within easy access to many lines of transportation, the theater should prove to be a complete success. The lobby of the theater will extend up over two stories. At the entrance several runways will rise at either side of the pit, the runway taking the place of steps leading to the balcony, the main entrance to both the pit and the balcony being direct from the entrance. This type of construction follows closely the plans embodied in the construction of several of the most modern New York amusement houses. The ceiling of the theater will be of artistic design—the lighting effects following the latest invention of theater construction. A paneled ceiling with center lights and inverted side lighting will be constructed immediately following the placing of the roof. A large entrance is to be made from Fifth street, and a balcony fire-escape will extend from the front of the building coming down from the rear on King street at the corner of Fifth.

It is expected that the theater will be opened to the public on or about the first of the year, the contractors declaring that they will be finished by the middle of December. When completed this house will represent one of the most beautiful theaters in this section of the country and will be the home of first class vaudeville and moving pictures.

"CARMEN" CHANGES ADJUSTED.

As a result of an amicable adjustment of the differences between the Famous Players Exchange, Inc., and the State Board of Censors, the photoplay production of the opera, "Carmen," to which objections had been made by the board, was recently presented at the Stanley theater in slightly modified form. The discussion concerning the cutting of the film was settled without the necessity of a decision on the part of the court and the suit brought by the moving picture interests was withdrawn.

EXHIBITORS' MUTUAL FILM CO.

The Exhibitors Mutual Film corporation was recently chartered in Delaware to conduct a general film business. The company has been incorporated for $800,000, Martin E. Smith, T. Morley Smith and Enoch B. Sadler, all of Wilmington, Del., being the principal incorporators.

EXHIBITORS' BALL DECEMBER 8.

At a recent meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, Wednesday, December 8, was temporarily selected as the date upon which the annual moving picture ball will be held. Advance preliminaries were prepared and committees named to carry out the work. Other matters of importance to the exhibitors were discussed and the meeting lasted for some time, it being the first important gathering of exhibitors since the summer season.

HIGH PRICES AND A FULL HOUSE AT THE LOCUST.

The Locust theater, Fifty-second and Locust streets, is to the people of West Philadelphia a "without which not" of the section itself. While only having been in existence a little more than a year, this theater has become known throughout the entire city and is easily the pride of West Philadelphians living in the vicinity of the home of feature films.

Brilliantly illuminated at night, it presents one of the prettiest sights for miles around and the music from the pipe organ is listened to by thousands each evening. When first opened to the public many remarks could be heard stating that the prices charged were entirely too high and that the people of West Philadelphia would never patronize a moving picture theater charging such an admission, folks thus committing themselves being of the opinion that such prices were only for theaters in the heart of the city. However, the quality of the shows began to assert itself and it was not very long before those who had at first complained were registered among the steady patrons of the house.

Messrs. Felt and Felt are to be congratulated on the manner in which they conduct their theater and success is sure to be theirs as long as they continue to present high-class run of pictures.

A NEW AMUSEMENT BUILDING.

The property, 2844-46-48 Frankford avenue, known as the Empire Palace theater and airdome, has recently been sold by Karp & London to New York interests, who were represented in the transaction by Joseph W. M. Simpson, a real estate broker. It is planned to build a new theater, dance hall and roof garden upon the spot. The new building will include three store fronts on Frankford avenue. Plans are already being prepared.

Picture House Sold.

The brick motion picture theater at 1809 to 1819 South Seventh street, the northeast corner of Seventh and McClellan streets, has been conveyed to Messrs. Wolf & Lanin by Arthur J. Berlin for a nominal consideration and a mortgage of $20,000. The property occupies a lot 50 feet 3 inches by 99 feet 9 inches and is assessed at $30,000.

John L. Robinson a Visitor.

John L. Robinson, proprietor of the well known moving picture theater located in Littleton, Pa., was numbered among the recent visitors to this city and spent much of his time visiting various supply houses in this vicinity.

Segall to Reopen the Apollo.

The Apollo theater, located at Fifty-second and Stiles streets, West Philadelphia, formerly operated by Samuel T. Wheeler, but which has been closed for the past six or seven months, has been leased to Charles Segall, who at the present time operates three other moving picture theaters in this city.

The Iris Theater Sold.

The Iris theater, 3146 Kensington avenue, seating capacity of 1,600, was recently sold to J. M. Kennedy for a sum said to border on $75,000. The theater will be operated by the Kensington Amusement company owners of the Lafayette theater situated at 2914 Kensington avenue.

W. E. Smith in Town.

William E. Smith, assistant manager of the Power company, 90 Gold street, New York city, was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and spent much time visiting the different supply houses who handle the Power product. Mr. Smith is elated by the new Power 6B machine and predicts great things for this machine in the future.

Ban on "Country Store"

Washington, D. C., Police Forbid as Violation of Lottery Law All Chance Schemes Such as "Country Store" and the Like Run by Theaters—Exhibitors of City Pleased—Counted Them as Not Good Business.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Police Department has placed a ban on so-called "country stores" and all other similar stunts where prizes of any kind are given by virtue of the purchase of tickets to moving picture theaters or other places of amusement.

Before issuing the necessary instructions, Major Raymond Pullman, superintendent of police, held a lengthy conference with Assistant United States Attorney Ralph Given, who had made a careful study of the proposition, heard numerous complaints, and come to the conclusion that in the operation of these gift enterprises the lottery law was being violated. United States Attorney Jesse Laskey went over the question with Mr. Given and agreed with his interpretation of the law.

The order issued by Major Pullman and sent to the captains of all the police precincts of the city reads as follows:

"Notify all theaters, motion picture parks, and other places in your precinct running so-called 'Country Stores,' or any device or plan where prizes of any kind are given by virtue of the purchase of tickets, that if anything along this line is done tonight the police will take action.

"The captains will see that no country store enterprises of this sort are allowed to operate after this warning which should be given this afternoon."

This order was dated October 19. Needless to say it came as a pleasant surprise to a majority of the exhibitors of this city who have never viewed with favor the offering of merchandise inducements to patrons of motion picture theaters.

In speaking of the matter, Fred Stein, a well known exhibitor of the northeast section, stated: "I am indeed glad that the police department has taken this step. I think it will work to the betterment of the business as a whole as such competition as is brought about by 'country stores' is not, in a way, legitimate. It does not tend to uplift the business to any extent and I think those who have been resorting to such measures will secure equally good returns by sticking to a showing of pictures only.

"Some years ago, while contemplating entering into the motion picture business, I read quite a lengthy article in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD wherein some very good advice was given to exhibitors. The article declared against the mingling of vaudeville and gift enterprises with the motion picture business and urged that a greater effort be made to secure better pictures instead of resorting to other means to secure trade. I resolved to follow that advice and during the five years I have been in business I have never allowed anything of this kind in my place."

Joseph Morgan, of the Princess theatre, declared that the order was a good one in that it would put all exhibitors on the same level with respect to competition. "It means," he stated, "that exhibitors must depend for their existence upon the quality of the pictures shown, the music, general appearance of the theater, the courtesy of the management and its employes, and the other features which enter into the proper conduct of a motion picture theater."

Mrs. Cora C. Brame, who operates a string of theaters in Washington, stated that she had never been in favor of "country stores." "Upon the advice of others," she said, "I tried out this plan some time ago when the motion picture business itself was dull. The 'country stores' were in operation at this house for two weeks when I found that the benefits obtained were of a temporary character only. They usually bring a very undesirable audience, not the type of people who will come back and become steady patrons of the house, but those who go from theater to theater in the effort to obtain something for nothing. These schemes do not help at all to build up a permanent business and I soon discontinued them."

EXHIBITOR W. O. SNYDER DIES.

It was with extreme regret that the exhibitors of Washington last week learned of the death of William O. Snyder, who for the past two years has been operating the Mid-City theater on Seventh street, northwest. Mr. Snyder had been a sufferer for many months from Bright's disease but it was but a few days before he passed away on October 19 that his condition became very serious.

He was born fifty-five years ago in Hagerstown, Md. About two years ago he became a member of the Goldsmith-Snyder company which remodeled the premises and commenced the operation of the Mid-City. Some months later he secured control and since that time he has conducted the theater with the aid of his wife, Mrs. Lucie J. Snyder. He was one of the most popular exhibitors of the city for by his pleasing personality he made a host of friends. He was respected by all and had the good will of exchangemen and exhibitors alike. He was a thorough business man, of a type greatly desired in the business. He was ever careful to more than meet the other fellow half way. He is survived by his widow, to whom the sympathy of all the Washington exhibitors is being extended.

Funeral was from his late residence at 1223 Seventh street, northwest.

PROGRAM OF DRAMA LEAGUE.

The Washington Center of the Drama League of America has announced that it will hold its meetings on the first and third Thursday evenings of each month at the Public Library. A program of work for the winter has already been prepared, in part as follows: November 4, "How to See a Play;" November 18, "Standards and Purposes of the Playgoing Committee;" December 16, "The New School of Producers;" January 6, "Theater Architecture;" January 20, "The Little Theaters;" February 16, "Moving Pictures."

OSBORN, PATHE MAN.

Mr. Osborn entered the film business as bookkeeper and cashier for the General Film Co., in this city, on May 15, 1912. Later, in the fall of the same year, when S. J. Mayer assumed the management of the exchange, he became his assistant, and retained that position during 1913-1914 under C. W. Sawin, and again under Mr. Mayer until May, 1914, when he assisted C. L. Worthington in opening the Washington office of the Eclectic. Less than six months later, when Mr. Worthington severed his connection with the company, Mr. Osborn was placed in charge and when Pathe absorbed the exchange he was continued as manager.

H. M. Osborn.

A great deal of the popularity of this young manager is due to a willingness to always meet the other fellow half way and to stick to the truth. It is conceded around town that "if Osborn said it, it's so." He is not the type of man who would resort to mean tricks to enlarge his business or enable him to squeeze out an additional dollar by baiting one exhibitor against another. He fights square and the business of his employers has prospered and is continuing to grow until now, it is said by outsiders, that the volume of business done by the Washington office in the field is exceeded by that of but one company.

Mr. Osborn's office in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building is attractively fitted out, but even with this additional space it looks as though he would soon again find himself cramped for room. Mr. Osborn states that at the present time his bookings on "Neal of the Navy" are twice as heavy as they were on "Elaine" at the same period, and he feels that this serial will prove to be equally as popular as the latter—the million dollar feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne, new bride and groom, announce that they will be at home to their friends after November 1 at 1829 California street, Northwest.

CAPITAL CITY NOTES.

The plans for the erection of another moving picture theater at 404-406 North Howard street have about been completed by Sparklin & Childs, architects, and bids for the construction work will be asked for within a very short time. The building will be erected for the Howard Amusement company.

The Baltimore Hippodrome, at Baltimore and Eutaw streets, built by Pearce & Scheck and operated by them since its opening about a year ago, has passed into the hands of Marcus Loew, of New York. Harry Woods is the manager of the house.

A private exhibition of "Damaged Goods," a seven reel production of the Mutual American company, featuring Richard Bennett and his co-workers who starred in the original production, was given last week at the New theater.

Francis R. Batchelor has purchased the Govans moving picture theater on York road from Bertha Quinn. S. J. Harmon was the attorney and the Hampton Realty company the brokers. The title was examined and guaranteed by the Title Guarantee and Trust company.

D. Merrick Scott has been appointed recital organist at the new Parkway theater.

It is reported that the Twilight Amusement company has sold to William Nagosanosky a property on the south side of Columbia avenue, near Elbow lane, 44 by 190 feet. The company recently purchased this property with a view to erecting a motion picture theater thereon.

BALTIMORE, MD., NOTES.

Where Theaters May Not Be Operated.

In all probability one or more resolutions will be introduced in the City Council this fall to define where motion picture theaters may and may not be operated. It is said that many complaints are being received at City Hall against the location of motion picture theaters in certain of the residential sections and lately a flood of ordinances authorizing the establishments of such houses in different parts of the city have poured in upon the City Council.

President John F. O'Meara, of the First Branch, stated that he would confer at an early date with City Solicitor Field with a view to drafting an ordinance outlining the districts in which motion picture theaters will not be permitted. He remarked that there are many sections of the city in which these theaters are objectionable and that in his opinion the city should afford the property owners of such sections ample protection.

The City Council has granted a large number of privileges to prospective operators of motion picture theaters, but not all of these have been taken advantage of. With this in mind, Councilman Tolson, of the Sixteenth Ward, is contemplating the introduction of an ordinance directing that moving picture privileges be automatically revoked unless made use of within six months after the passage of the ordinance.

New Cortez Theater.

The Cortez Amusement company last week invited proposals on the construction of a motion picture theater to be erected at Monument street and Patterson Park avenue after plans prepared by W. R. Russell, architect. The building is to be one story in height, 35 feet wide and 125 deep. The company asked for bids from E. Eyring & Son, Cowan Building company, West Construction company, R. B. Mason, Adam Kratz, and Burns & Russell.

A $6,000 moving picture theater will be built at 271 Conklin avenue, Binghamton, N. Y.

ELMIRA'S NEW THEATER SUCCEEDS.

J. W. Schwartzwalder, manager, is highly gratified with the patronage which the new Regent picture theater, Elmira, is receiving. The house seats 1,000 and is roomy and homelike. Simple lines and decorations are a feature. The Regent is an acquisition for Elmira. Its entrance on Water street is very attractive and the several exits on the other streets make it easy to disperse a large audience. George B. Carter is organist. He is well known to Elmirans, having been organist at the Park Church in that city.

SABBATHS IN MT. MORRIS.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees of Mt. Morris, N. Y., a petition was presented asking that an ordinance be passed forbidding moving picture shows on Sunday. The petition was adopted at a meeting of citizens. The trustees decided that they were without power to prohibit the showing of pictures on Sunday. A resolution was adopted by the board to the effect that all places of amusement opening on Sunday must discontinue the practice, unless a special license is secured from the board.

CARTHAGE CASINO SOLD.

Giles Kinne of Watertown, N. Y., has purchased the interests of W. C. Allen of Antwerp in the Casino, in the Courts block, Carthage, N. Y., and the new proprietor has already taken possession of the house. Mr. Allen opened the Casino a year ago, and until a few days ago it was managed by his son, Robert. The Casino has given the public a good variety of pictures and has been well patronized. Mr. Allen also conducts the Casino theater at Antwerp.

FISHER THEATER, SENECA FALLS, OPENS.

Jackson's Orchestra of Penn Yan, N. Y., recently played at the opening of the new Fisher theater in Seneca Falls, N. Y. This house is under the management of Charles Sisson of Penn Yan. Mr. Sisson was formerly the manager of the Sampson theater of that place. The new theater was erected by Fred C. Fisher at a cost of about $40,000. The front of the building contains two large stores and the theater entrance. Several suites of offices occupy the front of the second floor. The theater proper is absolutely fireproof with concrete floors and all kinds of modern theater equipment and seats 960 persons.

ONTARIO RECALLS PERMISSION TO SHOW FIGHT FILMS.

Special to Moving Picture World from W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent.

AFTER giving official permit for the showing of the Johnson-Willard fight pictures for one whole day, Oct. 20, in Massey Music Hall, the largest auditorium in Toronto, the Ontario Government suddenly decided to cancel the privilege on account of pressure from several ministerial associations. This action was decided upon on October 17, three days before the scheduled date of the exhibition, and after considerable advertising had been done by the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association, under whose auspices the pictures were to have been shown. It had been intended to turn the proceeds over to the Canadian soldiers.

The government's action has resulted in the disbandment of the Sportsmen's organization, which had raised tens of thousands of dollars to provide comforts for the soldiers, many of whom have signed a protest against the interference of the clergy. The head of the association was Mr. R. H. Greer, the County Crown Attorney, who corresponds to a district attorney in the United States. He is arranging to hold a public mass meeting in Massey Music Hall, which holds 4,800 people, to draw up a protest against the government's change of mind, although he is a government officer.

CAN CANADA SUPPORT BIG FILM OF HER OWN.

Griffith Production Makes Canadians Wish Their History Pictured.

Following a successful run of three weeks at the best theater in Toronto, the Royal Alexandra, of "The Birth of a Nation," a number of Toronto citizens started an agitation for the filming of a big Canadian feature along similar lines. Several of the Toronto dailies took up the question and urged, editorially, that Canadian history was comprehensive enough to supply material for a wonderful film.

"When only a few prints of any good feature are brought into Canada, it is easy to figure that the Canadian field is not large enough to support a big proposition," declared D. Cooper, of the Cooper Film exchange, 96 Bay street, Toronto.

METRO FILMS INTRODUCED IN CANADA.

Metro pictures were introduced in two Canadian cities this week under the direction of Metro Pictures, Limited, the new Metro Canadian company. The first runs will be at the Imperial, in Montreal, one of the largest of the local houses, while Metro's "The Right of Way," a Canadian romance by Sir Gilbert Parker, was shown at the Strand theater, Toronto.

The Metro Canadian company was organized by Herbert Lubin, formerly head of the Allied Features Inc., and he has become managing director. Canadians interested in the new organization include Paul Galibert, leather manufacturer and steamship owner; A. N. Brodeur, fish merchant; Arthur Ecrement, an ex-member of Parliament, and D. H. Brown, president and general manager of the Prudential Trust Company of Canada. H. M. Brown, son of D. H. Brown, is secretary-treasurer of the Metro Pictures Limited.

Simultaneously with the Metro introductions came the announcement that two popular contests would be conducted for prizes aggregating $5,000. Three-fifths of this sum is to go for awards in a "popular opinion contest" in which theater patrons will be asked to be the critics of the first twenty-six Metro pictures to be shown in Canada. Two thousand dollars is offered in a Patriotic Scenario Contest, participants in which are required to write scenarios for recruiting films. The winning play is to be produced in Canada under the direction of Mr. Edwin Bower Hesser.

Arrangements have been made to show Metro pictures in three different Montreal theaters.

"NATION" FILM ON CIRCUIT.

After a record run of three weeks in Toronto, the Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," is to be shown in the large theaters of the small circuit in Ontario. The cities include Hamilton, London, Ottawa, Brantford, etc.

The first of the big film plays, "Quo Vadis," is to be brought back to Hamilton for a return engagement at 25 and 15-cent prices. Kleine-Edison's "Julius Caesar" is to be seen here shortly, it is reported.

QUEBEC NOTES.

"Eternal City" Banned on Religious Grounds.

The motion picture play adapted from Hall Caine's "Eternal City" has been banned from reproduction in the picture houses of the Province of Quebec, according to an announcement made by Sheriff Lemieux, chairman of the Provincial Board of Moving Picture Censors. The picture was refused approbation on religious grounds. The population of this province is made up mainly of devout French-Canadians.

Recruiting With Pictures.

Moving picture outfits are being used in recruiting campaigns in Canada. The Citizen's Recruiting Association recently sent out an automobile loaded with a projection machine, a set of military films, an operator and a lecturer. Meetings are to be held in small places throughout the Province. The lecturer is J. M. State, who has had considerable experience in this work, having toured the British Isles with a moving picture projector in emigration campaigns.

Cooper Film Branch for Montreal.

A branch of the Cooper Film Exchange of Toronto is to be opened in Montreal on November 1.

OHIO WANTS SUNDAY OPENING.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE movement to obtain Sunday closing of moving picture theaters is attaining support which may entitle it to the importance of state-wide campaign. The Milford incident, recently reported, indicates the stand taken by municipal authorities on the question in a few instances.

In view of the fact that the sentiment all over Ohio, at least, appears to be in favor of permitting moving picture exhibitions on Sunday, there is not much likelihood of any change in the practice, which is in line with modern ideas of permitting proper and harmless amusements on Sunday as well as on other days of the week. In this connection, a Cincinnati exhibiter commenting on the small-town movement for Sunday closing, recently recalled Irvin Cobb's explanation of the difference between the rational continental Sunday, a day of recreation, and the Puritan American Sabbath. "We keep it and they spend it," said Cobb, which conveys a volume in an epigram.

EXHIBITOR LLEWELLYN APPEALS TO COURT.

A clash between Harry E. Llewellyn, a moving picture exhibitor of Youngstown, O., and the operators' union in that city, has reached the courts and the case is being watched with considerable interest by exhibitors all over the State. Mr. Llewellyn, in order to save his house from the consequences of a threatened boycott, came into court asking an injunction to restrain the Youngstown branch of the operators' union from taking steps to injure his business, naming as defendant Fred C. Whetstone, president of the union, and members of the executive committee. He stated that action detrimental to his business was threatened by reason of the discharge of an operator.

ORPHEUM RUNNING RESTAURANT AGAIN.

A feature at the Orpheum theater, the absence of which during the summer season was a decided deprivation to many of the patrons of the big hill-top house, is the re-establishment of the restaurant and winter garden. Formerly the restaurant was kept open during the summer, and patrons of the roof garden theater could order whatever they liked, but this was not done this summer, additional seating capacity being secured by removing the tables. The big winter garden has now been opened, however, offering in the same building with the theater an opportunity for first-class restaurant service, with a good cabaret performance, and entitling the Orpheum to a leading place among the really metropolitan moving-picture theaters of the country.

Gerschanek with Highland Film.

S. Gerschanek, well known educator, librarian and scenario author, has now been affiliated with the Highland Film Corporation as their scenario editor and researcher.

Batavia's New Paramount Opens.

The opening of the new Paramount theater at Batavia, O., not far from Cincinnati, was marked last week by the exhibition of "The Making of Bobby Burnitt," a well-known Paramount release. Mary Pickford in "Such a Little Queen" followed, large houses attending all performances. The house bids fair to make a real success, as it has a considerable rural territory to draw upon.

New Pathe Phonograph Company.

The Southern Pathe Phonograph Company, incorporated at Cincinnati with a capital stock of $50,000, marks the entrance in that field of the musical end of the Pathe organization. Harry C. and George E. Meek, Louis W. Sporlein and Martin Haman are the incorporators.

Abrams Buys Back the Odean at Canton.

A. H. Abrams, one of the pioneer moving picture exhibitors of Canton, O., has repurchased the Odean theater in that city, of which he was the owner ten years ago, presenting his first moving picture exhibitions there. The house was sold by Mr. Abrams and his partner, E. E. Bender in May, 1914, to R. C. Steuve. Mr. Abrams will make some improvements in the house, including a new lobby and new interior decorations, and is also planning the construction of a handsome new suburban house in Cherry avenue, to seat between 500 and 600 people, at a cost of $20,000. Mr. Steuve has purchased the Orpheum, following his sale of the Odeon.

ST. LOUIS TRADE LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

American to be Triangle Theater.

THE American theater, at 7th and Market streets, will become the Triangle theater on Nov. 7. Many alterations and decorations are being made, as well as a change in the stage settings, which are being modernized and beautified to harmonize with the character of the features to be shown. David E. Russell will be in charge. Mr. Russell has had much experience in the amusement line, having at one time been manager of the Imperial theater, Forest Park Highlands and Delmar Garden, now the American.

Tea Room at King's.

The management of the King's theater, Kingshighway near Delmar avenue, has added a Japanese tea room on the mezzanine floor of the theater, at which women are invited to entertain their friends with tea while looking at the pictures, or have little club and society meetings, and at the Saturday matinees tea is served to the lady patrons. The King's shows only big multiple reel features, changing twice a week. Harry Koplar is manager.

Maplewood Lyric Opens.

The Maplewood Lyric, a new theater at 7320 Manchester avenue, opened for business Oct. 17 with a Metro feature, a comedy and two acts of vaudeville.

Globe-Democrat Comes Out Strong for Moving Pictures.

The Globe-Democrat, the leading morning daily of the middle west, and one of the most influential newspapers in the country, has taken up motion pictures in all its phases. Besides running a special photoplay page on Sunday (edited by ye correspondent) there is a column or more two or three times a week in the daily paper devoted entirely to motion picture activities (also by correspondent), as well as regular reviews of the big features showing at the larger photoplay houses; and a policy has been inaugurated to give each theater that advertises in its columns a notice and review if the copy is handed in to the paper. In the last few weeks the Globe-Democrat has instituted a local film weekly, which has met with instantaneous success and is exhibited at almost every theater in town.

American Movie-Ad Company.

A moving picture advertising company has been formed in St. Louis, with Dell Mead and W. G. Holmes at the head of the company, which will be known as the American Movie-Ad Company, with offices in the Times building. Two experienced camera men are making the films, which consist of comic, cartoon, and more elaborate pictures, as those showing fashions or florists' displays.

Local Film for Charity.

The Society Folk Film, which is nameless, so as to allow for prizes to be awarded for a title is under way, and will be ready for exhibition on Nov. 19 and 20 at the Victoria theater, Delmar at Grand, for the benefit of the Protestant Orphans' Home. There will be 116 scenes in the film, some of them taken in well known localities in and about the city. The film is purely a charitable affair, such as society folk in general are wont to do in order to have an excuse for amusing themselves while dispensing their charities.

Remodeled Monroe Theater.

The Monroe theater, Chippewa and California avenues, which has been undergoing alterations in the shape of a new concrete floor, and was enlarged so as to accommodate five hundred more patrons than formerly, opened again on Oct. 17 with a big program of features and comedy. Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, manager, is one of the most successful women exhibitors in St. Louis. Besides owning the Monroe, she operates during the summer a large airdome just around the corner from the theater.

Mutual Branch at Cairo, Ill.

Fred Keller, manager of the Mutual exchange in St. Louis, has established a branch at Cairo, Ill., with Leonard Brown in charge. The business the new branch has done in the short time it has been running has caused much agreeable surprise and gratification to the home office. Mr. Brown is daily adding new theaters to the list using his service.

Floyd Lewis Making Bookings.

Floyd Lewis, local manager of the Triangle Film, has been on a trip through Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, and has placed several advance orders for Triangle features in many of the most important cities he visited. Mr. Lewis says that big features are as popular in the small towns of the country as they are in large cities, and the advance orders for films that are coming in are very satisfactory.

Censorship Opposed by Exhibitors.

The St. Louis Exhibitors' Association have made arrangements to appear at an open hearing of a committee of the Board of Aldermen in opposition to a bill to create a board of censorship of moving pictures in St. Louis. The bill was recently introduced by Alderman Barney L. Schwartz, and authorizes the Director of Public Welfare to refuse a license to exhibit any picture that is immoral, obscene or attempts to hold up for ridicule or contempt any race, religious sect or nationality. The bill provides that an appeal may be taken from the decision of the welfare director to the Mayor, whose ruling will be final.

New Manchester Theater.

A new motion picture house called the Manchester theater has been opened at 5378 Old Manchester Road, under the management of Fred Hubert, who was formerly connected with the La Salle theater.

Walnut Manager Arrested

Louisville Picture Manager Called to Book by City Building Inspector for Overcrowding While "Damaged Goods" Was on View—Pleaded Not Guilty—Trouble Came Between Shows.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Walnut theater, Joseph L. Steurle, manager, has been called to account by the City Building Inspector's office for alleged overcrowding of the theater during the exhibition of the film, "Damaged Goods." The case is set for trial in the Ordinance Court and the pleas of the defendant will be "not guilty."

W. J. O'Sullivan, the building inspector, declared: "In my opinion the violation was a flagrant one, so overcrowded did the management of the theater allow the theater to become. Although the danger was very great the complainants against the theater seemed worried because they could not see the screen on account of the way the theater was packed. No one can construe the warrant in the light of advertising since it charges overcrowding."

Walter Lapp, attorney for Mr. Steurle and the theater, stated that any crowding complained of occurred between the shows, and was due more to people changing places than anything else. Even at 20 cents the rush on the box office for this film was so great that the management was virtually powerless to prevent the crush. "It would take a battalion of police to keep them out and the city declines to furnish them," Mr. Lapp said.

This is the first time that such a warrant has ever been issued in Louisville against a moving picture house management and the other exhibitors of the city are watching for developments with interest. The exhibitors are aware of the objectionable feature of changing of houses between showings, but seem to be unable to avoid crowding in the rear of the house and in the lobbies at such times. It may be that a ruling which will assist them in eliminating crowding of this kind will result from the Walnut case. Meanwhile the Walnut management has arranged for a return of the same film, which had a three-day showing and will show it again, doubtless to packed houses.

COMMUNITY SERVICE SUPPLIES CHILDREN'S FILMS.

First showing of the children's pictures this year at the Mary Anderson theater brought out a large houseful. After the showing of "Aladdin's Lamp," films for these children's pictures will be supplied by the Community Service, Boston, Warren Dunham Foster, of the Youth's Companion staff, superintendent. This arrangement will relieve Lee S. Goldberg, manager, of the necessity of giving special showings for the local board and the pictures will come specially censored, while the financial end will be handled by the house, Mr. Goldberg attending to leases, bookings, etc., and making the customary charges for admission. The local Board of Censors will be continued, however, as it will have other work to do in connection with suggesting pictures for schools, etc.

EASTERN FILM MAKING HARRIS' KENTUCKY PICTURE.

Credo Harris, of Louisville, author of the novel, "Toby," is in central Kentucky with representatives of the Eastern Film company, where he is advising with the management regarding picturization of his story. The film will be staged amid the scenes which Mr. Harris utilized in his book, which is going through transformation into a motion picture scenario. It is stated that the production of the film will be expedited and that it is hoped to offer it to Louisville and other cities before the end of November. Mr. Harris has completed another novel, "Sunlight Patch," which is now in the hands of his publishers and will shortly be off the press. This also is laid in Kentucky.

LOUISVILLE MUSICIANS.

Musicians who operate the instruments in use at the Louisville moving picture theaters are getting more and more attention. Henry F. Parks, at the Alamo, is attracting notice from musical critics locally and in the East for his work on organ and piano. Dr. B. F. Moser, of the Louisville Anzeiger, recently gave Mr. Parks a complimentary notice and this was copied in the Eastern journals. At the Alamo Mr. Parks operates the Wurlitzer instrument most effectively. Edward Ritter, a Louisville organist, has been engaged by the Mary Anderson as assistant to Prof. Edgar Barbee, the organist. Mr. Ritter will relieve him at the morning shows and also during the runs of super-films. Both men are going over the score of "Carmen" which will be played during the running here of the Fox Film of that opera. Much interest has been taken in the announcement in view of the fact that the Boston Opera company recently presented "Carmen" in Louisville.

New Kentucky Theaters—Hits—Business Note—Personals.

"The German Side of the War" pictures have been shown at the Masonic theater in Louisville to appreciative houses. These are the Weigle pictures and were run during the week of October 24.

A return engagement of "The Wonderful Adventure," with William Farnum in the leading role, has been announced by the Mary Anderson theater in response to many requests for its return.

Mary Pickford in "The Girl of Yesterday" at the Majestic during the recent run of that film, filled the house constantly, and the management has arranged for a return showing.

"Dress Up" week was made the occasion in Louisville for taking of a few motion pictures which will be thrown on the screens of local theaters to show people how Louisville looks in good new clothes. The "dress up" movement was in connection with the general movement among the retail clothing houses of the country and Louisville merchants participated generally. The Louisville Conventions and Publicity League arranged for the pictures.

The Ben Ali theater in Lexington will be continued as an exclusive motion picture house this winter and the Berryman Realty company, which owns both it and the Lexington opera house, will remodel the latter for legitimate attractions. The cost will be $5,000.

Management of the Princess theater at Henderson, Ky., is completing extensive improvements in that house, including installation of a new Minusa Cines gold fiber screen. The heating system has been overhauled and rearranged, ventilation provided for, a new piano added and a velvet Brussels carpet placed in the foyer. Pictures on the bill for the near future include "The Hypocrites" and "The Eternal City."

"You see them first in Mount Sterling," declared the management of the Tab theater in that Kentucky city in a recent reader in the local paper. The Tabb theater is installing a gallery of the moving picture stars, handsomely framed and displayed in the lobby.

Gardner & Usher at Mayfield, Ky., have let a contract to a local builder, X. B. Wickersham, for a new theater, 43x123, to cost $10,000.

A. Mitchell, of Russellville, Ky., and W. B. Aspley, Franklin, will open a new house in Glasgow, Ky., to add to the chain that they operate in Kentucky and Tennessee. Mr. Aspley is manager of the Franklin house. Extensive remodeling will be undertaken and prices will be 5 and 10 cents.

Heavrin & Barrass have completed installation of the apparatus in their new theater at Hartford, Ky., and have held a successful opening.

At the request of the Civic League of Paris, Ky., the Columbia theater management has begun showing children's pictures on Saturdays.

Sloan & Miller at Albany, Ky., have installed a 12-horse power gasoline engine to operate the dynamo and furnish other power for their Dixie theater.

"A liberal attendance of the best people" patronized the showing of the much discussed film, "The Hypocrites," at the Alhambra theater in Richmond, Ky., during its recent showing there.

ADE WANTS INDIANA FILM.

Proposes Big Picture as Celebration of State's Centennial Next Year.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

NEXT year is centennial year for the State of Indiana and it seems likely now that the celebration in the main is to be a picture celebration, and the man who furnished the idea was none other than George Ade, who writes fables, plays, scenarios and checks for the purchase of a new farm every now and then.

George saw "The Birth of a Nation" and his suggestion is "The Birth of a State" and the idea is taking hold of the commission that has the celebration in charge. Here is what he said:

"An intelligent and an interprising director could stage and produce it. I dare say that the students at the various colleges would volunteer their services in the preparation of scenes requiring crowd effects, or the suggestion of an army. In the southern half of the state there are many old buildings and picturesque locations for the earlier scenes and incidents, many of which would be of real dramatic value. If you could arrange to get two hours of pictures showing in sequence, the significant events of the last 100 years, it would excite tremendous interest in every part of the state."

The Indiana Historical Commission, of which Robert Lieber, of the General Film Indianapolis exchange, is a member, has taken to the idea like a duck to water. It was put up to Mr. Lieber as a practical picture man, and he approved it.

AN INDIANAPOLIS MEMORY.

Among the first in Indianapolis, the picture exhibitors like to tell of the experience of C. L. Sutherland, a shoe salesman, who came to Indianapolis in July, 1906, and with a stuttering, flickering machine, put on a show throwing the pictures against a canvas tacked on a wall. Sutherland, like every pioneer, was a man of faith. He couldn't get folks to visit his show. He called it the Bijou. He used to go through the department stores passing out tickets. Some of them were used and some were thrown away. It was nearly a year before he began to get enough admission to pay the $5 a week rental and other expenses. He died four years ago worth $60,000 which he made in the Bijou and two other theaters.

PLANS BANQUET FOR ROTHAPFEL.

M. M. Miller, manager of the Mutual Film Indianapolis office, is planning to entertain S. L. Rothapfel, formerly manager of the Strand theater in New York, and the new managing director of the Rialto theater, when he comes to Indianapolis on November 20 in his tour of the larger cities of the country before assuming his new position. Mr. Miller plans to give a banquet at the Claypool Hotel for

Mr. Rothapfel at which all of the exchange men of Indiana will be invited.

Only Features in This Town.

Only feature photoplays are being shown now in Ladoga, Ind., Hugh Rapp, proprietor of the Family, having recently changed to features. J. E. Mangus, manager of the opera house, has been running features for some time.

Indiana Exhibitors—New Houses—Changes—Business Notes.

The Auburn, Ind., Y. M. C. A., has installed a moving picture machine. Comedies and travalogues will be shown.

Moving picture shows are being given every Wednesday and Saturday night in the Hull & McNeelan Hall at Holton, Ind.

Stoddard and Wallace recently opened a house at Rockville, Ind., at which feature photoplays are being shown exclusively.

Robert Hortes, proprietor of the Star theater, at Coal Bluff, Ind., reopened his theater October 23. Mr. Hortes was compelled to close a short time ago because of the large number of cases of diphtheria in Coal Bluff.

L. O. Kelleu sold out the Lyric theater, Greencastle, Ind., to C. F. Halderman, who is redecorating and is giving shows every day instead of twice a week.

Ben Van Horsum, proprietor of the Savoy, Terre Haute, Ind., has bought the Crescent. He is running features at both houses.

Messrs. Heavrin and Barrass, Hartford, Ky., will open October 23. The house is well equipped to show pictures in first class style, special attention being paid to lighting, to the screen and to the machine and booth.

The Pastime, Maysville, Ky., is to be sold.

Charles F. Woods sold the Star theater, Princeton, Ind., to Gene W. Barrett, of Lawrenceville, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett will move to Princeton at once.

The Knights of Pythias, Lebanon, Tenn., have leased the Lyric theater and will operate it for their charity fund.

Anna McIntyre is suing the Starland theater, Michigan City, Ind., for $1,000 damages, charging that she is a sufferer from nervous headaches as a result of a Starland billboard falling upon her, as a result, she says, of the board not being properly anchored to the building.

Wilson Brothers are having a new front put on the Felter theater at South Whitley, Ind.

Mrs. Julia Remington has personally assumed management of the Victoria, Lafayette, Ind., and her son Stanford Remington, who has been managing the house, will go to Kankakee, Ill., to manage the Gaiety.

Frank Straughn, proprietor of the Lyric, Jasonville, Ind., is moving his equipment to Rosedale, where he will open a house November 1.

Fred Mater, one of the proprietors of the Gem, Crawfordsville, Ind., has taken over the Theatorium in Crawfordsville. The latter house was owned and operated by A. S. Miller, the pioneer in the moving picture business in Crawfordsville. Mater says that he will make a number of improvements to the house and will continue to run the same high class program that marked the policy of Mr. Miller.

The Colonial, formerly known as the Logan, after being closed for a week or more for repairs, opened to a good sized crowd. Messrs. Dickson Brothers, the new owners, gave away carnations to the women at the opening. The work of remodeling will continue.

G. G. Swaim, proprietor of the New Union theater, Indianapolis, says that the union operators who are picketing his place, charging that he does not employ union labor, are unfair. The operator employed at his house, he says, has been a member of the union some time.

The Anderson, Ind., exhibitors, not all of them, nor a majority, either, gave one night's gross receipts to the Anderson Y. M. C. A. The Y. M. C. A. is in the midst of a building campaign.

Interesting New Theater

Memphis Suburb's New Theater, the Strand, to Be Run in Connection with a Roof Garden for Dances and Meetings—To Be Amusement Center of Community—James S. Lanier Is Owner and Frank Trimble the Manager.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Strand theater has just been opened by James S. Lanier in Memphis, Tenn., in connection with his drug store and roof garden at Bellevue and Linden avenues. This is a new suburban development in Memphis, and the Strand, which is under the management of Frank R. Trimble, is stated to be the only suburban house in the city showing first run reels.

Mr. Lanier, who is proprietor of one of the most successful drug stores in the city, from his suburban location giving service by motor, motorcycle and bicycle deliveries to all parts of the city, has just completed his new building which contains his drug store, the Strand theater and the roof garden auditorium.

The roof garden will be used for dances, neighborhood meetings, etc., the theater for nightly and matinee picture shows and the store will continue the business done at a location opposite the new building. Mr. Lanier is one of the prominent business men of Memphis and is a former director of the Business Men's Club of the city. On the opening night the public was invited to inspect the whole plant and souvenirs were distributed to all comers.

ALMA MARTIN AT THE QUEEN.

The Queen theater at Knoxville has concluded a showing to capacity houses of a joint attraction, the film, "The Spenders" and Miss Alma Martin, female lead in the picture who appeared in person before the people who attended. Miss Martin is a Knoxville girl and has been spending the better part of the summer at her home in that city. She was due to return to New York but was persuaded by friends to remain until the running of the picture in which she figures so prominently. The Queen theater management made much of her appearance in person and in this Pathe master production.

"NATION" FILM AT KNOXVILLE.

Staub's theater, Knoxville, for three days beginning October 11, showed the "Birth of a Nation" film to filled houses, matinee and night. Prices for the exhibition were $1 for the first seven rows of the orchestra circle, $2 for the next seven and $1 for the remainder. The mezzanine floor was sold at $1.50, the family circle at $1 for the first three rows and 75 cents for the remainder and the gallery at 50 cents. Matinee prices were half these, except that the whole family circle sold at 50 cents.

FOR NEW NASHVILLE THEATER.

Contracts for building of the new theater which the Sixth Avenue Property company will build at Nashville, Tenn., have been let by the company to Foster & Creighton, building contractors of the same city. This will be a combined theater and office building, and will have dimensions of 50x150 feet. It is to cost $65,000. Plans provide for strictly fireproof construction of steel and concrete, with concrete floors and composition roof. Steam heat will be provided and the heating contract amounts to $6,000. Marr & Holman, of Nashville, are the architects.

OVOCA OFFICERS CHOSEN.

Organization of the Ovoca Motion Picture Corporation, incorporation of which with $100,000 capital was lately noted, has been completed. Harry F. Green has been elected president and general manager; W. H. Wassman, vice-president; W. H. Hooser, treasurer; A. P. Foster, secretary. The company will install a plant for manufacture of films and equip for their production in the Casino at Glendale Park, Nashville.

CONSERVATIVE ON SUNDAY OPENING.

Chattanooga is taking special interest in probabilities in the way of motion pictures in connection with church services. The city is considerably divided about the use or presentation of motion pictures on Sunday and is rather conservative about innovations. It is expected that other towns will be first to try the plan.

G. N. SHOREY SAW ATLANTA FIRE.

George N. Shorey, manager of the Queen theater in Knoxville, who has returned to the city, was in Atlanta during the fire which resulted in the death of three girls and destruction of several thousand feet of motion picture film. Mr. Shorey said that nobody seemed to realize there were people in the building until it was too late to save the lives of the girls.

CHATTANOOGA'S ALCAZAR HAS SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

The Alcazar theater has begun the program of weekly pictures for school children provided for at the instance of the Woman's Club of Chattanooga, and for which that club is standing sponsor. The first picture of the series was the "Wizard of Oz," which was much advertised previously to the showing.

FILMS OF CHATTANOOGA FAIR.

Preparations are being made by the management of the Chattanooga district fair which will be held at Warner Park during the week of November 2-6, to have motion pictures of the crowds and of the exhibits taken. Officials of the fair have begun negotiations with weekly pictorial news concerns to make arrangements for these pictures. One of the items being cited as a recommendation is that it will be possible to include manoeuvers of the Eleventh Cavalry, U. S. A., which is stationed at Chattanooga and which will participate in the fair.

MANAGER SUES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Attachment processes on the Bijou theater, Chattanooga, have been served by local court officials in connection with the suit of Fred S. Shepherd, who recently announced that he had resigned from the position of manager of the theater. The action is directed against the Chatt-Nash company, owners of the theater, and asks $2,000 for alleged breaches of contract he claims to have had with the company. It is understood in Chattanooga that the Chatt-Nash company is controlled by Stair & Havlin, of New York, from whom John C. Twinam recently purchased it. The plaintiff stated that he had a contract for the 1915-16 season and that he was dismissed in violation of the contract, while an agreement he had made to buy the property was also violated to his loss of $1,000 in spite of his option.

HITS AT THE CHEAPER HOUSES.

The five-cent theaters of Nashville have been showing exceptionally good bills of late and have been playing to good houses. "The Unwilling Thief," "Youth," "The Girl and Her Trust," "Broncho Billy Sheepman," "Suppressed Evidence," "The Tiger Slayer," "Lillian's Husband," "The Dragon's Claw" and "Neal of the Navy" have been among the pictures which have helped to increase the box office receipts.

"Damaged Goods" Suit

Detroit Injunction Given to American Film Company Against Persons Advertising a Picture Under Title of "Damaged Goods"—The Grand Circus Entertaining Big Crowds with the Real "Damaged Goods."

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE following news item explains itself: "Injunction given the American Film Manufacturing Company against the Bell Film Exchange, Peter Smith building, and D. Munsten and Jonas Rosen, for exhibiting or causing to be exhibited a three-reel feature entitled 'Victim of Sin,' which had been shown at the Royale theater, Detroit, using large lithographs with the words 'Damaged Goods.' This was considered a gross infringement upon the original and copyrighted production of 'Damaged Goods,' which right is owned and copyrighted by the American Film Manufacturing Company, and which is now being shown at the Grand Circus theater, Detroit.

"The case was brought by Messrs. Warren, Cady, Ladd & Hill, of Detroit, who were assisted by James P. Dryer, of Chicago, attorney representing the American Film Manufacturing Company. The case was heard before Judge Hosmer on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 20, who granted an injunction. G. J. Trask, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation at Detroit, explained at the hearing that in other cities attempts had been made to run a faked 'Damaged Goods' and in each instance the court prohibited same."

The Grand Circus started to show "Damaged Goods" on Monday, Oct. 18, and has placed to capacity every performance. The Grand Circus only seats about 650, and the total daily attendance averaged 5,000 people. In the evenings the crowd has been so large that three policemen were sent over by the police department to keep the people in line and from blocking the sidewalks. Manager Blankmeyer will run "Damaged Goods" at least four weeks.

HARRY GOLDBERG GOES TO ATLANTA.

We are advised that Harry Goldberg, formerly manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., Detroit, is now connected with the Atlanta, Ga., office of the World Film Corporation.

E. A. GOLDBERG IN CHARGE AT CENTRAL FILM CO.

Ellis A. Goldberg, of the Central Film Co., Chicago, is now in charge of the Detroit branch in the Peter Smith building, succeeding C. W. Spanuth, who has returned to Chicago. Having outgrown its present quarters, Mr. Goldberg is looking for larger offices.

DUPLEX POSTPONES OPENING A FEW DAYS.

The new Duplex theater, now being erected, has already signed up for Pathe Gold Rooster features, and will have the first run in Detroit. The deal was closed by L. E. Franconi, manager of the Pathe exchange. The Washington theater is showing first-run of the "Wallingford" series. The Duplex, by the way, has postponed its date of opening. According to the latest information, the opening will take place between Nov. 15 and Dec. 1. It will be managed by E. N. Henessy, formerly of the Fine Arts theater. Over thirty Detroit theaters are running the serial "Neal of the Navy."

ROTHAPFEL TO TALK IN DETROIT.

Detroit exhibitors are anxiously looking forward to a visit from S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto theater, New York, now building, and former manager of the Strand in that city. Mr. Rothapfel will come to Detroit on Nov. 22 under the auspices of the Mutual Film Co. His presence here will mean that exhibitors from all over the state will gather in Detroit to hear what Mr. Rothapfel has to say. He will tell the exhibitors a lot of things about conducting a theater that they should know. He will relate his own experiences, which can be applied to any theater, whether large or small.

PRUDENTIAL FILM PLANS.

The Prudential Film Co., Detroit, which capitalized recently for $30,000, ill produce one and two-reel comedies and features. W. H. Goodfellow, who has promoted the company, is negotiating for a studio to be erected at Utica, Mich. Andrew H. Green, Jr., a millionaire Detroit capitalist, is behind of this new company.

THE ARTONE FILM INACTIVE.

A letter came to the Detroit office of the World asking for information regarding the Artone Film Co. In this connection would state that the Artone is doing no production work at present. The company recently reduced its capital stock, and as far as can be learned is inactive for the present. Headquarters are still maintained at 87 Woodward avenue.

A. J. LOUGHLIN DIES.

Arthur J. Loughlin, proprietor of the Dixie theater, Dix and Clark avenues, for the past four years, died on Oct. 14 at the Boulevard Sanitarium as the result of an operation for chronic throat trouble. Although well known in business circles in Detroit, Loughlin was best known throughout the country as a circus acrobat. Previous to buying the Dixie theater, he was in the real estate business. He was popular on the west side, being of a jovial disposition.

REX TO OPEN ABOUT NOV. 1.

Manager Mitchell of the Rex, West Fort street, expects to reopen his house about the first of November. At present contractors are busy remodeling and enlarging the seating capacity from 300 to 1,000, making it one of the largest theaters on the west side.

SATURDAY MATINEES FOR CHILDREN.

To enforce the existing ordinance prohibiting children under 14 years of age from attending motion picture theaters at night unaccompanied by adults and to educate Detroit mothers to bring the children to the matinees is the purpose of a campaign against evening motion pictures for children that will be carried on soon by the Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs. "We will make the mothers of Detroit realize," said Mrs. W. B. Alvord, president of the Federation, "that children under 14 should attend only Saturday afternoon matinees and that the program of these matinees should be chosen especially for them. The managers of theaters are willing to put on such programs provided there is a demand for them. We are appealing to the managers to enforce the ordinance now in existence which prohibits children from evening attendance at theaters unless accompanied by an adult. We shall make a campaign through the clubs and churches of the city to show mothers the results on a young child of evening theater going and of seeing pictures intended only for older eyes."

TO OPEN BRANCH IN CLEVELAND.

It is reported that the Detroit Kriterion will soon open branch offices in Cleveland. Also an office in Escanaba, Mich., to look after exhibitors in the northern part of the state. Ralph Peckham, general manager of the company, reports business to be improving every day. He says he is very well satisfied with conditions.

Business Notes—Changes.

Business at the Mutual Film exchange in Detroit is expanding so rapidly that larger quarters are necessary. Manager G. J. Trask is now negotiating with several downtown capitalists who plan to erect a special building for use by the Mutual exchange. Mr. Trask is not ready to divulge any locations, as nothing as yet has been definitely closed.

All of the Detroit newspapers are now giving considerable space to photoplay news. The Free Press has a page each week called "With the Reel Players." The Detroit Journal devotes an entire page every Saturday. Both the News and Times give more space to photoplays than they do to the legitimate theaters.

The Atlas Film Co., in the Liggett building, Detroit, will shortly release a new picture called "When the Reverend Slipped a Cog." It will be booked by the Detroit Kriterion Company.

A $10,000 pipe organ is being installed in the Strand, Grand River and Fourteenth streets. This is one of the finest and largest theaters in Detroit, and is owned by John H. Kunsky, Inc. The house manager is Arthur C. Hoganson. The writer can vouch for the statement that business at the Strand is excellent, far better than was looked for.

The Satin Goldfibre Screens, Inc., has enlarged its offices in the Dime Bank building, Detroit. Frank M. Duncan, vice-president and general manager, reports that he has booked many orders, and that he has a good list of jobbers who have contracted for the exclusive local agency.

PROSPECTS FOR A MINNEAPOLIS PROGRAM.

New Producing Company Makes Glowing Promises—21 Films a Week.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

"MANAGER A. G. Bainbridge, Jr., lessee of the Shubert theater and proprietor of the Bainbridge Players, is president of the Exhibitors' Photoplay Company, newly organized," says the Journal, "which has plans for the establishing in Minneapolis of a film producing industry with an output of 21 reels a week. It is planned to maintain studio sites in Minneapolis, at Lake Minnetonka and at Mille Lacs. The Exhibitors' Photoplay Company, it is announced, will work along co-operative lines. Most of the stockholders are proprietors of theaters and will use the films that the industry will produce.

"Chamberlain Brown is to be the New York representative of the new Minneapolis company.

"Interested with Mr. Bainbridge in the new company are Henry W. Benton, Harvey T. Daniels, Harry H. Green, William A. Steffes, C. H. McCoy, E. D. Best and Thomas Saxe."

TRIANGLE AND PARAMOUNT AT LYRIC.

Thomas Saxe of Saxe Brothers, has a new policy for the Lyric theater, at Minneapolis, effective October 21. Triangle and Paramount service will be combined. On each program will be a Paramount feature, a Triangle dramatic feature, and a Triangle-Keystone comedy. Changes will be made Sundays and Thursdays.

Admission will be 15, 25 and 50 cents, the latter figure for boxes and loges.

PRIVATE VIEW OF "NATION" FILM.

Elliott & Sherman, who have the Western rights of "The Birth of a Nation," gave a private exhibition to city officials and other Minneapolis persons especially interested in the film. Five sets of this picture valued at $150,000 was the largest shipment of films ever received in Minneapolis.

PROFESSOR BURTON ON FILMS.

Poet, Critic and Man of Letters Gives Hearty Endorsement to Pictures.

"I have no sympathy for those who affect to sneer at the moving pictures, and relatively there is far less of the vicious or vile in motion pictures than in the spoken drama," says Prof. Richard Burton, national president of the Drama League in the current issue of the Minnesota Magazine. "They are the most striking feature of the modern theatrical situation and should be of permanent value to society."

Minnesota Theater Changes—Notes.

Gerald Brousard has purchased the moving picture theater at Clearwater from J. Kadria.

Archie Keeling has sold the Royal theater at Hopkins to Le Roy Olson of Minneapolis.

Art Kinsella and Edward Hahn will open a new moving picture theater at Hazelwood.

ILLINOIS NEW HOUSES.

T. D. Wilson has taken deed to a site at Logan and Neil streets in Champaign and a new theater to be leased to the Heiman-Finn Company for three years will be constructed. It will be 90x145 feet.

Arthur Roath has opened a new moving picture show in Burn's hall at Huntley.

W. G. Wack will erect a new moving picture theater at Mansfield next spring.

A new moving picture theater will be opened at Davis, it is reported.

ILLINOIS CHANGES.

S. M. Edgett, proprietor of the Lyric theater at Earlville, has leased the Primrose theater at Morris from J. B. Dawson.

J. R. Bennett has sold the Gem theater at Macomb to L. L. Butterfield. The latter's son, Gale, and Jack Howland will be managers. The seating capacity in being increased to 400.

The Oswalds have sold Dreamland on North Main street, at Canton, to P. J. Wyeth, an experienced moving picture man of Champaign, and Carl Rofer, a newspaper man of Champaign.

Norton Lowe has sold his moving picture theater at Shawneetown to Allen Vaughn of McLeansboro.

The South Side theater on Chicago avenue in Evanston as been sold to Frank M. Smith of Rockford.

FOLLOWED LATEST SCENT.

Vandals wrecked Dohm's moving picture machine at Waterloo. Bloodhounds were secured, but unfortunately Henry Dohm had touched the machine and the dogs followed his trail.

LETS WOMEN'S CLUB SELECT PROGRAM.

Programs at the Lyric and the Star theaters in Lincoln one day a week will be selected by a committee from the Woman's Club. Manager Leo Burnstein made this arrangement following a season of the Club, which was devoted to a discusssion of "The Improvement of Motion Pictures." A representative of the National Society for Improved Motion Pictures was present.

Evanston Censor Problem

Difference of Opinion in the City as to Best Brand of Censorship—Protest Against Proposed Fee for Fifty Cents—Puts Theater Tax at $1,450 a Year—Qualified Censor Cannot Be Found.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANY persons in Evanston, Ill., interested in censorship want to accept the Chicago Censorship Board's permit and then have a censor to pass upon all films not approved in Chicago. Mrs. H. H. Kingsley said that not a single member of the present volunteer board of thirty-five in Evanston was satisfied with the Chicago permits and she showed that only four major things constituted the Chicago cut-outs. A proposed official censorship ordinance is patterned after Chicago's. The present regulations follow New York's closely.

R. E. Hartman, attorney representing Alfred Hamburger, exhibitor, protested the proposed fee of fifty cents for each film inspected. The exhibitors now pay $200 a year tax, and the censoring fee would compel each exhibitor to pay the city about $1,250 a year more. J. J. Turnock, who represented Bodkin & Keane, said he had talked with many women and the consensus of opinion was to accept the Chicago standard and to see that the cut-outs had not been restored. Then licenses could be revoked for showing objectionable pictures. Complaints were made that cut-outs had been ordered in Chicago and that these scenes appeared in films shown in Evanston. This has been eliminated, J. H. Bodkin, an exhibitor, explained. Chicago exchanges have two sets of films, one with the cut-outs as ordered by the Chicago board and another for country distribution. It has been discovered that Evanston was getting the country films and the remedy was voluntarily applied.

A qualified censor cannot be found is the belief of the Evanston News. "A willingness to accept the position would be the very best evidence of a lack of capacity to fill it," it says.

AUTHOR WROTE ONE BAD ENOUGH AND IS ASHAMED.

Randall Parrish, the author, in a statement to his neighbors and friends at Kewanee is "really more ashamed than gratified," because a Kewanee house featured 'The Yellow Star," which he had written. The chief difficulty he has found in selling photoplays, he says, is in writing badly enough to suit the producers. Among other things he said:

"I desire earnestly to say to the people of Kewanee that I have no part whatever, and no sympathy with the present attempt at publicity being given through the press, and otherwise. Indeed, the whole affair makes me exceedingly tired, although I am, of course, helpless to interfere. I have in the past produced some things worthy of public approval, and in which I have felt some degree of pride; but the writing of a photoplay is no more than an incident in my daily work. To my mind, it is of very insignificant importance when compared with my other work, and I can in no way understand or appreciate the furore which has arisen over this simple picture of underworld life. I do not consider it as any special honor to have a movie produced, or a matter of any unusual interest. Really, I am more ashamed than gratified, and the congratulations of friends leave me speechless. The only difficulty I have ever found in the selling of photoplays was to write badly enough to suit the producers. As to the 'Yellow Star,' I have no knowledge whatever as to whether or not it is worthy of being shown on the screen. All I do know is, that the play is certainly not entitled to such wonderful advertising, and that I do no care to be held in any way accountable for this effort of publicity. The height of my ambition is not the chance sale of any picture story, which at present is about the lowest grade of literary endeavor, nor do I wish to be held responsible in your minds for the effort to make this production an event of vast importance. If it shall chance to please you, and entertain you, I will be glad, but kindly refrain from showering me with congratulations, as though you thought this rather —I fear—'yellow' photoplay, was the crowning event of my literary life. It is not, and to be perfectly frank, I do not care two kopecks whether it is ever produced or not."

ILLINOIS SHOWMANSHIP IN CLOSE-UP VIEWS.

The Tilford at Murphysboro gave a free matinee to school children of "The Locked Door," the fire prevention film. The Orpheum at Ottawa had a return showing of "My Official Wife." The North Henderson band, operating the moving picture show at North Henderson, gave 40 per cent. of the proceeds on fair day to the fair organization. Manager Burnstine of the Star and the Lyric at Lincoln is showing a Francis X. Bushman picture every Wednesday. Manager C. E. Kepner of the Grand at Mattoon had a home talent film made for his house. Steve Bennis, who runs pictures in his Candy Kitchen at Lincoln, is now using Pathe service. George Kleine's "Julius Caesar" was shown at the Park theater in Champaign for the benefit of the Woman's Society of the Congregational church. Sheets & Brosi of the Bijou at Quincy started the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" serial October 4. The Opera house at Rutland will use a World Film Corporation feature every Tuesday night. A film of police prowess was shown at the Washington in Chicago Heights for the benefit of the Illinois Policemen's Association. "Pictures of You" were successfully used by the Princess at Manteno.

EDUCATIONAL FILM CENTER AT CHAMPAIGN.

Through the efforts of E. E. Paine, associate professor of electrical engineering at the University of Illinois, the Bureau of Economics of Philadelphia has established a sub-station at Champaign for the distribution of their motion films and stereopticon lectures.

These films and illustrated lectures, which are for educational purposes exclusively, cover practically every field except that of dramatics. Professor Paine has already received a number of films, which he will send out on request to various organizations of the state that wish to use them for purposes of entertainment. The only specification which the bureau makes is that no admission be charged on any occasion at which these films are used. Shows probably will be given at the University.

ILLINOIS CHARTERS.

Secretary of State Stevenson has issued a charter to the Gold Theater Company of Chicago; capital, $2,500; to exhibit moving pictures and other amusements of a similar character. The incorporators are Michael Gesas, Estelle A. Johnson and Frank R. Leonard.

A charter has also been issued to the Spencer-Mueller Amusement Company of Rock Island, to operate in the old Family theater building on Second avenue, near Nineteenth street. The three men named in the papers are Carl J. Mueller, H. H. Treffer and A. L. Anderson. Motion pictures will be shown in the building, which is being thoroughly remodeled.

Operators Ask Increase

Milwaukee Operators May Get Ten Per Cent. More Wages—Negotiations Still Pending Between Managers and Operators Organizations—Compromise Hoped For—New Rates to Give $18-$26.50 a Week.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OPERATORS in Milwaukee will get an increase in pay amounting to about 10 per cent if negotions of the committees of the managers and operators' organizations are satisfied by both bodies. The increase for outlying theaters will not go into effect until next fall. This is a compromise, the original demand being an immediate increase for all operators. Salaries will range from $18 to $26.50 a week with flat rate of 75 cts. an hour for all overtime. George Fischer, Henry Trinz and Bert Fischer represented the managers and G. S. Harris, Frank Paradise and Arthur Weaver the operators. Negotiations were unusually amicible.

WESTERN RIGHTS IN "NATION" FILM FOR $200,000.

Roy Aitken, New York City, brother of Harry Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Company, and one of the leading motion picture promoters in the country, who has been visiting his mother at Waukesha, announced that while in the west he disposed of the western rights of "The Birth of a Nation" to Sherman & Elliott, of Minneapolis, for $200,000. Roy Aitken held a half interest in the film and he still retains an interest in it. The western rights include fifteen states besides Wisconsin.

Business Methods in Wisconsin.

The Majestic, at Madison, is giving photoplay star souvenir spoons with tickets. The Grand, at Hayward, has installed a new gold fibre screen. The Bijou, at Green Bay, gave away 150 admission tickets in a Chaplin contest. A block of fifty was the first prize. "Jewel" was shown by the Royal at Sparta so the Home Economics Club might furnish a kitchen in the city hall basement. The opera house at Montello is strong on serials. "The Diamond from the Sky" and "The Exploits of Elaine" are to be followed by "The Broken Coin." The Varsity, at Madison, had big patronage from students and faculty of the State University when it showed "The Unbroken Road," written by Prof. Thomas H. Dickinson of that school.

New Milwaukee Company.

The Paul Gilmore Photoplay Company is the latest producing project reported from Milwaukee, Paul Gilmore, who has been with D. W. Griffith, being prominent. The plans call for an outlay of $100,000 and a complete plant north of Milwaukee along the lake shore. Blanche Gilmore, 441 Van Buren street, has been handling details pending the arrival of Paul Gilmore from the Pacific coast.

Milwaukee League Ball.

The Exhibitors' League of Milwaukee is making tentative plans for its ball at the Auditorium. Photoplay stars from all over the country will be invited.

Short Interesting Items.

Moving picture shows for children at one cent admission are being given every Saturday afternoon by the Clarke Street Social Center in Milwaukee.

The mayor, city attorney and police commissioner of Chippewa Falls objected to the Leo Frank pictures which the Victor theater contemplated booking and they were not shown. They declared the legal status was misrepresented.

C. H. Edwards has been enlarging the Grand theater at Spooner.

The Victor theater, at Chippewa Falls, has been leased to David Present and Ernest Caesar, proprietors of the Lyric.

MICHIGAN NOTES.

Theater Changes—Leases—Short Notes.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

EXHIBITOR F. M. SPENCER, who has been manager of the Genesta theater at Breckenridge, has leased that house.

John Bennett has leased the motion picture theater at Reed City.

Donovan & Lane have leased the Thomas theater at Charlotte to John Henry and Frank Harrod.

J. H. Underwood has purchased the Virginia theater at Marcellus. His sons, Francis and Clyde, will operate it.

The moving picture show at Woodland has been purchased by a company of local business men.

The Delft theater at Marquette is giving away Skudder cars.

The seating capacity of the Lyric at Ludington, now controlled by the Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company, has been increased from 700 to 900 and otherwise remodeled.

The Garden theater at Flint has installed a four-piece orchestra.

"Saginaw in Moving Pictures" was shown for three days at the Bijou in Saginaw in connection with the regular program.

FINE NEW HOUSE TO BE BUILT IN SPRINGFIELD, MO.

By Kansas City News Service.

Grubel Brothers are arranging for the erection of a magnificent moving picture theater in Springfield, Mo. It is said the building will cost $65,000. A lease for twenty-five years has been taken on a site, with the option of purchase. The structure will be three stories high and there will be a store room in the front of the ground floor. It will have a seating capacity of 1,900 and will have a policy similar to that of the Grubel Brothers' houses in Kansas and Missouri, Vaudeville and high-class moving pictures.

VICTOR THEATER SHOWS FOR CLUBS.

The Council of Clubs in Kansas City, Kan., secured the co-operation of the Victor theater for two benefit performances, the "Spendthrift" being the picture, the proceeds being used to buy flower seeds for distribution to the poor children next spring.

MANAGER WILHOIT'S SPRINGFIELD, MO., FILM.

The preparation of a moving picture drama in Springfield is receiving the cooperation of citizens, Jesse A. Tolerton, president of the Springfield Club, assuming the role of Uncle Sam; Rev. John T. Bacon, pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, represents W. J. Byran; Superintendent of Schools and other dignitaries will also take part. E. M. Wilhoit of the Jefferson theater, is managing the picturizing.

THINGS MOVING AT THE MAZE.

H. B. Allen, owner of the building in which is the Maze theater, has taken charge of the theater himself, installing H. W. MacLeod as manager. The Maze, opposite the Baltimore hotel, adjoining the Sexton hotel, and a few steps from the Muehlebach hotel, has, apparently, a wonderful location. Mr. Allen will improve the music, install a big sign, set a high standard of productions and let the place be known as a "photoplay house." It will keep the name "The Maze."

Mr. MacLeod has previously been in the real estate business, though interested in two or three moving picture houses.

A LIVE PICTURE MAN.

Fred Savage has redecorated the De Luxe theater at Hutchinson, Kan., and reports a fine business there on Paramount and Pathe features. Several months ago Mr. Savage took on the Elite at Huntchinson, Kan., which had been playing "legitimate"—save the mark!—unsavory burlesque and similar productions. Mr. Savage revolutionized the policy of that house, made it strictly picture, changed the name to the Rex, and has been making money out of it. His friends joshed him for buying a "white elephant," but now they are willing to admit that Fred Savage is a wise one and knows what he can do.

BOOSTING PAYS.

The Palace theater at Appleton City, Mo., started the show at 7 o'clock on a recent evening. The management announced widely that after the show everybody would go to the "pie supepr" being given by the High School class. The boost for the enterprise of the school children brought a big crowd to the picture house that evening—and made many friends for the management. A house, like a local paper, should be a big booster—that makes it "belong."

GILDAY FINDS FINE SOPRANO.

H. J. Kronsberg is directing the Willis Wood orchestra of ten pieces this season. Mr. Gilday is emphasizing the musical features and gave to his patrons last week a very special attraction in a lyric soprano who is his own find. This young lady is not yet nineteen years old, but her director, Miss Schulte, has said that she excels even Miss Felice Lynne, whom she also discovered. This find is Miss Sherry Louise Marshall. She sang in the afternoon at three and in the evening at nine.

Mr. Gilday says that before the season is over the young lady will be in heavy demand, and that soon people will be paying grand opera prices to hear her. And then the operatic and concert stage will be in the position of recruiting their forces from the moving picture houses!

T. Y. H. WORLD FILM MAN.

"T. Y. H."—that's how they all know him. Tom Y. Henry, the new branch manager for the World Film Corporation at Kansas City, and the other managers seem mighty glad to have another such alert, companionable, energetic "regular fellow" added to their ranks. "T. Y. H." is one of those kind that you like at first sight, and then like better. He started out in 1910 when the General started, and with that firm, and so far has divided his time (though not coincidentally) between the General and the Mutual. He has traveled for the Mutual, and served soue time as traveling auditor for the Mutual in the United States and Canada. He comes immediately from the Mutual into the World. How well he fits into the hard-working, open-hearted bunch in Kansas City is indicated in his reply to a question. "When can I see you for a few minutes this afternoon?" "Any time you come up to 12 o'clock tonight."

T. Y. Henry.

Mr. Henry's family, a wife and three children, will arrive in Kansas City about Oct. 20th, and Mr. Henry is hoping that they will be able to have some real family life now.

MUTUAL BRANCH IN WICHITA.

The Mutual Film has opened a new office in Wichita, Kansas, with Jack Brainerd in charge. Mr. Brainerd was formerly president of the Kansas branch of the Exhibitors' League, and is one of the best known film men in the State.

TOOK TO PICTURES—COULDN'T STOP.

The Crawford theater at Wichita has always seemed to take the position that it was permanently and irrevocably a dramatic house, but it couldn't find sufficient bookings of Broadway successes this year to fill each week, and inserted, as sort of an experiment, a picture event for a few days. The success of the picture was so phenomenal that the policy of the house has been entirely changed. It is said that in the future the majority of the attractions will be photoplays. Indeed, in the past four weeks there has been only one drama attraction in the house, a widely-advertised minstrel show.

CHRIS GLAMANN'S NEW COLOR SCHEME.

Chris Glamann is widely known among his intimate friends as an irrepressible booster for the Kaiser. He recently remodeled his Isis theater and now has one of the most beautiful little theaters in Southwest Kansas. It seats five hundred and is usually full. In the redecorating Mr. Glamann used a rather unusual color scheme, indeed. His friends say he tried to depict in futurist color combinations the European situation at present and to hint at the success of German arms. Next to the choosing of pictures, Mr. Glamann is particular about his music. He employs capable musicians and plays in his own orchestra and there is not a better moving picture orchestra in the State of Kansas.

AT KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES.

Bert Edwards Covers Kansas.

Bert Edwards, formerly a salesman for the Oliver Typewriter Company, is now traveling Kansas and parts of Oklahoma for the Picture Play House Film Company. Mr. Edwards has sold so many Olivers in Kansas that he was glad to find a new field for his efforts—but Kansas is too good to give up, so he keeps the field, changing only his offerings.

Jameyson Back Smiling.

Mr. H. E. Jameyson, traveler for the Pathe, came in from a recent trip with good reports of business on "Gold Rooster," "Neal of the Navy" and "Wallingford." This last Pathe production seems to have hit a particularly responding chord in the hearts of exhibitors.

Frank Gehring to Travel for Picture Playhouse.

Frank Gehring has succeeded C. J. Campbell as traveler for the Picture Play House Film Company in Oklahoma and Missouri territory. Mr. Gehring has for many years been business manager of musical comedy productions. He knows the booking game and the territory—and in this day of transition from dramatic to moving picture management, a great many exhibitors. He has already had good success placing the "Flame of Passion" and the "Pearl of Antilles."

GIVES ANOTHER FASHION SHOW.

The Empress theater of Paola, Kan., was the scene again this year of the Fashion Show of the Cole Brothers Dry Goods Company. Fred C. Smith, manager of the Empress, has found this Fashion Show a very profitable and pleasant feature. It is given after the moving pictures are shown in the evening.

Kansas Would Not "Sin"

Manager Harden, of Kansas City Fox Film, Has Annoying Tilt with State Censors and Appeal Board Over Showing of Feature Offering—Prominent People of State Called, But Film Is Turned Down.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

MANAGER CHAS. W. HARDEN of the Fox Film, at Kansas City, had a very thrilling "setto" with the Censorship Board and Appeal Board recently—the contest was conducted with great courtesy on both sides, ostensibly, but with apparently watchful waiting alert for openings in the armour by both participants. The Censorship Board naturally had the best of it, although it seemed that Mr. Harden had a good number of the public on his side.

The incident came up over the film "Sin," with Theda Bara. This film had passed so fine in Kansas City where the Welfare Board had approved it, without a cut, that Mr. Harden presumed it would be well met in Topeka. Therefore, the picture was booked at the Iris and suitable advertising had been done. At the proper time the censorship board came to view the picture; Mr. Ross himself acting as an inspector on this occasion. He objected strenuously to the title and also to some of the scenes. Mr. Harden offered to change the title, but Mr. Ross said there were enough other things against the picture, so the appeal board was called upon. The picture was shown again and with the appeal board, came for special investigation, numerous of the leading club women of the city. The personnel of the body which passed final judgment was as follows: Chas. Sessions, secretary to the governor, an old newspaper man and formerly secretary of state; J. T. Botkin, present secretary of state, who, in many situations, has proven himself a broad-minded man, and S. M. Brewster, attorney general. The appeal board left the show and proceeded to hold a meeting at the State House without inviting Mr. Harden to the session, but giving Mr. Ross a hearing. The appeal board sustained the decision of Mr. Ross, declaring that the film should not be shown. Many of the prominent women present at the exhibition had declared that the film was a fine one and not objectionable. H. S. Montgomery, manager of the Iris, was sadly disappointed when he found he could not use "Sin," and it is said was even almost ready to show it any way and stand a fine, but he had to change his program and he substituted "Regeneration" in place of "Sin."

A KANSAS CITY EXCHANGE MAN.

C. S. Edwards.

One of the youngest exchange managers in the business—full of pep and perspicacity—a rare combination—that's C. S. Edwards, manager of the Pathe exchange at Kansas City. By the way, that's C. S. Edwards, Jr., for his father also is noted in film circles. The elder Edwards is a real old timer, or an old time reeler; he was one of the organizers of the old Yale Film Company at Kansas City, and was with that company until its merging with the General upon the latter's organization. C. S Jr. was with the Yale, and the General, too. C S. Jr. was assistant to his father in the management of the local office in Kansas City of the General until June 1, 1914, when the Pathe separated. The father and son became managers of the Pathe exchange in Kansas City then. They had fine offices in the Ozark building, with a projecting room, and all modern accommodations—and it looked so good that other film exchanges have also taken quarters in the building. Last December C. S. Jr, was made manager of the Kansas City Pathe exchange; and since then he has built up the office from six to nineteen employees, some working at night. And they surely work! For the business has been more than doubled in less than a year. Mr. Edwards is forceful in action and expression, speaks right to the point, and is a good judge of men. He has collected a fine bunch to handle his large territory—and the service he gives is sufficiently testified to by his results.

SOME STIR FROM ADVERTISING STUNT.

W. P. Cuff, manager of the Electric theater at Topeka, pulled off "some stunt" in connection with the "Goddess" recently. He had an actress dressed up in a manner similar to the "Goddess," who conducted herself on the streets of Topeka somewhat as the "reel" Goddess did. She, of course, attracted extraordinary attention—and a policeman stopped her. Her answer was that she was a goddess sent from Heaven to reform the world. He took her to the station. The town was soon talking about the "crazy girl"—or was she really a messenger inspired? Any way, the newspapers gave long stories about her. (Mr. Cuff may not have deceived the reporters, he may really have gotten the co-operation of the editors). After the public had been sufficiently aroused, half-page advertisements exploited the "Goddess" and sizeable news stories appeared in the papers. There was, of course, a chance for follow-up stories of the chagrin of tho public officers over having been fooled and their threats against anybody who should try to repeat the operation.

WICHITA'S NEW PALACE.

Wichita is to have a new theater, the Palace, with seating capacity of one thousand, strictly modern in every respect; two Simplex machines; a $10,000 Austin pipe organ, and will open December 1. Prominent business men of Wichita are interested in the project, among them being L. M. Miller, president of the Princess Theater Company, running vaudeville; Sam Amidon, one of the best lawyers of Kansas, and L. Martling, manager of the Crawford theater.

The new Palace will be managed by Stanley Chambers, now manager of the Princess, a vaudeville house which uses one reel of pictures. A novel feature of the Palace will be the ventilating system. Instead of the usual mushrooms under the seats, the means for supplying the cold air will be near the ceiling. A five-foot air chamber will extend around the entire room just below the ceiling and vents from this will allow cold air, pumped from suitable cleansers, to flow and drop by its weight to the auditorium.

MAPLE AT WICHITA IMPROVED.

Arthur Ford, manager of the Maple theater in Wichita, is remodeling the house and making it a very comfortable family theater. He has set the screen back 15 feet, providing room for fifty more seats. He has also built rest rooms and reading rooms underneath the stage, for the comfort of his women patrons. He has added a new motor generator and has enlarged the operating room. The interior has been redecorated. Mr. Ford runs Universal Service, Broadway Features and the Exploits of Elaine.

New San Francisco House

Splendid Picture Theater to Be Built in the Mission Street District—Will Be Called the New Mission and Seat 1,700—Louis Greenfield and Leon Kahn Behind It—Other Houses of Theirs.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A HANDSOME new moving picture theater with a capacity of at least 1,700, is to be erected on Mission street, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second, by Louis R. Greenfield and Leon L. Kahn, who are engaged in the moving picture business in San Francisco and the Kahn & Greenfield circuit. Plans for this house, which is to be known as the New Mission theater, have been prepared by Reid Bros., architects, and work will be commenced so that it can be opened early in the spring. According to the plans a class "A" theater building will be erected on a lot 100 by 116 ft in size, with a seating capacity of 1,550 on the ground floor and 250 in the balcony, where the general offices and operating rooms will be located. The building is to be arranged in such a manner that a stage may be added in the rear at any time it is deemed advisable to add vaudeville.

About eight months ago the Kahn & Greenfield circuit opened the New Fillmore on Fillmore street, one of the finest moving picture houses in the city, and but a short time ago completed the remodeling of the Progress at a cost of several thousand dollars, making of this virtually a new house. It is now conducting the Idle Hour, where the new house is to be erected, but additional property has been secured and it will not be necessary to close this theater until the new one is almost ready for occupancy. It is anticipated that the Idle Hour theater will be used until about February, when it will be removed to make room for a long lobby for the new house. The new structure will cost about $65,000, exclusive of the theater equipment. It is planned to install an organ at a cost of $26,000, and to equip the operating room with four projection machines and an emergency switchboard.

EDISON DAY BEING PLANNED.

Thomas Edison, the noted inventor, will arrive in San Francisco this week, to be the guest of the Exposition management and a special day has been set aside in his honor. Plans for the special entertainment of this day have been prepared by a committee of which George Breck, of the Edison Motion Picture agency of this city, is a member. Moving pictures are to be taken of the meeting of Edison and Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, as well as of other events in San Francisco in which the great American will take part and these are to be displayed to thousands on the Marina at the Exposition on the evening of Edison day, permission for this having been granted by George A. Collins, head of the Exposition Players' Corporation, which controls the moving picture concession at the fair.

MOVING PICTURES FEATURED ON EDUCATION DAY.

Education day was observed at the Exposition last week and moving pictures came in for a large share of attention, being one of the features of the educational display. The two Simplex theaters in the Palace of Education featured special programs and were open from 10:30 in the morning until 9 in the evening. Many prominent educators of the state and the country as well were present and gave lectures, accompanied by pictures. During the day more than three thousand persons visited the Simplex theaters and the exhibit on the upper floor. During the week the teachers of San Luis Obispo county held their annual institute in this building and one of the features of the program was a visit to the booth of the Precision Machine Company, headed by A. H. Chamberlain, chairman of the California State Educational Committee, and Mr. Syte, county superintendent of schools, where a talk was given on the subject of moving pictures as a medium of visual education.

CAMERA COMPANY OPENS.

The Pocket Movie Camera Company has opened offices on the fourth floor of the New Call building and the announcement is made that it will manufacture and place upon the market a collapsible motion picture camera that may be carried in the coat pocket. W. G. King is manager of the concern.

CANAL SLIDE HITS.

Stocks of moving picture supplies of almost all kinds are quite low in San Francisco as a result of the slides in the Panama Canal, which have interfered with deliveries. Several concerns are now completely out of stocks of projection machines and have wired for rail shipments. For some time freight shipments by the water route had been coming through almost as speedily as by rail and the local trade had allowed stocks to become rather low.

EXPOSITION CITY GLEANINGS.

Thomas H. Ince, of Los Angeles, manager of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, was a visitor here a few days ago to visit the Exposition and inspect the new Triangle exchange.

Certificed copies of incorporation of the Liberty Film Company have been filed here, the capital stock being placed at $25,000. The subscribers are E. Johnson, S. Johnson, A. Johnson and T. Hall.

The Board of Public Works has made the discovery that the Palace theater, located on the so-called Barbary Coast, has been built upon a street and proposed to remove a section of it covering an area of 40 by 25 feet.

"The Soul of Broadway" was given an elaborate review at the Empress on October 16, about six hundred persons being present. Refreshments were served and an orchestra furnished music.

The Kentucky theater, at Kentucky and Nineteenth streets, has been reopened.

The Turner & Dahnken circuit has taken out the pay-as-you-enter devices recently installed in the Tivoli theater and has installed a beautiful new ticket selling booth in the center of the lobby.

The San Bruno theater at San Bruno has been reopened by H. Ricci, the operating room equipment having been installed by Walter Preddey.

Joe Dietsch, at one time with the George Kleine Attractions, is now in the Kleine department of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc. Louis Hyman, booker for this concern, is now making a trip through the San Joaquin Valley to meet customers.

The Universal Film exchange has installed a fine new screen in its exhibition room on Golden Gate avenue.

R. W. Horn, who has charge of the exhibits of the Nicholas Power Company at the Exposition, recently made a trip to Monterey and vicinity.

R. F. Shinn has remodeled the Rex at Monterey, installed 450 seats, and will reopen this house early in November. Two new Power's Cameragraphs No. 6A will be installed.

A Power's Cameragraph No. 6A has been installed in the Rodman Wanamaker Indian exhibit in the Palace of Education.

Fred Bayers of Copperopolis, Cal., was a recent visitor here and purchased an Edison projection machine.

Emil Kehrlein, of the Kinema, Fresno, Cal., was a recent visitor here to look over late releases. He is now also conducting the Pastime in that city.

P. Lynch, of the American company, of Santa Barbara, Cal., was here last week for a short visit.

Mr. Fairchild, of the Nixon estate, Reno, Nev., was here recently and purchased two Powers Cameragraphs from G. A. Metcalfe for use in the Majestic theater, just taken over by these interests.

GOLDEN STATE NEWS ITEMS.

The Yeldah Film Company has been incorporated at Stockton, Cal., by W. R. Clark, R. R. Reibenstein, D. S. Matthews, W. H. Riecks, J. L. Craig, E. M. Hadley and R. C. Pardee.

The Bell Amusement Company, of Vallejo, Cal., has purchased two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6A for its new house at that place.

REDFEATHER, WILD WEST FILM.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DIRECTOR J. W. EARLY, making the Princess Tsianina Redfeather pictures for the Columbia Amusement Company, began the first scenes Monday, October 18, near Morrison, Col. Mr. Early has also chosen some beautiful spots around Evergreen, which he wishes to use as a background.

Mr. Early lived in Deadwood when it was rough and "wooly." In Deadwood there is the notorious old "Green Front" dance hall, which was typical. While it has long been closed, its owner has never had it torn down, but has preserved it as sort of a land mark. Mr. Early plans to take his company to Deadwood, where he has permission to open up this hall, and make several scenes in it. Some of the famous old characters are still living, and Mr. Early will have many of them in his picture. He will even have one of the old bartenders behind the bar. Mike Russell, an old Indian fighting scout of the Black Hills, has consented to pose. So has Seth Bullock. Mr. Early will take scenes on this very place, which was formerly Roosevelt's ranch.

Those interested in truly Western plays and those interested in watching to see what these Colorado producers can do, will anxiously await the production of this picture.

MAUD FEALY IN FILMS AGAIN.

It ill be of interest to Denver people to know that Maud Fealy will again be seen in a number of big photoplay features during the present season, as she has been engaged by the Kleine organization. She has played in many Thanhouser pictures and is one of those whose screen work is unquestionably first class.

MANAGER HARRIS MAY MOVE NOV. 1.

The V-L-S-E exchange is anxiously awaiting the completion of its new quarters, which, when completed, will be the most roomy and most modern exchange office in town. Manager Frank Harris thinks they will be able to move by the 1st of November. It will greatly faicilitate the handling of the V-L-S-E, for since Denver has been promoted from a sub office, an enormous amount of business has been coming in.

"DAMAGED GOODS" SHOWN.

A private showing of the Mutual feature, "Damaged Goods," was given at the Paris theater on Friday, October 15. There were about seventy-five persons present. It was a very representative showing, as there were ministers, doctors, scientists, educators, club women and critics assembled. The Paris will run this picture beginning October 20, at advanced prices. There is being much interest manifested in regards to the picture.

AMONG DENVER EXCHANGE MEN.

Manager Cohn, of the Notable, has been absent on a short trip to Idaho Springs. He reports business booming.

Mr. Charles R. Guilmore, who has recently assumed charge of the World office, in Denver, is gone for several days down to Colorado Springs. Mr. Guilmore is getting personally acquainted with all the exhibitors in this territory and is making these little trips to get in closer touch with them.

Art Bailey, manager of the Metro office, is overjoyed with the showing that the Metro picture, "The Soul of a Woman," is making. He has had it on at the Strand for seven days, with it packing the house to capacity, and will still have it on for an indefinite period of time. It has proven to be one of the most popular pictures ever run in Denver and is making a record showing here.

Mr. L. Knappen, manager of Pathe office, has been celled to California by the severe illness of his mother.

Mr. Buckwalter, manager of the Denver office of Pathe, has pust returned from a short business trip to Salt Lake.

SPOKANE ITEMS.

Two new moving picture shows have just been opened in Idaho towns.

The Knights of Columbus Home Association at Cottonwood, Idaho, has opened a moving picture show in its hall, where an admission is charged. The organization has contracted with the General Film Company, through the Spokane office, for film service for its shows.

Hammill & Sherer, merchants of Ferdinand, Idaho, have also opened a moving picture show in a hall and will operate this in addition to continuing in the mercantile business. They have also closed with the General Film Company for film service.

C. W. Condon has opened a moving picture show in a hall at Nespelem, Washington, which is located on the Indian Reservation.

Mary Nash in "Tides of Time" was one of the principal drawing cards at the Best Show during the week just closed. The attraction drew capacity houses. Manager James McConahey reports the General Film selections he is now using are drawing well.

MANAGER HAGER, OF UNIVERSAL LOCAL OFFICE.

One of the most courteous and active of the managers of the film exchange in Spokane, Wash., is G. A. Hager, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company. Mr. Hager is a tireless worker and is always after business. He takes advantage of every opportunity to keep his products before the producers by means of circular letters when not able to see them in person.

J. A. Hager.

He has been in the moving picture business since 1898, first as an operator then with his brother, A. B. Hager, now an exhibitor at Idaho Falls, Ida., he operated a moving picture theater in Los Angeles and in other California places. He entered the exchange business four years ago with the Golden Gate Film Exchange, then went to the Film Supply Company, which at that time handled the Mutual releases, and has been manager here for two years. He does road work for the territory as well as managing the exchange.

Many Spokane Licenses

City Electrical Inspector Thinks That Operators From All Over the Inland Empire Come to Spokane to Get Licenses—Only 14 Theaters There, But 71 Licenses Granted in One Year.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CITY Electrical Inspector Davis, of Spokane, expresses the belief that this city is fast becoming a clearing house for the Inland Empire, which includes Western Montana, the Pan-Handle of Idaho and Eastern Washington.

Since the Spokane ordinance requiring operators to have a city certificate was passed last year 71 operators have been licensed. As there are but 14 theaters showing pictures in Spokane, including the three vaudeville houses, but 28 men could be employed at most, if all houses were to work double shifts, as required in regular picture shows. This leads Mr. Davis to conclude that many of the operators on the city's rolls are working in the smaller cities and use Spokane as headquarters.

"We have had operators come from outside towns to get Spokane licenses," said Inspector Davis. "They say Spokane is their home, and they want to be in a position to work if the occasion required. We found one local picture show that was conducting a school for operators, as at one time six or seven licenses had been issued to employers of that house. We found on investigation that the men were working as ushers, ticket sellers and stage hands. They were given lessons in the morning before the show opened and after hours. We had no objection to this, so long as the inexperienced men were not allowed to run the machines while the theater was opened to the public."

SPOKANE'S MUTUAL MANAGER.

W. J. Drummond, branch manager for the Mutual Film Corporation in Spokane, Wash., for the past 21 months, is one of the best mixers among the film exchange managers of this city and is also one of the most affable. He was formerly a prominent state right man and exhibitor in the middle west and also served some time as director and player for producing companies, thus being familiar with all lines of the business. Previous to that he was connected with musical comedy and vaudeville companies as producing manager part of the time.

W. J. Drummond.

He has taken to the film exchange business and to dealing with exhibitors like a duck to water and does his own road work for this territory except when given assistance occasionally by A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man from the Portland office, who devotes part of his time to the Spokane country.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF DAMAGED GOODS.

"Damaged Goods," the seven-part Mutual picture, was shown to two private audiences here during the past week in the Hippodrome theater, arrangement having been made by W. J. Drummond, Mutual manager. The first exhibition was to theatrical men only and the second to city commissioners, newspaper men, medical men and members of the Ministerial Alliance.

Following the exhibition, Commissioner Samuel Glasgow, official censor, announced that there would be no objection to the picture running in Spokane, and Manager Lee S. Forbes of the Class A has booked the production to run from October 30 to November 7, inclusive.

WILLIAM T. REED TO HANDLE CLEMMER PUBLICITY.

William T. Reed, of Seattle, arrived in the city several days ago to handle the publicity and assist Dr. H. S. Clemmer, also manager of the Clemmer theater, in the management of the Casino.

Mr. Reed succeeds J. W. Bartleson, who handled the Portland engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" for the Clemmer interests and who was transferred to Seattle. Mr. Reed is a former Seattle newspaper man and was associated with James Q. Clemmer at the Clemmer theater, Seattle.

BAILEY & GROMBACHER LEASE LOIS THEATER.

Frank T. Bailey, general manager of the Liberty Amusement Company, which operates the Liberty theater, Spokane, and George Brombacher, associated with him in the operation of several picture playhouses in the Northwest, also with the Independent Western Film Exchange, have leased the Lois theater, Seattle, and will operate it by installing the Metro Pictures Corporation service, which is also used in the Liberty theater, Spokane.

MANAGER TODD GOES TO PORTLAND.

Will Be Succeeded in Management of Spokane Office of General Film by George J. Ekre.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Manager L. A. Todd, who for the past two years has been manager of the local branch of the General Film Company, will be promoted to manager of the Portland branch, effective about October 23, and will be succeeded here by George J. Ekre, who has been road man for the General Film Company for this territory.

During the time he has been in Spokane Mr. Todd, who is strictly business, yet has a pleasant and easy manner and a wide acquaintance among exhibitors of the Inland Empire. He has been in the film exchange business for the past seven years.

Mr. Ekre, who succeeds Mr. Todd, has been with the General Film for a year and a half as road man for this territory. Previous to that he was with the Pathe exchange and the former Warner's Features in San Francisco.

In Portland Mr. Todd will take the place of Frank L. Hudson, who is being transferred to Los Angeles, Cal.

Features and Hits—New Houses—Personal Notes.

Manager Lee S. Forbes of the Class A theater has, in addition to booking the Mutual Masterpictures, signed up the latest film comedies under the general head "Buck Parvin and the Movies." These are based on the short stories which ran for weeks in the Saturday Evening Post, written by Charles E. Van Loan.

"Up From the Depths" with Courtney Foote and Gladys Brockwell in the leading roles, was shown to capacity houses four days at the Class A theater. "Green Apples," a Beauty comedy, and "Over and Back," a comic comedy, were two of the best comedies I have ever seen and they brought forth laughter and applause from the audience.

"Business is Business," with Nat Goodwin in the leading role, and Mary Fuller in "Under Southern Skies" have been drawing big crowds at the Rex theater the past week.

Portland Suburb Houses

Portland, Ore., Suburban Theaters Do Not Reap Benefits From West Side Houses' Raise As Anticipated—Misunderstanding As to Extent of Raise Exists, Declares Managers.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland (Oregon) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND'S motion picture theaters are divided into two distinct classes, the downtown houses, which are all on the west side of the river, and the suburban theaters, of which the majority are on the east side. Said a downtown exhibitor last week: "The suburban theaters, all of which have maintained their admission price at 10 cents, should feel highy peased that the downtown theaters have gone to 15 cents. I beieve that many people who formerly took a street car down town to see a picture show will now patronize their local houses." To ascertain the true situation the writer interviewed a number of prominent exhibitors on the north East Side and found that as yet suburban houses have not profited by the downtown men's raise.

William Draper, proprietor of the Union Avenue theater, using Paramount and Big Four service, said: "People seem to have a mistaken idea that the raise extends to suburban houses. I have noticed a marked decrease in business since the downtown men declared their price raise. It will take at least thirty days to determine the effect of the downtown raise on suburban houses."

Martin B. Donovan, proprietor of the New Portsmouth theater, said he had never seen business as quiet as at present. "Several people have tendered me 15 cents as the admission price," he said, and intimated that there might be some misunderstanding among the people as to the extent of the price raise. Mr. Donovan operates one of the most progressive houses on the peninsula.

D. W. Quimby, owner of the Derby theater, in Kenton district, advised that as yet the downtown price raise had not bettered business any in his theater. Mr. Quimby formerly conducted the Dixie theater down town.

NATIONAL REORGANIZED.

The National theater, which has for some time been in the hands of receivers appointed by the Circuit Court, has been put on a paying basis in a surprisingly short time and the receivers were discharged Oct. 16. Orton E. Goodwin, employed by the receivers as manager and whose good judgment had much to do with putting the house on its feet, has retired with the receivers and will continue the publicity office he formerly conducted. The theater will be under the general management of C. F. Regan, who formerly served as house manager, and the policy of showing only the best first run pictures inaugurated by Mr. Goodwin will be maintained. The new management will open with "The Miracle of Life," to be followed by Big Four's "The Dust of Egypt."

AL SATHER TO MANAGE IDEAL.

Al Sather, for some time manager of the Crystal theater, owned by the Peoples' Amusement Company, has resigned his position and will take over the management of the Ideal theater on the West Side on Oct. 31. Mr. Sather has been with the Peoples' Amusement Company for five years, and under his management the Crystal has been a money-maker. Mr. Sather is remembered as the sweet-voiced singer at the Tivoli in the old days of the illustrated song, graduating from behind the footlights to a successful manager several years ago.

A SALEM TRANSFER.

The Wexford theater, Salem, Ore., has been sold to David A. Maloney, a prominent Salem business man. Mr. Maloney is remodeling the house and will open it under the name of the Amuse-U, with four changes a week on the General program. Mr. Maloney also conducts a printing house in Salem and one of his advertising features will be a four-page weekly paper which he will run on his own presses.

TOM NORTH, VISITOR.

Tom North, of the Seattle Big Four office, spent a few days in Portland recently calling on the trade. Film Row always has a comfortable chair reserved for Mr. North's Portland visits and when they know he is coming something all ready to eat, for the younger men in the industry always seek out Mr. North to listen to his interesting reminiscences.

LOCAL PICTURES TAKEN.

A company of local people headed by Burton Stevens and Miss Morgan of the Baker stock company, now holding the boards at the Baker theater, are being filmed under the direction of Tom Maher, also of the Baker troupe. Portland's streets and stores are being used as locations and settings. Frank B. Simmons, Jr., and Charlie Franklin, are backing the venture. A. L. Smith, late of Pendleton Round-Up fame, is the camera man.

STATE USES FILMS.

Projecting machines are part of the equipment of the state institutions, and a local exchange regularly supplies films for use in the Oregon penitentiary, industrial school and state hospitals at Salem, and to the state hospital at Pendleton. The film season has just opened in these institutions, the service being discontinued during the summer.

J. R. CUMMOCK LEAVES PEOPLES

J. R. Cummock, who has been manager of the Peoples theater, Portland, for the past four months, has resigned his position and returned to Seattle, his former home. It is said that Mr. Cummock resigned to become Canadian representative for George Kleine and that he will leave for Canada soon to look over his territory.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

The local Pathe exchange is still growing. Miss B. Sagorsky has been added to the stenographic force and Mr. Wessling, advises that he will soon increase the staff in the shipping room.

The employed musicians overwhelmingly defeated the proposed union law permitting a reduction in the wage scale where two additional men were employed in an orchestra.

J. Baum, who has been traveling out of Portland for the Northwest Feature Film, has been employed by the General Film and will make his headquarters in Seattle.

M. Rosenberg has secured the rights in this territory to "After the Ball."

E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia, reports big business for the Fashion Show held at his theater one day of the Dress-Up Week, recently inaugurated by the Portland merchants. At each performance Mr. Myrick showed films of the latest creations in feminine wearing apparel.

Among the week's visitors were: W. L. Abbott, owner of the Sunset, Astoria, Ore.; A. C. Harrington, Hillsboro, Ore.; N. Haas, Crystal theater, Astoria, Ore.; C. A. Hoffman, Star theater, Forest Grove, Ore.

Ernest H. Hunt, the pianist at the Grand, Salem, Ore., was a visitor in Portland waiting the arrival of his fiancee, Miss Kathleen Price, of London, England, who braved the dangers of submarine warfare to win the man of her choice. The wedding will take place in Salem. Mr. Hunt is well known on the Pacific Coast as a player of motion picture music.

W. Fay Lynch, special representative of the Essanay Company, from Chicago, passed a few days in Portland en route to Seattle.

Frank L. Hudson, of the General Film Company, has gone to Seattle for a short business trip, as has W. A. Stone of the Service Film Company.

The Lyric has closed to pictures, and musical comedy with Dillon and King will hold the boards.

Visitors in Portland during the week were: A. C. Harrington, Grand theater, Hillsboro; E. A. Hoffman, Star theater, Forest Grove.

B. J. Sperry, road man for Pathe, out of Portland, returned recently from a trip to Eastern Oregon, where he did a record breaking business for the Gold Rooster. Mr. Sperry's next trip includes Southern Oregon and the Coos Bay country.

THE ORGY (Nov. 8).—The cast: Bernard Siegel, Ethel Clayton, Francis Joyner, James Humphrey, Ford O. Beck.

Frank Pemberton, a middle aged man of affairs, is interested in the study of hypnotism. He has a ward, Nan Fuller, who is in love with his secretary, Stanton. Pemberton is against his ward marrying Stanton and pleads with her, but to no avail. Stanton also defies him. Pemberton is angered and one day, while reading a book on hypnotism, becomes imbued with the idea of getting his ward under a hypnotic influence and turning her against Stanton. Pemberton throws Nan under his hypnotic influence and she assails Stanton and denounces him. Stanton engages in a struggle with Pemberton and plots to steal Nan away.

Stanton writes a note telling Nan he believes she is under some vile influence and that he means to come and take her away and kill Pemberton, if he interferes. Pemberton gets the note, lays in wait for the heart-broken fellow, and when Stanton comes engages him in a struggle. He is getting the better of Stanton when the chauffeur of Stanton's machine, fearing harm to Stanton, leaves the car, steals into the house, binds the ward who comes in at that moment, and leveling a revolver at Pemberton's back, fires.

It is at this point in the screen visualization that we see Nan coming up the outside steps and into her guardian's room. We also see Pemberton with the book on hypnotism in his hand, quite as we left him when this maddened reverie struck him. He throws his arms around Nan, shows his happiness at finding her alive, and when young Stanton comes in, out of repentance for his imaginative villainy, Pemberton brings them together.

HALF A MILLION (Nov. 9).—The cast: D. L. Don, Eleanor Blanchard, John J. Dolson.

A contented family of toilers are the O'Malleys, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. O'Malley and their son, John. There comes the glad tidings that Mr. O'Malley inherited $3,000,000.39. Immediately a great change comes into all their lives. Mrs. O'Malley becomes an up-lifter and devotes all her time to the temperance cause, while John becomes a regular stage door Johnnie. The poor neglected father is forced to go to a burlesque show for recreation and becomes infatuated with Carrie, the leading lady. Son John is also smitten with Carrie, but she treats his proposal very flippantly and jokingly says the man she marries must have at least half a million dollars. Son and father don't know of each other's infatuation for Carrie, and the old man has a hard job dodging the waiting son at the stage door, when he leaves with Carrie to take her to a cabaret cafe. John finally discovers his father and Carrie in the cafe. In the meanwhile Mrs. O'Malley decides that the cabaret cafes are luring men to drink and marches into the cafe at the head of her band of up-lifters. John and Old Man O'Malley see Mother O'Malley coming and hide. This is John's chance. Placing a blank check in front of his daddy he tells him to sign the check for half a million or he will call mother. O'Malley has to submit to this blackmail, and signs the check with which John wins Carrie's promise to marry him.

THE SECRET ROOM (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 10).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Velma Whitman, Sidney Hayes, Robert Gray.

Amos Lee is a gambler. In his home, Fairview Manor, there is a secret underground room wherein he works to perfect a device for winning at roulette. One night Lee loses everything, including his home, to Robert Duncan, a life-long enemy. Lee shoots himself and his body falls into the river. His old negro servant, Jasper, jumps into the water to save him and disappears. Mrs. Lee and her son, Arthur, are told the news. Duncan calls a few days later to claim her home, and the boy takes his mother away. He is sorry to leave Dorothy, Duncan's daughter, for the young people love each other in spite of the enmity that exists between their parents.

A few months pass. Duncan and Dorothy now live in Fairview Manor, but Duncan tells Dorothy the ghost of Lee appears to him in the study. Meanwhile Arthur returns, his mother having died, and Dorothy meets him secretly. In spite of Duncan's threat that he will shoot Arthur if he ever catches him with Dorothy, Arthur goes to the study with Dorothy one night to investigate her story of the ghost. Duncan discovers them. He sends Dorothy out, and is just about to fire at Arthur when Lee again appears. In his fright, Duncan overturns a lamp, and the room is soon a mass of flames. Duncan struggles for a while with someone and finally manages to get away. Terrified, he locks the door of the room. Dorothy knows that her lover is within, and begs her father to open the door, but he rushes out.

Fairview Manor burns to the ground. The next day Arthur is missing. The sheriff finds a ring bearing the Lee insignia in the ruins and is convinced that Duncan killed Arthur. Duncan is arrested. He maintains his innocence, declaring that the ghost of Lee attacked him as he was about to fire. This statement is hard to believe, and Dorothy's testimony only strengthens the case against her father. However, she goes to the ruins to investigate. She discovers an iron door covered with debris, and after this is cleared away, Arthur and Jasper step forth. Dorothy leads them to the district attorney's office. There Jasper explains matters. His master was not killed that night. Jasper saved him, but Lee, somewhat affected by the wound in the head, declared he would not go back until he could face his wife again. Then, when he discovered that Mrs. Lee and Arthur had gone away, he resolved to revenge himself upon Duncan.

He entered Fairview Manor one night and led Jasper to the underground room by means of a secret panel. There they lived, only stealing out at nights. Lee took pleasure in haunting Duncan, and the night before he had crept out for that purpose with the result already known. Arthur saved himself by darting past the panel. Jasper discovered him, and when the fire became too intense, led him to the underground room. The sheriff shows Jasper the ring. Jasper said sadly, "It's Massa's. He didn't find his way back!" Arthur sits by in deep sorrow, and Duncan, moved by a sudden pity, holds out his hand. Urged by Dorothy, Arthur grasps it.

THE GHOST OF TWISTED OAKS (Special—Three Parts—Nov. 11).—The cast: Valentine Grant, Florence Walcott, James Vincent.

Mary Randall, a salesgirl, the only support of her widowed mother, loses her position. In vain both Mary and her mother search for work. Mary receives a letter informing her that her late uncle's estate will be ready for distribution at any time she calls at her lawyers's office. Mary receives her share of the estate and she and her mother take a pleasure trip to Florida where they make their home on the Old Twisted Oaks plantation. Mary meets Jack Carlton, her neighbor, and they fall in love. The "Blue Gum" negroes arrive to work in the turpentine forest of the "Twisted Oaks" plantation. The Voodoo priest, after searching for a Diety, finds a snake and then proceeds to incite his superstitious followers. Mary observes this action and orders the Voodoo priest off her plantation, and he vows vengeance.

Mary and Jack become engaged and while at tea at Mary's home the old colored mammy tells them a legend of the "Ghost of the Twisted Oaks." It is as follows: Miss Madeline, the sweetest little lady in Florida, was loved by all the slaves on the plantation. She was engaged to be married to Master Billy. Billy and Justin, his rival, for Madeline's hand, fight a duel and Madeline, learning of this, rushes to the spot and is killed by a stray bullet. Ever since then the "Ghost" haunts the Twisted Oaks plantation.

At worship the fanatical Voodoos make a sacrifice of blood from the arm of one of their women. This is observed by Mary, who discovered in hiding is dragged to be used as a sacrifice. The vision appears before Jack and he is led to the sacrificial altar and is just in time to save Mary. The priest accidentally sticks his hand into the serpent's cage, is bitten and dies from the wound. The "Blue Gums" are driven from the plantation and Madeline's spirit rest in contentment, while happines comes to Jack and Mary in the after years.

A NIGHT IN OLD SPAIN (Nov. 12).—The cast: Helen Eddy, Jay Morely, L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Adelaide Bronti, George Routh, Adda Gleason.

Mary, a country girl, has had her head turned by romantic novels, and when Jed proposes, she laughs and tells him her lover must be brave and noble. Jed goes back to his work, disheartened, and Mary falls asleep in a hammock to dream that she is back in the romantic days of old Spain. She finds herself in a strange street, and seeks advice from a friendly Padre. He advises her to pray for a lover. Mary secures work in a tavern. Alonzo, a handsome young gallant, enters the place. Mary thinks he has come in answer to her prayer. He pays for his drinks from a well-filled purse, and this action is seen by the bandit, El Belvidero, and his sweetheart, Paquita, who hatch a scheme to secure Alonzo's gold. Paquita, who is a great beauty, flirts with Alonzo, and when he responds, tells him to serenade her that night. Mary has witnessed the action, and is heart-broken.

Alonzo leaves to keep his appointment. El Belvidero sees him and laughingly says it will be his last serenade. Mary overhears the remark, and learns the whole plan. Alonzo is to be drawn into a fight for serenading Belvidero's sweetheart and slain. The bandits leave the inn. Mary follows them. She finds that Alonzo has killed Belvidero, but is hard pressed by the other bandits. Mary rushes to climb the church tower to ring the bells in alarm.

Meanwhile, the King and Queen come to the tavern in search of their erring son. While they are threatening the inn-keeper for allowing Alonzo to depart, the bells peal forth. All rush without to discover the cause of the alarm. The fight is stopped just in time, and the bandits put in the stocks. Mary, learning that Alonzo is a Prince, throws her arms around him, but he casts her aside. The King, angry at Mary's presumption, orders his executioner to behead the girl. Mary's head is placed on the block, the axe raised, and then—. Mary, in moving the hammock, causes a broom handle to fall across her neck. In terror, she rushes to the field, and a great feeling of comfort comes over her when Jed puts his protecting arm around her. She tells him he is brave and noble enough for her now.

HIS THREE BRIDES (Nov. 13).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Arthur Matthews, Charles Griffiths, Jessie Terry, Adelaide Hayes, Nancy Baring, Patsy De Forest, Howell Autrim, Earl Western, Walter Duncan.

Willie Montague, a conceited old gentleman, still fancies himself a lady killer. In the morning he is a sight—minus teeth, hair and one eye, but when Simpson, his servant, gets through with him, he is all "dolled" out. He meets Deborah Pottle, a fat, elderly widow, who adores him, but he does not care for her. Then he meets Sue, Annette and Gladys, three charming girls, and thinks he has won all three. . Each girl is engaged, and they ridicule him behind his back.

Monty narrates his amorous adventures to his friend, Pickelton, who suggests that he ought to get married. The idea strikes Monty favorably, but as he loves all the ladies, he cannot decide which one to make a happy bride. The choice finally narrows down to Sue, Gladys and Annette, and Monty, unable to choose, Pickleton proposes that they write three identical proposals, select one by chance, and mail it. This they do. The wooden headed Simpson finds and mails the other two proposals.

The three girls determine to punish him. They come to his house in bridal attire and

The girls have also sent Deborah one of the proposals and she, too, comes around to marry him. At this he collapses and all seems lost, but when Deborah sees Simpson take off his hair and take out his eye and teeth it is too much for her, and she flies, leaving him to the bachelor's life forever.

EDISON.

CARTOONS ON A YACHT (Nov. 10).—The cast: Herbert Prior, George A. Wright.

Mr. Danbury, a theatrical manager, is visited by Ellis Harcourt, who seeks a position with one of Danbury's companies. Danbury tells him that, since he is unknown to him, he must prove his ability to act before being given any encouragement.

Danbury takes a vacation, and invites some of his friends to go for a cruise with him on his yacht. One of his guests produces the latest edition of the Animated Grouch Chaser. The first picture they look at is "Kid Kelly" in which the now famous juvenile gets a job as office boy. The kid and his dog manage to make things lively in the office, but at last the boss finds that he has had enough of Kelly's antics, and he and "Jip," the dog, are invited to take a permanent holiday. In "Silas Bunkum's Boarding House" we see Silas entertaining his guests with some amateur theatrisals. Among the gifted performers are Mr. Grunt, the pig, and Miss Quack, the duck. Mr. Moor, the calf cartoonist, does some clever stunts, and Mr. Grunt brings down the house with his imitations of well-known men.

While these cartoon pictures are being enjoyed, a tramp, woh has come aboard jus before the yacht's sailing, is enjoying himself while stowed away in a chest that stands on the deck near to the table where the party is sitting. One of the ladies, not caring to drink her champagne, pours it through a hole in the lid of the chest. The concealed tramp greedily laps it up as it descends through the hole. Later, at the height of their festivities, he startles everyone by suddenly popping out of the chest. Danbury, after hearing the tramp's explanation of how he got there gives orders to have him put ashore at the first stopping place. As he is about to be put ashore, he turns his back on the crowd and fumbles with his beard. When he turns around, he is revealed as Harcourt, the actor, who has been masquerading in an exceptionally clever "tramp" make-up. Convinced at last that he can act, Mr. Danbury promises him an engagement, and invites him to remain as a guest on the yacht.

THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN (Special—Four Parts—Nov. 12).—The cast: Grace Williams, Harry Linson, Robert Conness, August Phillips, Carlton King, Bigelow Cooper, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Robert Brower, Herbert Prior.

Helen Moore and Raoul Kent, nephew of Senator Foote, plan to elope. Raoul's machine breaks down on the road, and they go to a suburban hotel until morning. At the hotel, the "Boss" is holding a conference to decide upon the candidate for the office of district attorney. Hugh Graham, the Boss' choice, and once betrothed to Helen, enters the hotel to attend the conference. Passing the parlor, he hears Helen's scream. Rauol is making ugly advances to her, but Hugh breaks down the door, and beats Raoul for his viciousness. As Hugh emerges from the room with Helen to take her home, Gregory, defeated by Hugh for the candidateship, spies them. He draws his own conclusions from the scene. Helen, wrecked in health by her experiences, begs her father to take her away. He brings her to Washington to the home of his chum, Senator Foote, where she is to act as companion to Mrs. Foote. Hugh has, meanwhile, declined the nomination, under the threat from Gregory of exposure of the incident with Helen on the night of the Boss' conference.

A year has passed and election time draws near again. Called on business to Washington, Hugh sees Helen, gorgeously gowned, at the theater with Senator Foote. Unconscious of the Senator's identity, he follows them home, for his suspicions have been aroused. Raoul, leading a life of dissipation, climbs into the window of the Senator's library, bent on a mission to steal some important papers. Hugh, seeing him, senses a robbery and follows him into the house. In the struggle, Raoul is killed. Helen and the Senator rush into the room, and Hugh's suspicion of her seems to be confirmed. This time, Hugh accepts the nomination for Congress, and Gregory prepares to make public what he saw at the suburban hotel. He gives his story to the daily newspaper. The editor of the paper, anxious to ascertain the truth of Gregory's accusation, begins an investigation of the case. His efforts serve to clear up the entire story. Hugh discovers how Helen came to enter the Senator's household. Election day is over. Congressman Hugh Graham is making preparations to take up his duties at Washington, and foremost among these duties is the choosing of his home, so that he may spend his days at the Capitol, together with his wife, Helen Moore Graham.

A BROTH OF A BOY (Nov. 13).—The cast: Andrew J. Clark, Mrs. G. Clark, Frank A. Lyon, Florence Stover, Olive Wright.

Joseph Sullivan, a wealthy retired Irish merchant, "was a boy himself, once," so when he sees little Tim Connelly "beat up" a boy twice his age and almost twice his size, when the latter attempts to "swipe" the apple that Sullivan has given to Tim, he, Sullivan, declares the Irish urchin is "a broth of a boy"—a lad after his own heart. Thereafter, he sees Tim every once in a while, and predicts a bright future for him. Little Tim's lot in life, however, is not an enviable one. He is the sole support of his invalid mother—a mother who, the doctor has told Tim, cannot long survive without proper food and attention. Between "hustling" papers and other odd jobs, Tim manages to hold things together somehow, but it is a tough job.

Mr. Sullivan has a widowed sister, Mrs. Arnold, who lives with her daughter, a girl of fourteen, in a town a few miles away. After having received from this sister, whom he knows to be a very careless housekeeper and poor business woman, several requests for financial aid, Sullivan writes her that he will give her money to finish paying for her home, and asks her to send the daughter, Mary, to get the money. After receiving the money from her uncle, Mary is about to board the train at the station when the purse drops from the handbag she is carrying, the catch of which has not been properly fastened. Little Tim, coming along as the train pulls out, picks up the purse. He goes to a newspaper office and inserts a "Found" advertisement, and then goes home, whehe he hides the purse in a hole in the woodwork of the porch. That day the doctor tells him again that his mother must have more strengthening food and the proper medicine. Desperate, Tim resolves to risk spending part of the money he has found to get food for his mother. As he is taking the purse from its hiding place, he is seen by a policeman, whose suspicions are aroused by Tim's stealthy movements. As a result, Tim is arrested, but as he is explaining matters in the police station, Mr. Sullivan enters, he having learned that Tim is in trouble. Sullivan urges that Tim is an honest lad, or he would not have advertised the purse as found. He tells the police of how his niece has lost the purse through her own carelessness, and insists upon Tom's being allowed to go. Then he fixes things up all around and, after providing for his mother, tells Tim that he will educate him and start him on the highroad of a useful life.

ESSANAY.

THE DESTROYER (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 25).—Nell Craig, Edmund F. Cobb, John A. Lorenz.

Gordon Rockwell, a physician, and his friend, Kenneth Randall, share bachelor apartments together. They both fall in love with Frances Burnham. She accepts Randall's proposal of marriage. Rockwell holds no grudge against his friend on this account and in all sincerity wishes them happiness. Before marrying, Randall requests Rockwell to give him a physical examintation. In the blood test Rockwell's assistant accidentally substitues infected blood for that of Randall's. In perfect ignorance of the error, Rockwell breaks the news to Randall who immediately leaves the country. Later Rockwell discovers the mistake, but keeps it secret, and a year later finds he and Frances Burnham married. As time goes on his conscience gets the better of his and after writing a note to Randall explaining the error, he poisons himself. Randall returns in time to forgive him and is united with the girl he madly loves.

MISS FRECKLES (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Ruth Stonehouse, Marion Skinner, Frank Dayton.

Freckle's mother takes in washing in Hogan's Alley, while Freckles "rushes the can" for her lazy father and fights with other neighborhood Raga Muffins. After one of these fights, Freckles is given a good scrubbing in the washtub by her mother. Shortly after she receives a letter informing her that she has been bequeathed an immense estate, including a mansion on Fifth avenue. With her parents, Freckles moves into her new home. She is most unhappy in the midst of all her splendor and longs to be back in Hogan's Alley, where she can fight. About this time she awakens and is delighted to find it was only a dream.

THE LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: Darwin Karr, Richardson Cotton, Betty Brown, Harry English.

Jack Collins, a sea captain, is in love with Mary, Harper, daughter of the lighthouse keeper. Miguel Fernando, a Portuguese trader, being jealous of Jack, induces the crew to rise up in mutiny on Jack's next voyage. Jack is cast adrift in a row boat, and lands on a deserted island. Two years later he returns home to find that Fernando has betrayed and deserted Mary. To save her name, Jack marries her. The child is born and shortly after Mary dies. Years later Fernando returns to claim his child, and only the vision of his dead wife prevents Jack from killing him.

KALEM.

THE COQUETTE (Special—Four Parts—Nov. 1).—The cast: Rea Martin, Henry Hallam, James Cooley, Joseph Sullivan, Frank Wood, Horace Haine.

Knowing that the examination about to be made of his books will reveal his peculations, Cadwell confesses to his daughter. Enlisting the aid of Don, her sweetheart, who is employed in the same office, Doris saves her father from disgrace. As the result, however, the crime is shifted to Don's shoulders and the boy is sent to prison. This, although Hall, his employer, believes him innocent. Later, Cadwell compels Doris to become engaged to Lane, a man of wealth. Determined to wed no one but Don, Doris fascinates Harris, one of the prison guards, and induces him to aid her in her plan to free Don. In turn, she promises to become Harris's wife. Don escapes from jail, aided by the keeper. The two are joined by Doris and make a break for liberty in the girl's auto.

The pursuit is taken up and in the running fight which ensues, Harris meets his death. Cadwell learns of the escape and does all he can to bring about the capture of the fugitives. Don and Doris are wed. Hunted, the two are on the verge of desperation when they accidentally meet Hall. Resolved to shield her father no longer, Doris tells Hall the truth. The latter promptly takes the girl and the escaped prisoner to see his friend, the Governor. Cadwell is present during this interview. The father denounces Doris's story, but a slip of the tongue reveals the truth. The real culprit is overtaken by the retribution while Doris and Don know happiness once more.

DIANA OF THE FARM (Nov. 2).—The cast: Ethel Teare, Charles Inslee, Bud Duncan, William Beaudine.

Hard luck sticks to Bud and Bill like a burr to a horse's tail. Weary and footsore, the travelers reach Corntassel's place, but that unfeeling gent shows a disposition to send them on their way at the muzzle of a shotgun. Bud, however, makes a hit with Diana, the farmer's daughter, and but for the fact that Corntassel compels Diana to give to the dogs the food she had intended to present to Bud and Bill, the latter might have gotten something to eat. The hungry travelers try to milk the Corntassel cow, but his name is Tom and he butts the two back within the farmer's reach. In desperation, Bud and his pal try fishing for a meal. At the same time Diana goes down to the river's edge, dons a bathing suit and goes in for a swim. In swinging his hook, Bud accidentally annexes Diana's clothes. Seeing this, the girl shouts for help.

Corntassel leaps into the river, believing his daughter is drowning. Bud, under the same impression, gets into a boat and after rescuing the farmer, heads toward Diana. The latter, however, swims ashore. Turning upon Corntassel, Bud vows to drown him unless allowed to marry Diana. The farmer is about to consent when Bill, who has taken up the task of fishing, swings his line. The hook catches in Bud's trousers and pulls him into the river. Corntassel thereupon heads for shore. When Bud tries to land, the irate farmer hurls him back into the stream. Turning upon Bill, Corntassel throws him in after poor Bud. In vain do the unfortunates attempt to reach the river bank. While Corntassel chortles with glee, the two are claimed by Davy Jones.

THE SIGN OF THE BROKEN SHACKLES (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 3).—The cast: Harry Millarde, Alice Hollister, James B. Ross, Arthur Albertson, Nell Farrin, William McNulty.

Basil, sent to a West Indian island to look after his brother's interests, so antagonizes the planters that they form a secret organization for the purpose of throwing off the Harcourt yoke. Irene, who has just inherited her father's plantation, refuses to join. Basil is later slain under circumstances which cause Irene to believe herself the murderess. To keep the crime secret, the girl becomes a member of the order and vows to do its bidding. Shortly afterward, she leaves for America. There the girl meets Sir Henry, who is traveling under an assumed name. The two fall in love.

Blake, the head of the organization, comes to America. Irene's dream of happiness is shattered when Blake recognizes her lover. The girl is ordered to lure Sir Henry to her apartment, where, after being drugged by her, he is to be slain by Blake. Rendered almost insane by what has transpired, Irene resolves to die in her sweetheart's stead. Cara, Irene's West Indian maid, learns what is afoot and summons Sir Henry. The two arrive at Irene's apartment just as Blake is about to stab a figure lying crouched over the table. Leaping forward, Cara receives the knife in her own breast. Blake flees. Dying, Cara confesses that she had killed Basil because the latter, after making love to her aroused her jealousy by paying attention to Irene.

THE ROGUE SYNDICATE (Episode No. 2 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Nov. 5).—The cast: Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, E. F. Roseman, Phil Hardy.

Her pity aroused by the story told by Helen, who has been victimized by Ferris and his partner, Fenton, Marguerite determines to right the wrong. Cleverly contriving to obtain a position with the brokers, the heiress speedily discovers that the two, in spite of their crookedness, manage to keep within the law. Marguerite also learns that Ferris keeps the documents.

Shortly afterwards, Marguerite is requested to call at Ferris's home for the purpose of clearing up some important work. While in the house, the girl comes upon documents which show her employers in their true light. Ferris, however, catches Marguerite in the act of taking these papers. Seizing the heiress, he attempts to throttle her. Marguerite's cries are heard by Enright and his chauffeur, who are waiting outside the house. Rushing to the girl's rescue, they overpower Ferris. Fearing lest the heiress send him to prison, the broker turns over to her the sum he had stolen from Helen.

At this moment, Fenton enters. Taking in the situation, he holds the intruders up at pistol's point. Marguerite, however, plunges the room into darkness. Fenton shoots and then leaps through the window in his effort to escape. Police attracted by the shot catch the man before he goes ten yards. When Marguerite floods the room with light, it is found that Ferris had been wounded by his partner's shot. The men are shackled together and led away under arrest.

DANGER AHEAD! (Episode No. 52 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Nov. 6).—The cast: Helen Gibson, Clarence Burton, Robyn Adair, Franklin Hall, Jack Messick.

Sterling and Ella steal a jewelry salesman's sample bag and make their getaway by boarding a passenger train. Word is flashed ahead to Helen, who in turn notifies Bowring, a railroad detective. The train is flagged. The crook's suspicions are aroused, however, and they escape a second time. The jewelry bag is dropped by one of the men and comes into Helen's possession. The girl is ordered to guard the bag until a couple of detectives come for it.

Fate directs the footsteps of the jewel thieves to a station further down the line. To elude pursuit, the men board the local from the city. The detectives sent to get the jewel bag are seated directly in front of the crooks and the latter thus overhear them talking of their errand. By a clever ruse, Ella and his pal throw the sleuths from the train and hoodwink Helen into turning the bag over to them, instead. Once the bag is in their possession the thieves board an outgoing freight. Her suspicions aroused by their conduct, Helen commandeers a high-powered auto and goes in pursuit. A short cut enables her to reach the Leering Cross ahead of the train. Waiting for the freight to pass, Helen leaps from the auto to one of the flatcars as it flashes by. She then rushes forward, informs the engine crew as to what has transpired and brings about the capture of the thieves.

VITAGRAPH.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES (Nov. 1).—The cast: Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea and Isadore Marcil.

Finley Jones, well-to-do bachelor, rents a comfortable little cottage and sits down prepared to enjoy suburban life for a while. His is the center cottage of three; on either side of him live two maiden ladies; Ann Hooley and Belinda Byers. Ann is a buxom, practical-minded woman, while Belinda is very slim, very coy and romantic. Both maiden ladies see Jones and determine to set their caps for him. Belinda scores first when her pet dog runs away, but Ann starts a fake fire and breaks up their little tete-a-tete, by begging Jones to come and help her put out the fire. Then commences a rivalry which grows keener and more strenuous all the time. Jones has a sick spell, and the two women shower him with attentions until he gets nervous and hardly dares go outdoors. Then both women send him Leap-Year proposals, and that settles it—Jones and his valet pack up and, at midnight, escape from the house. Next morning the women are treated to the sight of a moving van carrying off the furniture and a "To Let" sign on the

THE SULTAN OF ZULON (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 2).—The cast: Hughie Mack, Donald MacBride and Dorothy Kelly.

Ram Si Ko, the Sultan of Zulon, is fat, fair and over forty, but very desirous of having an American bride to add to his harem of beauties. His secretary suggests he advertise for one, but Ram is well aware that no camera was ever built to take his features, and is about to give up, when the cunning secretary suggests they quietly snap handsome young Frank Kent, the Government Consul on the Island of Zulon, and whenever anyone answers, send them that photo, purporting to be the Sultan.

This plan is carried out when Amy Leigh, a young American seamstress answers the ad, then passage money is sent her. She sails for Zulon, and on finding who the real Sultan is, she faints dead away in the most approved style. But Kent has followed the girl, and at the critical moment does the "hero act" and rescues the fair maiden in the most amusing and sensational manner. The Sultan angrily orders out the "army" (consisting of a dozen natives), but Kent takes advantage of an old law in Zulon which states that whoever disputes the Sultan's power to rule must fight his Majesty a duel. Kent challenges the Sultan and the latter is forced to accept.

A lively fight ensues—a sort of combined wrestling, boxing and broadsword duel—which results in an ignominious defeat for the Sultan. Amy, who has watched proceedings with horror, throws herself into the young hero's arms, and sobs out her joy upon his manly breast. Kent is now Sultan and Amy becomes Sultana.

A FAMILY PICNIC (Nov. 3).—The cast: Donald MacBride, Kate Price, Paul Kelly and Jack Brawn.

Mr. Jones, his wife and six children start out for a basket picnic in the woods. Little Jimmie insists on taking his beloved Great Dane pup along, and the animal proves a white elephant as soon as they try to board a trolley car. The result is, they have to walk to the picnic grounds. There they get into a row with a group of Italians, and while boating on the lake, the pup leaps overboard and Jimmie after him. Jones and his wife plunge in after Jimmie, but as the water is only two feet deep, they simply get wet. Jones waiting for his clothes to dry, gets into a barrel, which plunges downhill, spreading destruction and terror all along its path, finally fetching up against a tree and bursting open. Jones, with the help of his wife, gets away from the cops, and tries to get rid of the pup, but all his efforts are in vain. He thinks surely he has lost the animal by dropping him from a taxi window, but when they get home from their "quiet little picnic," there is Mr. Pup sitting on the doorstep, and Jones disgustedly gives it up.

THE EBONY CASKET (Nov. 4).—The cast: William Duncan, Anne Schaffer, Myrtle Gonzalez, Alfred Vosburgh, George Kunkel, Otto Lederer, Carleton Weatherby and George Stanley.

Martin Trent is always in debt because of his fondness for gambling. His Aunt Cornelia comes to his rescue financially, many times, but finally insists he must marry her neice Letha and settle down—or be disinherited. Auntie's heart is wrapped up in her Angora cat, "Mark Antony," and when Mark gets sick, she at once phones for Doctor Black. Doc is angry at thought of his attending a "sick cat," and refuses the case. The doctor's son, Will, is in love with Letha, but when poor Mark Antony dies, this affair is nipped in the bud, for Auntie blames the doctor.

Milton gets in trouble again, and not daring to ask his aunt for more money, steals the ebony casket in which she had always kept her jewelry, but is seen by Letha. Milton and his pal, Spike, on opening the casket are stunned to find it contains only a beautiful example of the taxidermist's art; Mark Antony—stuffed! An argument, a fight and a small riot follow, which embroils Will, and they all land in the police station. Auntie is phoned for and she and Letha rush there. Letha identifies the real offender—Milton—and Auntie gives her consent to the marriage of Will and Letha.

BEAUTIFUL THOUGHTS (Nov. 5).—The cast: Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Florence Natol.

Henry Latimer's wife, Mary, becomes imbued with the tenets of the "Beautiful Thoughts," those people who believe that if you think nothing but beautiful thoughts about everything and everybody, your soul will expand like a flower to the morning sun, while you, yourself, will become trenscendently beautiful—or words to that effect. Henry is a perennial grouch and getting tired of the ridiculous posing and speeches of his wife, and Miss Todd, "her "Beautiful Thoughtist" friend and teacher, determines to cure his wife of her fad. He has a few "beautiful thoughts" on his own account, takes some girlies out to dine, and after absorbing a goodly quantity of wine, returns home in a "beautifully elated" mood, and makes love to Miss Todd, in his wife's presence. That drives all the beautiful thoughts out of Mrs. Latimer's head in no time, and Henry's plan to cure his wife of her foolish notions, succeeds perfectly. She humbly promises to leave "Beautiful Thoughts" alone and sends Miss Todd away in a hurry.

ANSELO LEE (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—Nov. 6).—The cast: Antonio Moreno, Mrs. Nellie Anderson, Naomi Childers, Donald Hall and Frankie Mann.

Old Mrs. Lee, a famous witch and fortuneteller of the gypsy tribes, has a son, Anselo, a strapping, handsome fellow. Gertrude, daughter of wealthy Mrs. Carlton, visits the gypsy camp with a party of her friends, meets Anselo, and is at once fascinated by him. A charming romance follows, which, however, is shadowed by strong objections on both sides. Mrs. Lee opposes the affair for Gertrude is a frail girl, and the old witch has read in her palm that she will die young. Mrs. Carlton makes strenuous efforts to cure her daughter of her fascination because of social barriers and the fact that she wishes Gertrude to marry Van Buren, a young society man.

But it is the supreme love, which, on Anselo's part approaches reverence, that sustains them despite all obstacles. Anselo teaches the girl the wildly-beautiful Romany love songs, and when—as old Mrs. Lee had foretold—the girl falls from her horse and is seriously injured, he would come and sit at her feet with his guitar and sing them to her; soothing many an hour of pain. Affairs come to a climax, the old witch and Mrs. Carleton finally succeed in separating the young couple, and Anselo loses all track of the girl. Heartbroken, he follows his wandering tribe for many weary months.

Finally he locates Gertrude again, but she is very sick, and after a brief period of happiness, she dies in his arms, after their last kiss of farewell, while he is left to wander the Romany roads grief-stricken and alone.

NO TICKEE—NO WASHEE (Nov. 8).—The cast: William Shea, Kate Price, Johnny Cahill.

Mike Callahan has but one collar, and that soiled, to attend the annual outing of the Bricklayers' Union with, so he sends it to Wing Lee, the Chinaman's, to have it done up in a rush. The boy loses the very important half-ticket; consequently when Mike calls for his collar he is told with many gestures, "No tickee—no washee!" Mike gets mad and gives battle to the Chinks, but they are too many for him and he has to run for his life, pursued by the whole crowd of Chinamen. An exciting chase follows, and the police force are dragged from their various pursuits of fishing, sleeping and guiding schooners over the bar to join in the chase, and they finally succeed in corralling the pursuers and the pursued. All march back to the laundry, where Mike, escorted by the police, searches until he finds his collar, just in time to join the Local Union in the parade.

FOR THE HONOR OF THE CREW (Broadway Star Features—Special—Three Parts—Nov. 9).—The cast: William B. Davidson, James Morrison, Muriel Ostriche, Hattie De Lara, Edward Elkas, Charles Cook.

Robert Brent and Dick Morgan, the former wealthy, the latter poor, are chums at one of the big colleges until they both fall in love with Viola Scott, a college girl. Then Morgan, while still pretending friendship, grows to dislike Brent. Both men are candidates for the Varsity crew, but chafing under what he calls his hard luck, Morgan loses his ambition, breaks training, and loses out in his examinations. When Brent passes them with high honors and is favored by Viola, Morgan's jealousy and hate know no bounds. As the big Regatta Day draws near, Brent is made stroke and Morgan only qualifies for substitute.

At a secret time-trial, the Varsity eight breaks the record, and Morgan to get money to bet on his crew gambles heavily. He falls into the clutches of Rosenberg, a bookmaker, by losing some of the crew's money entrusted to him, and the bookmaker forces him to agree to cripple his boat crew. The night before the big race, Morgan goes to the boathouse and succeeds in cutting one of the oars underneath the leather covering. Rosenberg has promised to shield Morgan, if, by betting heavily on the

My Dear Bill:

You're on the right track, and those small savings in operating expenses of which you speak are the things which are going to make themselves felt when you cast up your profit at the end of the year. There is no economy in operating in a way which only SEEMS TO BE CHEAP for the reason that it entails the minimum of expenditure for the time being. What you want to figure out is the cost in the future, or covering the months to come during which you expect to continue in business.

The saving which you are effecting in your bills for electric current through the use of the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is quite an item. You write as though you were surprised that such a saving could be made, but I could easily have told you long before you installed the screen, as my experience in the use of RADIUM GOLD FIBRES has taught me that this "selling point" in favor of the screen is by no means a myth. Am confident that during the many years in which I have been in business the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS in use in my several houses have saved me more than enough money to pay for the original cost of installation. And it's a simple enough matter, too, for the screen surface is made with such care for detail as to the refraction of light that the minimum of light will give the maximum of results. By simply looking at a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN you can see that there seems to be a lot of light imprisoned in the screen itself.

From the way you are running things, I have a conviction that you are going to make good, and it pleases me very much. If I can help you in any way, let me know.

The next day, at a critical moment in the big race, Brent's oar breaks, and only by leaping overboard, thus lightening the boat, are the Varsity crew enabled to win. It was a heroic deed, for Brent was already exhausted by the long pull, and that evening he is given an ovation, at which his engagement to Viola is announced. An attendant tells Brent of the cut oar and that Morgan was seen at the boathouse the night before, but "for the honor of the crew," the affair is kept secret and Brent helps Morgan to get away and secure a fresh start in life.

HATS IS HATS (Nov. 10).—The cast: Hughie Mack, Edwina Robbins, Donald MacBride.

Mike, the Interurban Express Agent at West Corners, receives a consignment from the 5:15 train of one calf, uncrated, and a package marked, "Handle with care! Valuable." Mike is a perennial grouch and on answering the insistent ring of the telephone learns he is talking to the owner of the $50 hat contained in the precious package. She is an old maid about to depart for the Fair with her beau, and the hat is the result of her parting with the savings of years, just for the occasion.

During the course of her pert conversation with Mike, he sees out of the corner of his eye the calf step on the precious box, smash it and then devour the hat. Horrified, he hangs up at once, then sits and ponders: "Hats is hats and calves is calves, but whin the hat is in the calf, how can I deliver the hat, and how'll my report read?" Mike gives it up and appeals to the head agent, who tells him to deliver calf and all. He does so, and on learning the circumstances the old maid faints dead away with a shriek. But Mike angrily points out that the company usually charges for repacking an article which has been damaged, and feels he has been very lenient in this case, so—"I should worry!"

SIS (Nov. 11).—The cast: Arline Pretty, Thomas Mills, Garry McGarry, Jay Dwiggins, Edwin Robbins, Florence Natol.

Sis, a country girl, and Bill, her sweetheart, have a falling out over some foolish trifle, and part, swearing never to speak to each other again, although both are sincerely in love. Harold, a well-dressed city boarder, meets Sis, and fascinated by her natural piquancy and charm, pays ardent court to her. She does not care for him, but encourages him to make Bill feel badly. The latter's jealousy knows no bounds, but he is obliged to keep silent. Sis accompanies Harold to the picnic given by one of the local organizations and Bill disconsolately trails along, unobserved and unnoticed.

While they are seated on the shore of a big lake a piercing shriek is heard. A child is adrift in a canoe and being rapidly swept towards the falls but a short distance away, while the frantic mother is imploring help from the bank. Harold's opportunity has come to make himself a hero and win Sis, but he falls down completely, and Sis, disgusted with his cowardice, dives into the lake herself. She overtakes the canoe and with Bill's help (he having plunged in also), rescues the child. That evening Sis renounces Harold in scorn and when Bill proposes promptly accepts him.

ROMANTIC REGGIE (Nov. 12).—The cast: Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Florence Natol.

Reggie Rembrandt is the romantic clerk in charge of the Art Department at Tracy's and is particularly fond of reading sentimental love stories. Peggy, his sweetheart, grows tired of his neglect on account of his reading craze and they have a little falling out. Meanwhile, an inmate of the Kuperskill Asylum escapes, calling herself Princess Marie, reaches Tracey's in New York, and going up to Reggie's counter hands him a card. It reads: "You are my soul-mate, I will wait you midst the hills of Kuperskill."

The lady is veiled, and Reggie is in raptures over his first romantic adventure. Detectives arrive in search of the "Princess," and Peggy, who had sorrowfully witnessed the coming of the veiled lady into Reggie's young life, enjoys a good laugh. But Reggie makes all haste to the Kuperskill hills, and after putting up at the Inn, sallies forth to meet up with his beloved adventure. Peggy follows him unobserved, and disguised with a heavy veil, leads him a merry chase by pretending she is the Princess. The real crazy woman has been caught, and Peggy leads Reggie right up to the asylum gate. The climax is a huge laugh.

THE WOMAN'S SHARE (Special—Two Parts —Nov. 13).—The cast: George Holt, George Kunkel, Anna Schaeffer.

Silas Hummel, a farmer, and Martha, his wife, are examples of the hard-fisted, miserly and narrow-minded type of farmers, which fortunately are fast disappearing. Martha gets up before the chickens, prepares breakfast by lamplight, and slaves all day for her grouchy and never satisfied husband. He is a sharp dealer in selling stock, and often makes a tidy sum, but every cent of it goes into the bank, until everything is sacrificed to the man's god—gold. They have no luxuries, bare necessities. Chickens and eggs must be sold, not eaten, and had it not been for a kindly neighbor's advice to "buck up and ask for new dresses and things you want," she might have gone on and on in the same way to the end. But aroused by the neighbor's words, she takes a basket of eggs and trades them for enough calico for a new dress. She gets a severe lecture from her husband on the subject of spending money recklessly, but she doesn't care.

Silas receives an offer to joint partnership with a western prospector in a hunt for a rich vein of gold reported at Death Valley and his greediness aroused, accepts. During his absence, Martha finds the key to her husband's safe deposit box at the bank, and in her newly-acquired spirit of independence goes there and finds a comfortable fortune in cash and stocks. Silas, after prospecting in vain for weeks, gets lost in Death Valley and his terrible position brings home to him what a miser he is. Fortunately, after some terrifying experiences, he is found by a wandering prospector and cared for. But his partner comes across a skeleton which he believes is Silas and sends word home to that effect.

Martha hesitates no longer, divides the money in halves and prepares to give her husband's half to charity, and enjoy the rest. Silas, cured of his love for gold, returns unexpectedly, and in an intensely dramatic scene wins back his wife's love and every one's respect.

one does not inform the other which results in Mrs. Jabbs hiring a male sleuth in the person of Loos Pokes and Mr. Jabbs hiring a female Sherlock Holmes.

The two sleuths are unaware of each other's identity and there the trouble begins. Gum Shoe Pete, the cracksman, gets into the house. Mr. and Mrs. Jabbs hear the noise but think it is "only the detectives." Meanwhile the two detectives have met and are spooning in the moonlight (they should worry about burglars).

While Pete is piling his booty in his sack, by an unlucky chance, he stumbles and the pack falls, burying him. The detectives hear the noise. So do Mr. and Mrs. Jabbs. All four appear on the scene. The female sleuth grabs Mrs. Jabbs and the male sleuth grabs Mr. Jabbs and start for the station house. But explanations follow just as the real crook is discovered and all ends as it should.

THE IDLE RICH (Two Parts—Nov. 3).—The cast: Harry Gribbons, Eva Nelson, May Emory.

Mr. Rawsberry was lying in bed until his wife came in and told him to get up, declaring her intention of giving a lawn party that afternoon. He arose and went out in the park. There he saw a stately beauty whom he tried to get acquainted with, but instead of getting acquained he got a black eye from the beauty's little fist. He came home to his wife's lawn party, but his right optic was so discolored that the guests made remarks. He then explained how he got it in saving a little child from a railroad track. He got away with it nicely until his wife requested him to meet the guest of honor.

The guest of honor was none other than the beauty. Also another guest was present who knew about Mr. Rawsberry's peeper and he laughed so long and loud that Mr. Rawsberry shoved this gentleman down a coal hole. He got out, however, and came back just at the wrong time, or, in other words, when Mr. Rawsberry was having his troubles with a lady in prehistoric costume and her jealous partner. The unpleasantness did not cease here either, as all the guests got into the excitement unwillingly. Mrs. Rawsberry has given no more lawn parties, and Mr. Rawsberry has saved no more children.

CUPID AND THE SCRUB LADY (Nov. 7).—Gwendoline, a sentimental scrub woman, loves a business man who has offices in her building on the top floor of a skyscraper. Forbidden to use the elevator, she climbs the stairs many times a day in order to see the boss.

He ignores her and her sentimental day dreams anger the janitor, who loves the stenographer, who is also worshipped by a clerk. She loves the boss and Cupid seems to have bewildered all the people in the building. One day a Black Hand man who has been refused money by the boss wrecks the office and Gwendoline saves the day and is liberally rewarded by the boss, who saves her from suicide. She sinks into his arms a happy woman.

REX.

SUCH A PRINCESS (Three Parts—Nov. 7).—In the olden days, King Normanus had a son, Prince Norman, who disliked the fair sex so, before his death, he issued a decree that the Prince must marry within ninety days. If his wishes were not obeyed, his nephew, Prince Charles, should ascend the throne. The Councillors to Prince Norman present several ladies and urge him to choose a bride, but he is unable to do so, and informs them he "will not marry unless to his liking, for all the Kingdoms in the world."

The ninety days are almost at an end. Only one day remains before Charles will become King, but, fearing Prince Norman, at the eleventh hour, may succumb to some Princess' charms on the archery field, Prince Charles plans a hunt and induces the Prince to join him. In the forest, Wild Flower, a beautiful girl, is mistaken for a wild boar and almost shot. Prince Norman follows her to her grandmother's home in the wood and partakes of some refreshment. While there, he is warned by Wild Flower's fairy godmother, that he may lose the throne, so he marries this daughter of the woods and takes her to his kingdom.

Prince Charles' plot has failed. Wild Flower shocks the Court by her behavior, and, feeling unhappy in her surroundings, discards her robes, dressing in the same clothes when the Prince met her, and with her kid, whose entrance to a banquet disturbed the equilibrium of the diners, determines to return to her grandmother's home. She slips away from the royal bed chamber, but is stopped by the castle ghost, who bids her follow him. He leads her into the forest and points to Charles' advisors plotting under a tree, telling her to beware of them. He disappears and her Fairy Godmother appears and shows her in a cauldron, a plot to assassinate Prince Norman. She hurries back to the palace in time to save him. The Coronation Ceremony is performed and all ends happily.

NESTOR.

A CIRCUMSTANTIAL SCANDAL (Nov. 1).—The cast: Ray Gallagher, Neal Burns, Billy Rhodes, Corinne Lesser.

Ray and Neal are pals and their girls, Billie and Corinne, are chums, respectively. During an automobile ride the young couples agree to get married. After the ceremony, the two happy couples domicile in "Lovejoy Court." One day Billie decides to go to town and just as she comes out of the door, she meets Neal, who has decided to take a trip to town, too. The two leave together, and their departure is witnessed by Ray and Corinne. Corinne does not like the idea and comes over to talk it over with Ray, but he refuses to think it is anything but a coincidence.

That night Billie and Neal again meet, and he gallantly offers to carry her bundles home. Their arrival at the house is witnessed by both Corinne and Ray. Ray can now believe Corinne's fears were based on some facts, so when Billie comes in he begins to bawl her out. Neal, too, comes in for a "panning" at the hands of his wife. Each couple gets an invitation to a dance, and, during the preparation Ray and Corinne begin to quarrel with their spouses about the accidental meeting. The end of the affair is that Billie determines to go to her mother's, while Neal decides to go to town, and so again they meet and exchange confidences. Satisfied that each is the inured party Billie and Neal decide to take in the dance. Now Corinne misses her husband and calls up for Billie, but finds Ray alone and they, too, compare notes. Deciding that each has been deserted by their better half, Ray and Corinne go to the dance.

The two husbands see each other and, knowing that they are in the wrong being with each other's wife, they determine to slip away and return home. Each seeks his partner and tells the news; and the two girls are doubly anxious to return home. Boarding taxis they set out, one couple following the other, but on the way are stopped by bad roads. The boys recognize each other, and in a sickly manner try to joke. The girls don't like this, so jump from the taxis and, when the cars start, are forced to trail along behind. They are finally discovered, and after explanations are made all around, the air begins to clear.

FATHER'S HELPING HAND (Nov. 5).—The cast: Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry.

Ray enjoys a life of ease as "Secretary" to his wealthy father. He spends his large salary, makes love to Billie, the stenographer (which lets him out as far as his office activities are concerned), and runs up enormous bills in his leisure hours. Father is indulgent. But when the office is so cluttered up with bill collectors that there is scarcely any room left for clients, he loses his temper and tells Ray that he is discharged until he can pay his own bills.

Ray discovers that collectors of such bad debts as his own, get fifty per cent. for themselves, and he concludes it will be a clever notion to open a collection agency of his own and dun his father. By means of a disguise and Billie's connivance, Ray gets into father's private office and demands payment for his son's debts. Father refuses furiously. Ray goes back to his "Collection Agency," changes his disguise, and returns to the attack as a detective. He flashes a phony warrant on the old man and completely bluffs him. Father pays the money in cash, an enormous sum, and Ray leaves with the bills receipted in full. Later, with his hands full of the fifty-fifty cut, he goes back to father in the role of a prodigal son who has made good and father welcomes him with open arms.

Mrs. "Slim's" personal charms suffer in comparison with the exposed charms of Miss Magneto, and "Slim" strays from the family corral in pursuit of the beach beauty. "Slim" is no Adonis, himself, and Miss Magneto and her girl chums put him through the paces which accentuate his physical angles.

Mrs. "Slim," worrying over "Slim's" absence, unloads the five little "Slims' on Willie Pepper, the Beach Beau Brummel, and trails "Slim." Willie has his troubles with the little "Slims" and "Slim" "gets his" when Mrs. "Slim" discovers him with Miss Magneto. "Slim" is not allowed by Mrs. "Slim" to change his clothes and is compelled to pilot the family "Tin Lizard" home through the night.

THE REWARD (Three Parts—Nov. 5).—The cast: King Baggot, Frank W. Smith, Mrs. Ford, Robert Fisher, Edna Hunter, Harry Springler and Lillian Beyers.

The Cafe Bon Vivant is a notorious place from coast to coast. Downstairs is the cafe, where people of every class and station in life congregate to revel long after all other places have closed their doors for the night. Upstairs, the tables, roulette wheel and other forms of chance games entice and amuse, in open defiance of the law. Here, in the cafe, Jack Hutchinson rules as a sort of manager and overseer. There are very few who realize Big Jim Davis is other than an habitue like themselves. He is in reality the owner of the cafe.

Big Jim Davis is, in private, Jasper Smythe, retired banker and broker, a man highly respected and well liked by all of his acquaintances in the quiet little world in which he and his family, a son, Egbert, and a daughter, Claudia live. One evening, when Claudia Smythe, with three young men of her acquaintance and two young girls, like herself, are quietly enjoying a game of cards in the big Smythe mansion, one of the boys daringly suggests a slumming party. They drive out into the country, just past the city limits, where the Cafe holds sway. They are immediately spotted as newcomers and given a great deal of attention. Jack Hutchinson protects Claudia from her intoxicated escort and wins her gratitude.

Hutchinson can't get the image of the little society girl out of his mind, and Claudia goes home to dream of him. Rhoda Dunbar, a habitue of the cafe, has fallen in love with Jack. In one of his visits to the home of Rhoda, she observes, with sorrow, his manifest indifference, and accuses him of being in love with someone else. He admits that he is.

Jack meets Claudia one day in the park and she invites him to her home. He is shocked at seeing a large painting of Big Jim in her home, and asks Claudia who it is. Jack is amazed when he is told it is Jasper Smythe, her father. Rhoda employs a detective to find out who the girl is that Jack loves. The detective gets into the house and discovers that Claudia is Big Jim's daughter. He brings this information to Rhoda. That night, at the cafe, Rhoda flirts with Big Jim boldly, and when she playfully calls him "Jasper Smythe" he is dumfounded. Then she tells him her story of his daughter and young Hutchinson, what she has seen herself, and what she surmises. Big Jim asks Jack to confirm the story. He tells the old man it is true, and Jack is "fired."

Jack visits Claudia that night and finds her brother taking a large amount of money from his father's safe. He remonstrates with the lad, who rushes away. Jack, in turning, steps on a burglar alarm. Instantly the house is roused. Jack, with the money in his hands, is arrested as he will not betray the boy. Claudia promises never to see Jack again and so he is released. In the meantime, conscience-stricken, the boy confesses all to his father, who sends for Jack and makes peace with him. A few days later Smythe brings home an old friend from out of town, and Jack proves to be the son of this man, who had run away from home a few years before, after a quarrel with his father over cards. Father and son are reconciled and the way is open for the development of the romance between Jack and Claudia.

BIG U.

THE MARKSWOMAN (Nov. 4).—The cast: Adele Lane, S. Zeliff, Jack Wilson, Edw. Sloman.

At a trading post in the northwest, Mary Hall lives with her father and crippled brother, Billie. Jules Du Boise, a French Canadian, is in love with Mary, but she despises him. When she refuses to marry him he takes her in his arms and kisses her. She is struggling to free herself when her father enters, and the intruder is thrown bodily out. Jules vows vengeance. Hall receives a messasge from the president of the trading post asking him to meet him at another post. He leaves, first telling Mary that a shipment of coin will be in that afternoon to pay off the men at noon on the following day. From the woods Jules sees the money-laden canoe going up the river and decides to rob the Hall store that night.

When the money arrives Mary realizes her father has forgotten to give her the combination of the safe, but she and the men believe the money will be all right as long as they lock the door. Jules sees and overhears all this from the window. After Mary and Billie have retired, Jules climbs through the window and begins collecting the money. Mary, hearing a noise, goes into another room in time to catch Jules in the act, but he has heard her coming and, covering her with a gun, makes his getaway in a canoe. Mary and Billie dress quickly and follow. Some hours later, Jules, thinking he is practically free from pursuit for the time being, decides to take a rest, so that when he pushes off again at sunrise, he is surprised on looking back, to see Mary and Billie, who have been paddling all night and gaining on him. He starts a spurt, but Mary raises her rifle and shoots the paddle out of his hand, which renders his canoe helpless. Jules at once jumps into the water and pushes the canoe to shore.

Landing, he takes his rifle and money from the canoe and starts off into the woods, followed by Mary and Billie. A shot from Mary goes through the thin part of the stock of Jules' rifle, breaking it off short. His gun useless, Jules takes a chance, and, dodging from tree to tree, tries to get away, Mary and Billie following. Suddenly Mary trips over a twig and falls headlong. She tries to get her feet again, but falls—she has sprained her ankle. Billie then picks up the rifle and starts after Jules. Jules has rounded the corner of a rock and sees Billie coming. He hides, and as Billie goes past him, springs onto him from behind and they wrestle for possession of the rifle. In the struggle they get up on a huge rock, which looks down on the river forty feet below.

Meanwhile, Mary seeing her brother's danger, is crawling on her hands and knees, nearer and nearer. Presently a canoe rounds a turn in the river, paddled by Hall. He runs his canoe ashore and starts up, recognizing Bill as he comes. Just as he reaches the top of the rock, Jules tears Billie's hands from him, grabs him and throws him into the water below. Pushing Jules aside, Hall jumps off the rock to save Billie. Jules looks down and sees Hall. He picks up the rifle which Billie dropped and, pointing it at Hall, takes aim. Mary draws her revolver and shoots. Jules drops dead. Mary crawls to the edge, and sees her father saving Billie. Hall and Billie carry Mary back to the canoe. The money is recovered—and all ends well.

THE MEASURE OF LEON DUBRAY (Three Parts—Nov. 2).—The cast: Hobart Henley, Louella Maxim, William Quinn, "Mother" Benson, Robert Pettie, Mollie Nixon, Harry Tembrook.

Leon Dubray and his old mother live in the Northland, where Leon makes a meagre living trapping. His one desire is to catch a black fox. Nearby lives Janet Besson and her father, who is secretly a poacher. Long ago Janet and Leon have pledged their love, but unforseen circumstances have held them apart. Roget, the forest ranger, leads a double life. He is secretly in league with the poachers and uses his office to help them. Determined to rid the country of the poachers, the mounted police offer $500 reward for the capture of the gang. Janet has learned of her father's alliance with the poachers, and pleads with him to quit them, and he promises to do so. Leon catches the circuit doctor and, after an examination of his mother, who had been run down by a poacher in his escape from the police, is told that her only chance of recovery is to undergo a delicate operation which will cost $500. Roget, being hard pressed, turns on his pals and receives the reward. Besson and another are captured and sent to prison, while Roget accuses Leon of turning in the men to get the money for his mother's operation. This is told to Janet in such a manner that she believes it, and the two become estranged.

Leon's mother dies and he goes to the city to obtain employment. The ranger works on Janet's feelings to such an extent that she promises to marry him, and arrangements are made, but when she discovers his crooked work she refuses him. She, too, goes to the city to look for work. Leon has secured work and risen to the position of foreman of a lumber yard. Besson escapes from prison and is found in the yard by Leon, who gets him a change of clothes and assists him to escape. Janet has secured work as a waitress in a cafe and one day is located there by Roget, who attempts to make up with her without avail. He forces her to give him her address and tells her to meet him there at three o'clock. That evening Leon brings Besson to Janet's and they are talking when the ranger enters and sees Besson. Roget follows them in the house and plans to return Besson to prison, when Leon takes a hand and forces the ranger to put on the prison suit, hiding him in a closet. Janet summons a policeman and the fuming ranger is taken to prison. Leon tells of his love and the three plan to be on their way to another country by the time Roget has proved an alibi.

THE METTLE OF JERRY McGUIRE (Two Parts—Nov. 6).—The cast: Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, L. D. Maloney.

Helen is operator at Bells. Jerry McGuire, engineer on the local freight, and Tom Thornton, his fireman, are both rivals for the hand of the girl. Jerry is preferred and Tom tries to get Jerry to take to liquor again, a habit that he has overcome. Tom is unsuccessful. Jerry and his bride return from their honeymoon and Tom persuades Jerry to take a drink or two to celebrate the event. Jerry does so. Both are called for the local that day, and Tom has a bottle of whiskey handy which he gives Jerry. Jerry takes a drink and does not observe the signals of the train crew as he backs down onto his train. The engine hits the head end of the train and knocks in the end of a box car. The trainmaster appears, smells whiskey on Jerry and also finds the bottle on him. He is temporarily suspended and later on is discharged for being under the influence of liquor when handling his engine. Jerry mixes with a bunch of bad eggs, and in a quarrel over a game of cards he hits a man. The man goes down, the gang disappears, and when the police arrive Jerry is arrested and sent up for five years.

Jerry's time is up and he leaves the penitentiary. His wife refuses to have anything to do with him, and he manages to get a job with the section gang. Tom is running the local, and is still after Helen, who refuses to give him an answer. Jerry works hard in an effort to gain his wife back again. Helen's daughter, Pearl, is the pet of the train crews and she is often in the cabs of the engines which stop for orders. One day the local stops to unload an automobile consigned to the station and Pearl climbs into the cab. The train crew go over the right of way and get a watermelon or two from a patch. In the meantime, Pearl has boarded the cab of the engine and pulled open the throttle. The train starts away. Jerry is in the office with Helen and they come out to find out why the crew are pulling out without orders.

The crew rush in. Helen sees the automobile and she and Jerry make a wild dash for it. Boarding the machine they set in pursuit of the train and, getting alongside, Helen leaps to a car in the center of the train, while Jerry dashes on ahead in the machine and manges to reach the passing track ahead in time to throw the switch and turn the freight on the siding as the opposing passenger dashes by. The passenger pulls up and the crew come back for explanations. The superintendent on the train overhears the story and tells Jerry to take the train back. They board the engine and set back for the depot, where Jerry and his family make a fresh start.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

THE LONG CHANCE (Six Parts—Nov. 1).—The cast: Frank Keenan, Mr. Church, Mr. Blaising, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Newman, Miss Boughton, Stella Razeto, Mr. Berrill, Mr. Benson.

Harley P. Hennage, at the opening of the story, is a gambler about 35 years of age, who spends much of his time at the Red Dog Retreat at Gila Junction. Marie, the town belle, respects Harley as the best friend she has. Harley, on the other hand, has never declared his love, and it is not until Marie falls in love with a strange prospector that she has an intimation that Harley loves her, too. Harley resents Corblay's intrusion, and tells him to get out of town. When he learns of Marie's love for Corblay, he relents and leaves himself. As a newcomer of the Silver Dollar Retreat in distant San Pasqual, Hennage turns to business and forgetfulness, and in time comes to be known as the worst man in town.

Marie's husband, meanwhile, has gone out into the desert accompanied by his faithful Indian and Carey, of Boston. Carey assaults Corblay and escapes with the burros and the gold which was discovered on the way to the claim. Corblay dies in the desert, leaving a note in his canteen and an inscription on a sandstone ledge, reading: "Stranger, look in my canteen and see that I get justice." Later, Hennage, hearing of Marie's poverty and the arrival of a child, arranges to have Marie come to San Pasqual, where he secures her a position as cashier in the eating house. For the moment Hennage's hopes have revived, but when he sees that the girl remains true to the memory of her lost husband, he holds himself aloof.

Eighteen years elapse. Hennage has attached himself like a father to the now grown child, Donna. One afternoon Marie is taken sick and is carried to her hut. Hennage is sent for and is with her when she dies. Marie gives him the location map of her husband's claim, telling him that while she has hated it because it stood for the desert and her tragedy, yet she would like him to search for the claim on the chance that perhaps there may be something there and that Donna will now need it. Donna, about this time, meets and falls in love with Bob McGraw, a young man who has just filed on certain water rights in the Sierras on the hunch that the surrounding land is to be open to entry. Borax O'Rourke is infatuated with Donna and attempts to force his attention upon her. She is shielded by Hennage and later by McGraw. Hennage, in searching for the lost claim, runs across the canteen that belonged to Corblay and sees the inscription on the ledge. He starts back for civilization.

About this time Carey shows up in San Pasqual in search of one Bob McGraw. He is anxious to buy the rights which McGraw has filed on. A hold-up has been committed and the evidence points to young McGraw. Carey discovers where McGraw is located and attempts to use his information to force the young man to sell. Hennage, returning with the story of Corblay's death and the canteen, meets Carey, and with the Indian's aid, learns that Carey is the man who killed Corblay years before. Hennage forces restitution to the child, Donna. He meets death in a gun duel with O'Rourke, whom he had previously told to get out of town for his insult against Donna. The Indian, left to guard Carey, stabs him to death.

JERRY TO THE RESCUE (Oct. 29).—The cast: George Ovey, Gordon McGregor, Janet Sully, Goldie Colwell, George George.

While crossing Farmer Weed's premises, Jerry is spied by the farmer's daughter. Evidently disliking Jerry's appearance, the dog trees the intruder. Jerry's yells attract Farmer Weed, who rescues him. Over in the chicken yard Goldie takes in the merry situation. Jerry has one look at the girl and is caught—it is a case of love first sight. Pleading that he is hungry Jerry is served by Goldie with two of her home made pies, and in a shady nook of the yard hungrily tests them.

At this moment Terrible Tom, the villain, passes by in his car. Himself in love with Goldie, he resents Jerry's presumption, and pushes him out of the way. In retaliation Jerry uses the pie with telling effect and with Goldie by his hand rushes from the scene. Intent upon punishing Jerry for his outrageous conduct, Tom visits his henchmen and formulates a plan of revenge. They capture Jerry and Goldie, take the former to a deserted shack, chain him to a stout pillar, and set a

obart Bosworth in "Colorado" An Augustus Thomas Masterpiece

19th Prize Release
Broadway Universal Features
Released Nov. 15.

Directed by Norval MacGregor.

Augustus Thomas, America's leading playwright, wrote "In Missouri," "Alabama," "Arizona," "Colorado," and if given time he will very likely write up the whole derned United States and Long Island. But he never wrote anything bigger than "Colorado" in his roll call of states. This remarkable film presentation, like the spoken play, has all the bigness of that great western state, and with Hobart Bosworth in a really star part it is immense. Mr. Bosworth is a college professor who goes to Colorado for his wife's health. A land shark and an army officer sell him worthless land; the Colonel makes love to the invalid wife, irrigation makes the land valuable, the soldier man is exposed, and the strenuous situations are as thick as blackberries in September. The direction, settings, both indoors and out are up to the Bosworth standard, and the directing shows Norval MacGregor knows the West and how to show it on the screen. Imagine, if you can, the noise the average feature concern would make about a play by Augustus Thomas, and try to figure how you could pay the price they would charge you—then be thankful that this splendid feature is released on the regular Universal Program at so slight an advance in cost that you can make real money by booking it.

"Manna" with Edna Maison

Prize Uplift Drama
Gold Seal—2 Reels
Released Nov. 16.

Directed by Henry Otto.

Novel in theme and sincere in treatment, there is a charm about this beautiful play that gets to every one who has seen it. And it is a safe bet it will get to every one of your fans who has the privilege of seeing it. An invalid girl at her window drops scriptural quotations written on cards to the street below. How they influence their finders forms a story that for heart interest and sustained strength is very much out of the ordinary. It ought, with all the meat there is in it, be stretched to a five-reeler, but here you get it on the regular Universal Program—giving you a good chance to laugh at the "feature fanciers" and their ridiculous prices.

Mary Fuller in "Lil' Nor' Wester" With Paul Panzer and Glen White

Prize Sea Coast Drama
Victor—3 Reels
Released Nov. 17.

Directed by Lucius Henderson.

You have seen our Mary in a hundred characters or more, but you never saw her look more charming than in this strong emotional drama of the East Coast Fisheries. Imagine Mary in a big sou-wester and rubber hip boots, with three men in love with her—Well, you'll fall in love with her yourself, and that will make it unanimous. Gosh, how that girl can act! And how everyone falls in love with her all over again every time they see her! Did you ever hear of any such class on any other regular program release in your life? We did not. Make it unanimous again.

Cleo Madison in "The Ring of Destiny" with Joe King

Prize Western Drama
Rex—2 Reels
Released Nov. 18.

Directed by Cleo Madison.

If there is a busier young person than Cleo in the business we'd like to hear about her. Cleo's heart, mind and soul are in the making of good pictures. She is a cowboy girl in this bully play, and afterwards a cowboy (to all appearances) who wants to, and finally does, avenge her brother's death. But Cleo isn't satisfied with all this activity, so she directs the picture herself, and—well, the fans can't get too much of Cleo, and this picture will make a hit with every mother's son and daughter of them.

"Blood Heritage" with Betty Grey and Gladden James

Prize Romantic Drama
Imp—3 Reels
Released Nov. 19.

Directed by Brinsley Shaw.

Blood will tell, says the old adage, and scientists prove that this is literally true. Similarity of blood proven by laboratory tests will prove relationship. That is the novel basis for this thrilling play that for absorbing interest, and unexpected developments, ranks high. It is an unusual story, and the love interest is not only there "as you like it," but it is a big part of the whole plot. Features are being made nowadays with less meat than this three-reeler released on the Universal Program.

"The Heart of a Tigress" with Paul Bourgeois, Madam Bourgeois and Betty Schade

Prize Wild Animal Drama
101-Bison—3 Reels
Released Nov. 20.

Directed by Norval MacGregor.

Honest, now, folks, wouldn't the so-called animal pictures make you laugh after seeing what the Universal calls animal pictures? Goodness, gracious! In a recent so-called animal feature we saw a woman walk right by a live lion. Of course, the lion never moved or showed any interest, but it was an "animal picture," wasn't it? Get wise. The fans are. They know that the Universal Zoo is the biggest in the business; that the Universal animal pictures are made without faking; that every one of them is full of real danger for the actors, and that all this real danger and the thrills show in Universal Animal Pictures. Be sure to book this one.

Ben Wilson in "The Mystery of the Locked Room" with Dorothy Phillips

Prize Mystery Drama
Rex—3 Reels
Released Nov. 21.

Directed by Ben Wilson.

There was a murder committed all right, and someone had tried to open a window from the outside. But they hadn't succeeded, for the window was locked, and so were both doors, yet the man was found dead clutching a locket; there were signs of a struggle, but no signs of suicide. The locket was Ben's, and he was accused, but he solved the mystery and made one of the strongest mystery releases you have seen for a good long time. There's punch plus in this picture and Mr. Soakem of the Flivver Features would charge you a week's receipts for rental if he ever released anything as good.

lighted bomb beside him; Goldie is taken to the railroad track and tied to it.

Given strength by desperation Jerry breaks his bonds, throws the lighted bomb from the window just before it explodes, and then starts on a search for Goldie. Meeting a police officer he requisitions his aid. In just the nick of time Jerry arrives to rescue Goldie from sure death before a swiftly moving train. Having saved Goldie, Jerry, with the policeman, starts after the gangsters. A pitched battle follows, but in the end Jerry is triumphant and the conspirators turned over to the authorities.

WHO'S WHO (Nov. 5).—The cast: George Ovey, George George, Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Mabel Newton.

Father and mother quarrel at the breakfast table at a time when May and June, twins, are quite young. May, being "mother's child," sides with mother, and June, being "father's child," sides with father. Father leaves the home with June without mother's knowledge. After a lapse of years May marries Jack and, accompanied by mother, goes on a honeymoon trip, which includes a visit to a mountain resort. Simultaneously with their arrival father and June also become guests of the same hotel.

On the way to the hotel June spies, Jerry, her sweetheart, father objects to Jerry and takes occasion to assert himself. Shortly after Jerry appears at the hotel and finds May in the lobby. Taking her for June he embraces May, protesting his love, in spite of the father. May resents and is rescued by her husband, who gives Jerry a knockout blow and then proceeds to register. While father is taking a nap June sends a note to Jerry asking him to call. Jerry's greeting is somewhat boisterous and awakens father, who throws him out, landing him in the bridal chamber across the hall occupied by May. Partially dazed and when able to sit up Jerry is astonished to see May (who he thinks is June) and he attempts to embrace her. This disturbance attracts the attention of Jack coming up the hall, who settles it by throwing Jerry out of the room.

June, having been attracted by the cry for help from May, as she runs down the hall, comes out in time to see Jerry thrown out and she helps him to his feet. Jack, also going into the hall to see the result of his work, sees June (whom he believes to be his wife, May, succoring the man he has just punished for bothering his wife. Indignant, he pushes Jerry out of the way, picks up June and carries her into the bridal chamber, with June struggling violently and Jerry looking on in astonishment. June escapes and falls into her father's arms. In this position Jack finds them. Believing June to be May and not knowing his father-in-law, he compels the old gentleman to defend himself with a revolver. The mix-up might have gone on indefinitely but mother enters the scene and solves all the complications. In the end father goes to mother, June to Jerry and May to Jack.

THE LAW OF DUTY (Nov 7—Two Parts).—The cast: Joseph Singleton, Frank Bennett, Edwin Harley, Mr. Mack, Maxfield Stanley, Daisy Robinson, Miss Aamold.

General Von Lomberg, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, receives a message from the Emepror permitting the General's son, Lieutenant Von Lomberg, freedom to continue his studies in foreign lands. The General has selected as a special tutor Professor Du Bray, a French scientist of international reputation, living in the north of France. Perhaps a sentimental reason enters into this decision, for Madame Du Bray was an old sweetheart of the General's.

A line in the Emperor's message commands Lieut. Von Lomberg to stop at the palace on has way to France. At this interview we do not tell our audience what takes place between the Emperor and the Lieutenant, but shortly after Lieut. Von Lomberg arrives at the Du Bray's and is established as a student in that household, where he falls in love with the daughter, Valerie, and at the outbreak of the present war joins the French army as an aviator. General Von Lomberg, hearing of this, disowns his son.

After a time, fate brings General Von Lomberg as a conqueror to the north of France, where Du Bray's home is commandeered as the General's headquarters. His son, the Lieutenant, is captured and brought before him. The climax is so unusual that it is best left untold until it is unfolded on the screen.

CENTAUR.

WHEN AVARICE RULES (Nov. 4—Two Parts).—The cast: Goldie Colwell, Harry Linkey, John Oaker, Lorena Foster, Jack Abbot, Capt. Jack Bonavita, Vera Robson.

Marie Summers is heiress to a rich estate and fond of wild animals. John Carney, a worthy young man, is her most ardent suitor. Adam Flint, guardian and executor of her father's estate, plans to marry Marie himself. He knows that the trust imposed in him will revert to the man Marie weds and that if this happens his extensive speculations will be discovered. He has converted large sums of money to his own use and lost heavily in questionable mining ventures. He figures that with Marie as his wife his rascality will go unpunished.

Flint proposes to Marie and is refused. Subsequently Carney is accepted. As soon as Flint hears the news he schemes to force Marie into a marriage with himself. He accompanies her to her favorite wild animal show, where she visits the cage of "His Majesty," the great African lion she has adopted as her playmate. Antonio, one of the keepers, cruelly prods the beast. This arouses Marie's indignation. She bitterly denounces Antonio and threatens to report him to the management. Flint is quick to see Marie has made a bitter enemy. He instructs the keeper to meet him in a secluded spot in the grounds and while Marie's attention is distracted by the approach of Carney and his sister, Myrtle, who have come to join her, Flint slips away and induces Antonio to join him in a conspiracy to kidnap Marie.

Antonio suggests that Marie be imprisoned in a hut guarded night and day by a number of ferocious lions. This plan is eventually carried out. As soon as Flint is notified that Marie is securely locked in the hut, he tells Carney that Marie, having decided to break her engagement with him, has gone away to avoid seeing him. Carney is heartbroken. His sister insists there is something wrong and talks over the matter with her sweetheart, Bob. In skirting the Flint premises for some clue that will lead to the discovery of Marie's whereabouts, Myrtle and Bob witness a conference between Flint and Antonio and see Flint hand Antonio a sum of money. When Antonio sulks away Myrtle and Bob follow him. Antoinette has noticed her husband's peculiar conduct and by watching him discovers Marie's presence in the hut. Her jealousy aroused, she reprimands Antonio. A fight follows. Running from the house, Antoinette meets Bob and Myrtle to whom she tells the cause of her trouble.

Flint, believing he has disposed of Carney, visits Marie under the protection of Antonio. Flint tells Marie that to gain her liberty she must marry him. She refuses, declaring she would rather be the death bride of a lion. Flint leaves her to her fate. Returning home he prepares to abscond with the remainder of Marie's fortune. Carney, now doubting Flint's statement that Marie is false, goes to the zoo with Myrtle and Bob and, with the aid of Antoinette, Marie is saved. Upon being arrested as a kidnapper Antonio implicates Flint and the police go after the dishonest guardian. Marie and Carney intercept him as he is about to flee the country. He is defiant but the officers of the law appear and overpower him. The entire scheme is exposed and Carney and Marie are again united.

CASINO.

THE REFORMER (Oct. 24).—The cast: Alice Dovey, "Budd" Ross, Mildred Warren, Marcia Harris, James Levering, Jules Cluzetti, Phin W. Nares.

"Bring the rice, girls. Who's got the old shoes?"

Here they are at last; demure little Edna in her traveling suit, and resolute young Wilton, with his hair plastered down and a smile that he's trying to swallow. Down the steps they come, followed by Mammy, the jolly old negro maid, who has just earned the easiest five dollars she ever made. Edna has bribed her not to tell that she is a bride. Mammy promised. Through a shower of rice and old shoes, the happy pair escape to their automobile and the honeymoon begins.

Mammy's first duty as protector of the secret of "de young miss" is to deny that Edna is a bride when the Pullman porter laughs. The argument with the porter grows hotter and hotter. Mammy not only tells him where he gets off, but she puts him off. In her indignation she gives him a punch and he topples from the swiftly moving train. Mammy thought she had sent the porter to his death, but she had only sent him to a lawyer. As soon as he dusts himself off he gives his case to the first lawyer he meets. This happens to be the husband of a renowned reformer, Mrs. Baggs.

On the train with Edna and Wilton it happens that Mrs. Baggs is traveling. She is to deliver a lecture in the very town where the honeymooners make their first stay. Mrs. Baggs is famous for her lectures on the subject of how innocent girls are lured away from home. She stays at the same hotel. She watches the happy bride and groom depart for a view of the city in an automobile, and says to Mammy:

"Just married?"

"No, indeed, dey ain't married," replies Mammy loyally, "dey's jest good friends."

That settles it. Mrs. Baggs has found a flagrant case that will make her lecture more spicy, and give her more newspaper space. There is just one thing for her to do. Soon the police are after Edna and Wilton, but they manage to get back to the hotel. Here Wilton is attacked by Mrs. Baggs and her reformer friends and allies. When Edna faints, Mrs. Baggs sees her wedding ring and is soon persuaded that she has been following a false trail. Wilton is so indignant, however, that he threatens to sue Mrs. Baggs for defamation of character.

Wilton goes to the police station to enter his complaint against Mrs. Baggs. In the meanwhile the porter and Mr. Baggs have arrived, and cause Mammy's arrest for assault and battery. Mammy was glad to find she had not murdered the porter, but she didn't enjoy going to jail. While Wilton is at the station, poor Mammy is brought in. Baggs takes charge of the scene, secured damages for the porter and also the release of his wife. Mr. Baggs has been a much henpecked individual, but his success on the present occasion makes his wife recognize that he is the head of the family.

The porter and Mammy patch up their feud and go off arm in arm. Mr. Baggs returns home with the lady who had been his better half, but is now his lesser half. Edna and Wilton look on the matter finally as just a laughable episode. So the honeymooners go on mooning.

NOVELTY.

PUTTING PAPA TO SLEEP (Nov. 1).—Daughter wishes to marry the Young-Man-of-Her-Choice. But Papa shuts her up in her room. She manages, however, to smuggle out a note to her sweetheart, telling him that that evening she is going to dope Papa's wine, and that she will depend upon her lover to have a ladder ready beneath her bedroom window. The note is read by a crook. He plots with his pal to rob Papa's safe. The pal, disguised as a cook, obtains a position in Papa's household. That evening, Daughter, on whom, meanwhile, Papa has taken pity and whom he has released, puts an opiate into the decanter of wine, pours out a tempting glass for Papa, and runs upstairs to pack her bag. Papa, having a headache, decides not to indulge in wine. He turns it back into the decanter and goes to bed.

Meanwhile Daughter and the Young-Man-of-Her Choice have eloped in an automobile. The coast being clear, the "cook" admits his pal, and they advance upon the safe. Papa is roused. He comes upon the crooks, who hold him up at the point of a gun and force him to exchange clothes with the cook's accomplice. When the police arrive they arrest Papa for rifling his own safe. The lovers have stopped to make a tire change. The tire rolls away down the street, and the man and the girl give frenzied pursuit. A strange young man waylays the runaway tire and claims it for his own. The dispute is interrupted by a policeman who marches all three to the station house. Here Papa, Daughter and Sweetheart are brought face to face. Papa's identity is established, and the officers rush back to recover the real thieves. They find them well doped with the opiated wine. Papa gets back all his money and his valuable papers intact. In his gratitude to the elopers, he drops the automobile tire around them and proclaims his blessing.

Meanwhile the two policemen have taken a pull at the wine, and marched off the bogus cook and his companion. The wine soon works upon the officers of the law. Both thieves escape, while their captors, overcome with sleep, succumb in the middle of the sidewalk.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (Episode No. 4—"The Master Touch"—Two Parts—Oct. 25).—Violet and Fanny Warden, whose father's ruination and death has been caused by a criminal clique of fianciers, are being aided by Wallingford and Daw to recover a part of the stolen funds. J. D. Prine is the next name on the list, and this is the way it is led to the sacrificial stake.

Violet and Fanny learn from Qualey, a discharged employee's of Prine's that Prine and his associate bankers have $350,000 in bad loans for which they may be sent to jail. They relay this information to Wallingford and Blackie Daw. Wallingford goes to the crooked bankers and telling them they are wise to their game, offer to take over the bankers' bad loans for a consideration of $100,000. The frightened bankers gladly agree to this and J. Rufus takes over their debts, receives $100,000, and immediately proceeds to double cross the pirates.

J. Rufus has speculated $5,000 in a lot next to Prine's general store on Main street, and in an excruciatingly funny scene has thousands of skunks shipped to him, for use, as he says, in the chemical factory he is about to start there. The awful smell drives customers out of Prine's store adjoining, and J. Rufus sells $5,000 option on the farm to J. D. Prine for $10,000.

THE POLICE DOG TO THE RESCUE (Pathe—Cartoon Picture—Oct. 25).—Mrs. Dinge, having decided to take a half holiday, provides her squalling half-tone production with the liquid nourishment that gave Milwaukee a place on the map. She then departs for her raid on bargain counters unknown. Another infant, of the bleating bovine variety, likewise deserted by a mother who carries the nourishment with her, endeavors to scrape up an acquaintance with Dinge, Jr.; but the miniature chocolate cream drop finds that the calf's tongue produces on his calabash complexion the soft, soothing effect of a coarse-grained emery wheel, and registers his objections to this sort of facial massage at the top of his lungs.

The Police Dog hears sounds of distress, and rushes to the rescue. But the calf has it on the pup, and doesn't take any pains to conceal it. The "K-9" sends out a signal of distress. But sleeping is the thing that Office Piffles does beat, and it takes more than a police whistle to wake him. The pup finaly gets the cagey sleuth to realize that something's amiss. Piffles manages to rope the cussed calf, who, as soon as he realizes he has Piffles on the string, starts gaily forward at a speed that finally lands the luckless officer down a chimney and onto the furnace griddle. Ugh! Meanwhile, the Police Dog exercises his talents as a peacemaker, with results that would make the Hague Tribunal green with envy.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (Part 10—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—This chapter of the Bird pictures shows us first, the familiar barnyard hen, teaching her brood to distinguish good seed from bad. Then comes the pheasant, which lays its eggs on the ground in April—orange-brown, ande sometimes pale-blue eggs, which generally number from twelve to fourteen. Next young pheasants are shown, and then a whole hungry brood, scurrying for food in a wheat field. Next comes the kestrel, one of the fiercest birds of prey, and closeup pictures showing its natural equipment for combat. A sparrow hawk on the lookout for prey is shown, along with some young sparrow hawks, ungainly looking creatures. There is, to close, a remarkable closeup view of the hawk's most important business asset—his eye.

THE ELEVENTH HOUR (Victory—Three Parts—Oct. 27).—Lieutenant Albert, in love with Princess Sonia, who is also loved in secret by James Orloff, a military attache, finding his affair suspected, confides to the care of his friend, Count Claude Revel, for Sonia, some of the letters she has written him. Revel, a spy for a foreign country, receives orders to get a certain paper entrusted to Sonia's father by his government. He makes an appointment to meet Sonia at a deserted hunting lodge in the country, and there betrays his trust by offering to give her her letters only on condition that she secure for him papers in her father's possession. Orloff, jealous of Revel, has followed him to the rendezvous, and on hearing Revel's traitorous demand attacks him. In the scuffle, Revel is killed. Orloff gives Sonia her letters and departs.

Revel's murder remains a mystery for a long while until his sweetheart, Princess Mercedes, finding a note from Revel making an appointment with Sonia gets from Sonia the information that it was Orloff who killed Revel. From Suite 1005, Candler Building, New York City then on Mercedes' life becomes consecrated to the task of bringing Orloff to justice, and to this end she makes his intimate acquaintance and spends most of her time in his company. Orloff falls madly in love with her, and she, unwittingly with him; so that at the crucial moment she finds it almost impossible to carry out her plans for vengeance. She finally does steel herself to the dreadful question and deniunciation when, in a tremendous scene, he tells her of Revel's true business, and how it was that he, in protecting his country's honor, slew him. The picture ends happily with Mercedes and Orloff happy in their complete understanding.

WHIFFLES WOOS AND TROUBLE BREWS (Pathecolor—Oct. 27).—Our old friend Whiffles has such a weakness for the fair sex that sooner or later he'll come to grief. He is in love with the daughter of a man whom he greatly fears. Whiffles manages, surreptitiously, to slip his loved one a note, making an appointment for the following day.

Margaret, in her tremulous excitement, loses the note, which is found by one Larry Davis, a promising young cutthroat, and one whose essays into the field of blackmailing are without parallel. Larry takes the note to a confederate of his, Bill Bryan, a big, pompous bluffer, whom he persuades to burst in upon Whiffles at his rooms, where, as per appointment, he will be taking tea with Miss Margaret, and, impersonating Margaret's father, blackmail the scared Whiffles out of $10,000.

The scheme works, until Margaret, peeking out from behind the door, where the prudent Whiffles has concealed her, denounces the impostor, and incidentally saves Whiffles $10,000. There is a happy ending with the arrival of Margaret's real father, who surprisingly rejoices in their love affair and blesses them both.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 9—"The Yellow Peril"—Two Parts—Panama Films—Oct. 28).—After being rescued from a frightful death at the hands of the Sun Worshippers by American sailors from the cruiser "Albany," on which Neal Hardin is a gunner, Annette rejoices over the recovery of the map of her inheritance, "Lost Isle."

The Hardin party, in their trip southward, land at Tortuga, a mosquito ridden island, where the ship's doctor finds a couple of cases of malignant yellow fever. The American party are immediately quarantined in their hotel and an attempt made to cure the sufferers and check the advance of the disease. Annette and Mrs. Hardin volunteer as nurses, and the first step made is to warn the ignorant natives against the disease carrying mosquitoes. Annette, as nurse, comes to be known as the "little white angel," so tenderly and sympathetically does she go from cabin to cabin to help the native sufferers.

Hernandez, Ponto and the Brute, following the Hardin party see in the mosquito pestilence a chance to rid themselves forever of Annette and Neal. Annette and Neal are lured to Hernandez' hut by a lying native, begging their assistance for his sick child. There, after a tremendous fight, they are made captives, and let out to a dismal swamp, where, with the coming of night the voracious mosquitoes will make short work of them. How they fare during the long, formidable jungle night is subject for this, the most thrilling episode yet shown in this remarkable serial.

The next episode will be called "The Rolling Terror."

COMRADE JOHN (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Oct. 29).—Herman Stein, leader of a new religious cult, "Beauty Through Toil," secures the services of John Chance, an architect, to build a model community for him, with the stipulation that the buildings be heralded as the work of his followers. Before starting on the work, Chance takes a trip to Paris, where, at a Carnival, he rescues a beautiful American girl from the riotous masqueraders. They part, knowing nothing more of each other than that her name is Cynthia, and his John.

Cynthia, aboard ship on her way home, meets Prophet Stein. He sees in her an ideal High Priestess for his cult, her beauty (though not acquired "through toil") appealing to him as a splendid advertising proposition. The girl is credulous, and Stein appealing to her native idealistic sense, wins her to his cult. When Chance returns from Europe he goes to Beechcroft to start his building and is surprised to find there the girl he saved in Paris. Here, in the course of building construction many thrilling episodes ensue, in which Stein, already married, attempts to make love to Cynthia, and is frustrated by the watchful Chance.

Stein has been steadily appropriating the money entrusted to him by his disciples, and, in the tremendous final scene, with his followers clamoring for his life, and the Beechcroft buildings burning, he attempts an escape with his peoples' funds. He is felled by a falling beam, and buried in the smouldering ruins. Cynthia is saved by Chance, and finds in him the unalloyed realization of her ideals.

DOUGH NUTS (Starlight—Oct. 30).—Whoever it was wrote "troubles never some single," must have been inspired by the checkered career of Heinie and Louie. We'll have to start this story with Mrs. Walter Blister, instead of with Heinie and Louie, because if she had never been entrusted with a magnificent emerald by her husband, she wouldn't have set out for the jeweler's; and if she hadn't set out for the jeweler's, she wouldn't have dropped her bag going there. And if she had never dropped her bag going there, why, they would never have stolen it and this story wouldn't been. But she was, and she did, and so did they, and there you are!

Heinie and Louie made way with the bag securely wrapped in a lump of baker's dough. But here comes the complication. A baker and a cop, in full cry after a thief who'd just stolen some kneaded dough, come upon our luckless pirates, and take from them their dough, which wasn't his at all. With it goes the silver bag, and the emerald in it. The baker, satisfied, goes back to his oven and proceeds to bake the dough into bread. Heinie and Louie down to their last nickel, buy a loaf of bread, and find in it—yes, you guessed it. But this is not the last of it by a long shot. Heinie and Louie do not, of course, keep the emerald. But their attempts to make a one-reel comedy of unusual gaiety.

THE GREEN CLOAK (Kleine—Five Parts—Oct. 20).—The cast: Irene Fenwick, Blanche Aimee, Della Connor, Kathryn Brook, Anna Reader, Roland Bottomley, John Davidson, Frank Belcher, Richie Ling, William Anker.

Upon Ruth McAllister's return with her father from a Western trip, John Gilbert calls to renew his attentions. He immediately notices a change in her and is greatly pained when she refuses him, not because she does not care for him but for reasons that she will not divulge.

A stranger, in the meantime, calls, and, rushing past the maid, stops breathlessly in the presence of Ruth and Gilbert. Astonished at the intrusion, Gilbert is more amazed when Ruth, seeing the intruder, faints. Asked to explain, the stranger tells Gilbert to ask Ruth. Regaining her composure, the stranger tells Ruth that he will not leave until he has had a talk with her, whereupon Gilbert, furious, is about to attack him as Professor McAllister enters. To Gilbert's surprise, Ruth introduces the stranger as Mr. Gerald, a friend whom she met while traveling and then excuses herself while the men chat about things in general. Upon the entrance of Wilkins, the butler, Gilbert is quick to discern the expression of fear that comes over the countenance of the stranger as a half smile curves the servant's lips, who, after making an unimportant announcement, retires. Then, with the excuse that some very important letters require his immediate attention, Gerald announces his intention to go, but the Professor, now suspicious, insists that he use his library for his correspondence.

Alone in the library, Ruth enters and upbraids Gerald for coming to the house. He tells her that his life is in danger and begs her to help him escape. This she promises and leaves to call a taxicab. Dinner is announced and the Professor, opening the library door to call Gerald, is shocked to find him dead, and a green silken tassel, similar to those which adorn Ruth's cloak, clasped in his hand. Shortly after the arrival of the police, Ruth returns in the taxicab and entering the house, utters a shriek of laughter—not hysterical, but a laugh of savage joy—as she beholds the dead man. Questioned as to the man's identity, Ruth at first refuses to answer but finally admits that she had married him while in the West. With a strong case of circumstantial evidence against her, she is arrested and taken to headquarters, where she is held for trial on a charge of murder.

Who Gerald really was and how the tangled skeins of destiny were finally unravelled make a charming, convincing and intensely interesting mystery story.

THE SENTIMENTAL LADY (Nov. 3—Five Parts).—The cast: Irene Fenwick, Frank Belcher, John Davidson, Thomas Magrath, Jack Devereaux, Richie Ling, Anna Reader, Lila Barclay, Della Connor, Ben L. Taggart.

Amy Cary, owner of a controlling interest in the Peoples Gas Company, of which her uncle, Peter Cary, is president, is practical but sentimental. It is indefinitely understood that she is engaged to marry Norman Van Aulsten, whose intriguing father is vice-president of the company. Van Aulsten, Sr., has secretly purchased worthless Suburban Lighting Company stock and plans to unload it at an exorbitant price on the People's Gas Company, depending on his son to induce Amy to vote approval of his plan. Amy goes to Trout Lake Camp to spend the summer, where she meets a chum, Helen Nelson, who invites her brother Bob, a young attorney, to join her. Young Van Aulsten also is a visitor, paying considerable attention to Amy Cary, but clandestinely making love to, and deceiving to the point of defiling, the daughter of Johnson, the camp guide.

Amy's uncle, innocently falling into Van Aulsten's scheme to unload the worthless lighting company stock on the People's Gas Company, writes, asking Amy her opinion regarding it. Her reply brings him to the camp also, where he is quickly followed by Van Aulsten, Sr. Nelson fathoms Van Aulsten's intentions regarding the worthless stock, and also sees that Van Aulsten is depending on his son's marriage to Amy to further his machinations.

He invokes the aid of his sister's sweetheart, who invites Amy to go for a row with him. She steps into the boat, Nelson quickly follows, leaving his willing friend ashore. Nelson talks plainly to Amy, telling her he is taking her to her uncle who has gone to a nearby island for a fishing trip, and that he purposes telling her uncle about Van Aulsten's scheme. He apparently arouses her ire by advising her not to marry young Van Aulsten. Arrived at the island they are surprised not to find Amy's uncle, who had returned to the camp for forgotten fishing tackle. The situation is tense when they discover that their boat has gone adrift. Meanwhile Amy's absence has occasioned alarm, and when Bob's friend tells of the proposed trip to the island, a rescue party is made up of Amy's uncle, Van Aulsten and his son. Arrived there they find Amy and Bob trying to prepare a belated meal. Nelson is asked to leave while her uncle and Van Aulsten urge Amy to get ready to got at once with them to the city, where a meeting of the Gas Company stockholders is scheduled the next day. Bob suspects their intentions, and promptly sets their boat adrift also. When this is discovered, there is general indignation in which Amy apparently joins. Bob is berated, but excites Amy's sentimental nature again when he takes to the water for a long, perilous swim, in an attempt to recover their boat. "Isn't he a hero?" she asks of young Van Aulsten. "I'd like to see you do anything as brave as that."

The marooned party is finally rescued by Bob's relief expeditions and taken back to the camp, where, as they land, Johnson the guide, attempts to shoot young Van Aulsten. Amy prevents the tragedy, but scorns young Van Aulsten when she learns of his behavior toward Johnson's daughter. In rapid sequence, a happy termination of the situation is reached—but the bankrupt lighting company's stock is still on the market.

PENNINGTON'S CHOICE (Quality—Five Parts—Nov. 8).—The cast: Francis X. Bushman, Wellington Playter, H. O'Dell, William Farris, Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar, Lester Cuneo, Morris Cytron, James J. Jeffries.

Robert Pennington, a wealthy young New Yorker, falls in love with Eugenia Blondeau, a girl from the woods of Canada, who is a guest of her aunt, Mrs. Allison, in New York. Eugenia loves him, but will not marry him until he has proven himself a "man" in the eyes of her father, Jules Blondeau. Pennington agrees to go to the fastness of the Canadian woods for the test. Eugenia gives him a letter to her father and tells him about her sister, Marie, who is her twin, and looks exactly like her. Unknown to Robert she hurries home, arriving there ahead of him.

Robert is met at the railroad station by Pierre, a guide employed by Blondeau. Compelled to walk the long trail to the Blondeau house he becomes foot sore and disgruntled. His complaints arouse Pierre's contempt. Arrived at the Blondeau cabin, Robert undergoes a physical examination at the hands of Blondeau, who tells him he is "soft," but that he will give him one month of primitive life to better his physical condition. Robert goes to live with Pierre.

"Marie," the supposed twin sister, uses every artifice possible to win Robert's affections. He becomes very fond of her, but remains true to Eugenia. Louis and Roland Blondeau, her brothers, who do not disclose their identity to Robert, make life almost unbearable for him in the woods. They quarrel with him and finally trounce him when he tries to defend himself. Another time they besiege him in his cabin for five days. He eludes them, plunges into the woods, and is surprised to encounter his friend, Jim Jeffries, the famous pugilist, who is on a hunting trip. Robert explains his predicament and Jeffries gives him boxing lessons. At the Blondeau house it is thought that Pennington had fled in terror, and Eugenia is broken hearted.

When Pennington starts back over the trail he encounters Jean and a band of conspirators, who are plotting to get Blondeau's land. Jean has intercepted a letter addressed to Blondeau in which it is stated that the old French grant of land will soon expire unless a new claim is filed and Blondeau will lose everything. Pennington knocks him down and takes it from him. Reading the letter Pennington learns that $150,000 must be deposited in Montreal by midnight to save the claim. He saddles a horse and races to Montreal, where he arranges by telegraph to have the money sent from New York.

When Pennington returns to the woods he is met by Louis and Roland and accused of being a coward for running away. In a fight he beats both of them. They apologize for ever doubting him. The elder Blondeau is still doubtful of the young man's courage, when officers ride up and inform Blondeau that he has lost his land. Pennington then explains why he went away, and he is warmly received by all members of the Blondeau family, especially Eugenia, who confesses her artifice, after Pennington tells the imaginary "Marie" that he is loyal to her sister.

THE WOMAN PAYS (Rolfe—Five Parts—Nov. 15.).—The cast: Valli Valli, Marie Empress, Edward Brennan, John E. Bowers, Paul Lawrence, Mrs. Julia Hurley, Mae De Metz.

Beth Coventry, the ward of a wealthy aunt, and a favorite in society, is beloved by three men. The three suitors are Philip Murdock, a rich broker, Marquis de Tourville, a brilliant and polished social lion, and John Langton, a young banker, poor, but promising. Following an impulse, coupled with the advice of her aunt, Mrs. Gordon, Beth accepts Langton and they are married.

Mrs. Connie Beverly, a young widow, whose husband was Langton's best friend, mistakes Langton's kindly interest in her for a deeper feeling, and becomes infatuated with him. In her determination to win his love she plans to ruin his home. John and Beth are living in a modest little home which they call "Love Cottage." Mrs. Beverly calls on Beth there and finds her reading letters which she had written to the Marquis before her marriage, and which he has graciously returned. Her eyes fall on the pages of one letter in which Beth had written among other things, "Europe is so far away I must have time to consider your proposal." This letter Mrs. Beverly steals.

Murdock, too, is bent on breaking up the Langton home if possible, hoping yet to have Beth for his own. With Mrs. Beverly he makes an appeal to Beth's vanity, her one failing, and they succeed in getting her dissatisfied with her lot. Beth insists on John leaving the "Love Cottage" and moving into a pretentious home, where she proceeds to entertain lavishly and far beyond John's means. Murdock, posing as John's friend, induces him to speculate in stock. John is desperate as Beth tells him he will lose her love if he can not supply her with an unreasonable allowance. He is finally driven to misappropriate bonds entrusted to his care by Betha's aunt.

The couple become estranged. John strives to recover the money he has lost in speculation, while Beth gives herself up entirely to social life. At the height of a great ball, lightning strikes a tree, it crashes through a window and falls upon Beth. She is severely wounded and a cut on her face mars her beauty for life. John is called, but Beth mistakes his look of pity for one of disgust. The next day she leaves to go in seclusion while a specialist attends her.

Mrs. Beverly tells John she has gone away with the Marquis, and to prove it shows him part of Beth's letter, written when she was considering De Tourville's proposal before her marriage. Beth's aunt dies several months later, leaving her fortune to her niece. Rather than face the disgrace which will attend the exposure of John's theft of the aunt's bonds, he determines to end his life at the "Love Cottage." Beth's lawyers notify her about the missing bonds. She protects John by saying she knows where they are, then she goes in search of him. Through a strange coincidence, they meet at the "Love Cottage," where they renew their first vows of love.

DIVORCED (Triumph—Oct. 25).—The cast: Hilda Spong, Fred Eric, Charles Hutchison, Lester Chambers.

Ralph Manson, who marries Leonore Fenwick, is led astray by a stage siren. His wife obtains a divorce, and is aided in sending her son to college by Robert Hadley, who induces her to live with him under promise of marriage as soon as he can obtain a divorce.

His wife dies and he refuses to keep his promise to Mrs. Manson. The son, finding a check given by Hadley to his mother, has his suspicions aroused. The son demands an explanation, but his mother declares it was only a business matter. Then follows a scene between the son and his mother's lover, in which Hadley, after being enraged by the boy's words, disregards the plea of Mrs. Manson and tells the son the whole story. This causes the mother to lose her reason and she shoots Hadley. Mrs. Manson is tried for murder. The jury acquits her on the ground of temporary insanity, holding Hadley responsible for her loss of reason.

Eugene has been in love with a girl who, in spite of the whole sordid affair and parental objection, sticks to him, and the play ends with the mother and son reunited, and the son wins the girl with whom he is in love.

THE COWARDLY WAY (Triumph—Nov. 15).—The cast: Florence Reed, Isabel MacGregor, Maud Hill, Bennett Southard, Ferdinand Gidmarsch.

Eunice Fielding, rich, with every wish gratified, is a spoiled society girl and a moral coward. She is in love with Jack Harcourt, who is poor but brave, and who is deeply in love with her. Marjorie Harcourt, Jack's sister, reads Eunice's character and warns her brother against the advisability of marrying her. Nance St. Germain, who is a mystic and a student of theosophy and occult lore, talks to Eunice, but all her warnings are without avail, and Jack and Eunice marry. They are happy for a time, but lack of money causes embarrassment. Eunice is ignorant of everything relating to the value of money, cries over their difficulties, and Jack in despair calls Marjorie home from college and confesses the state of affairs to her. He begins to neglect Eunice, who is highly indignant, and becomes very cool to Marjorie.

Bob Fisher, who is in love with Marjorie, is sent West by Jack to look after the details of a mining scheme and Jack, short of money, cuts Eunice's allowance. She makes a great fuss over this, and in a talk with Marjorie Jack is informed that there is a baby coming. Jack is called away on business, and while he is absent Eunice loses a lot of money gambling, and fearing comment talks of committing suicide. Eunice talks with Nance, who warns her against committing suicide, and tells her to confess to Jack. Jack returns and gives Eunice all the money he has, leaving himself broke. Marjorie comforts her brother, but he tells her that things have gone wrong, and the mine is a failure. Marjorie tells Eunice, who becomes despondent and leaves a note for Jack, tries the cowardly way, takes gas and dies. Jack reads the note and goes insane.

Eunice, in the halls of Death, sees Death, who tells her she is not dead, but must wait until her time comes. Death shows Eunice her home with Jack crazy. Jack sees her, and Eunice sees Marjorie and the nurse and Marjorie greeting Bob Fisher. She goes after Bob, and the face of Death changes as he sees the reconciliation. Marjorie and Bob marry. Jack's insanity continues. Eunice is there and is seen by Jack but invisible to the others. While they are there, Death sends a child to Eunice with the words, "I was to be your child, but now I am to be Marjorie's." Jack, rendered clairvoyant by his insanity, sees and hears this, and makes his first rational remark to the others, saying "Marjorie is to have a little girl," and in surprise Marjorie tells it to Bob. The baby is born, and Jack wants to see it but is refused.

Death awakens Eunice, and tells her that whenever she wants Jack's mind restored she is to call on him, but after that she has done so Jack will never see her again. Jack threatens to get the child and kill it if it is not shown to him. Eunice in terror at the danger to child hastily calls on Death to restore Jack's reason, which is done, and she disappears from Jack's sight. With Jack sane again there is a happy reunion of all except Eunice, who sees Death again. Death shows her in his book where she has redeemed herself by her renunciation.

Quality Pictures Corporation, 228 West 35th St., New York City a western town, is full of sentiment and has a craving for love. Frank Barclay, a young civil engineer, loved by Aline Webster, comes to the town to build a railroad bridge. Kate meets him at her father's hotel and tries to attract his attention, but he disregards her. Frank saves the life of Jim Travers, an engineer on the bridge, and they become friends. Kate, trying to make Frank jealous, flirts with Jim, but only amuses Frank. Frank tells Jim of his love and shows him pictures of Aline and her sister, Alicia, saying nothing of his preference. Jim goes East, meets the girls, falls in love with Alicia, marries her and plans a surprise for Frank. A newspaper makes a mistake and says he has married Aline. She writes to Frank telling him of the error. Kate gets the mail at the hotel, reads the letter and destroys it, giving the paper to Frank, who takes the story as truth, gets drunk, makes love to Kate, out of spite, asks Kate to marry him and after a rush for a license, they are married.

Recovering from his drunken fit, he is horrified to find what he has done, and has a quarrel with Kate. Jim and his wife, with Aline and her father, arrive at the town and the mistake is cleared up. Frank leaves the cabin. Kate sees him meet Aline, and is about to shoot her when she hears Aline tell Frank to go back to his wife. Frank's father dies and he takes his wife back to New York with him, where she learns to be more like the people he associates with. Aline flirts with Frank, but Kate keeps on with her efforts to improve.

Later, at a new big job in the West, where all are gathered, there is a labor riot. Aline shows cowardice and Kate surprises Frank by her bravery. Kate determines to be fair, tells Frank about the letter, and they quarrel, Frank leaving. Kate sends a note saying she will go out of his life, and Aline leaves one saying that a divorce will make everything all right. Going to the station, Kate sees strikers planning to blow up the works. Aline has an appointment with Frank, keeps it on the bridge, and is ordered away by Kate, who threatens her. Aline flees. Frank sees Kate's danger and calls her to come back. The explosion injures Kate, and as Aline is comforted by her sister, Frank finds Kate in the ruins, sees that she is the better woman, and tells her that it is she he wants, not Aline. Kate knows that her punishmnt is ended.

PARAMOUNT.

THE CHORUS LADY (Lasky—Oct. 18).—The cast: Cleo Ridgely, Margery Daw, Wallace Reid and Richard Grey.

Patricia O'Brien, known as "Pat"—the "Chorus Lady,' is a keen-witted, clean-lived young girl easily holding her own amid the temptations incident to her profession. She is engaged to marry "Danny" Mallory, a young detective, whose great ambition is to own a farm, marry "Pat" and leave the bright lights forever. "Pat" has a younger sister, Nora, whose yielding and idealistic natures "Pat" knows and she keeps her working in a country store "a million miles from Broadway," under the guardianship of a strict old woman.

Nora, stage-struck and envious of "Pat," leaves the store and turns up at the theater when "Pat" is rehearsing. Nora announces that she is going on the stage in spite of "Pat's" protests. Crawford, a young man-about-town, who is backing the show, struck by Nora's beauty and youth, gives her a position in the company. Crawford plies Nora with attention until she falls in love with him and "Pat" in her efforts to open Nora's eyes as to Crawford's true character, only succeeds in antagonizing her. Realizing that she cannot convince Nora or control her for long "Pat" begins a flirtation with Crawford. Nora fights bitterly to hold him. Danny becomes jealous and refuses to believe "Pat" when she explains that she is flirting with Crawford in an effort to disillusionize Nora.

At the dress rehearsal of the play in which "Pat" and Nora are to appear the star sends word that she is ill. "Pat" is given the chance to play the part. Knowing that "Pat" cannot leave the theater, Nora leaves a note that she is going to Crawford and slips home to pack. "Pat," half dressed to go on, finds the note, gives up her great opportunity, wraps herself in a cloak and in a cab hurries to Crawford's apartment. She arrives at Crawford's apartment first and leads Crawford into a declaration of love just as Nora appears. "Pat" demands that Crawford choose between them. Crawford chooses "Pat."

In the meantime Danny has been sent to get divorce evidence for Crawford's wife. They break into Crawford's rooms and Danny finds the woman to be his own girl. In the stormy scene that follows "Pat's" borrowed cloak slips from her shoulders revealing her in her underwear. With all evidence against her "Pat" is unable to establish her innocence. Danny cannot believe her innocent, but makes up his mind never to appear against her. Nora and the detective go, leaving "Pat" alone with Crawford. She promptly tells Crawford what she really thinks of him and he dismisses her from the company and orders her out of his rooms.

Danny resigns his job rather than appear against "Pat" and the divorce suit never comes to court. "Pat," out of a job, is unable to find another engagement and is about to be turned out of her boarding house when Nora, convinced of "Pat's" loyalty, telephones Danny and tells him the truth. Danny gets his farm and they all go to it, taking along as helper, "Bobs," the young assistant stage-manager, who cherishes an honest passion for Nora.

THE SECRET SIN (Lasky—Oct. 21).—The cast: Blanche Sweet, Hal Clements, Alice Knowland, Sessue Hayakaw and Thomas Meighan.

Edith and Grace Martin are twin sisters and the daughters of Dan Martin, a poor man out of work. While the father is out prospecting for oil with a young man, Jack Herron, the two girls and their mother keep the home going by sewing for a manufacturer of cheap garments. Grace is the sickly sister and while out in the street, resting, a drug fiend induces her to go around the corner from her home into Chinatown and purchase some opium. Grace gets her first taste of the drug and later, when an ignorant doctor gives her morphine to deaden pain she becomes a secret drug fiend.

The father discovers oil and the family becomes wealthy. Herron meets the two sisters and falls in love with Edith. This arouses Grace's jealousy. Edith discovers that Grace uses morphine and takes it from her. Grace tells Herron that Edith takes the drug, and so plans it that Herron discovers Edith with morphine in her possession, but his love for her does not change.

The place where Grace has been getting the drug is closed and she suggests to Herron that Edith will probably go to Chinatown after more. The three go to Chinatown for a dinner and Grace slips away to purchase opium and goes to a real opium den. Edith follows her but enters a fake den, is arrested and taken to jail. Herron goes on her bail. In the meantime Grace is taken out of the real den, robbed and left in the street, but is found by Jack and Edith, returning to search for her. Jack discovers that Grace is the real drug victim, and he and Edith are happy as Grace is taken to the country to be cured of the vice.

THE YANKEE GIRL (Morosco—Oct. 25).—The cast: Blanche Ring, Forrest Stanley, Herbert Standing, Howard Davies, Harry Fisher, Jr., Robert Dunbar, Joe Ray, Bonita Darling, Syd de Grey.

The race of the wealthy Gordon family in their crack yacht, "The Yankee Girl," to close an option on a valuable copper concession in Latin America and the political intrigue of the desperate James Seavey of the rival Pacific Copper crowd to prevent their arriving on time culminates when the quick-witted Jessie Gordon braves old President Ambroce Castroba, whom Seavey has bought out, in his own palace. The breezy blarney of the pretty North American girl goes to Castroba's head, as does the champagne she fools him into thinking she is drinking with him, and he forgets his agreement with Seavey and accepts the $5,000 first payment on the copper property, even lending her, to make it up, $50 which she had to pay one of his grafting customs officers.

But before the transaction can be binding another final payment of $60,000 must be made in twenty-four hours, and Seavey redoubles his sinister efforts to frustrate it. He has already had Philip Gordon, the father, kidnapped by the ruthless Morales and his bandits and held prisoner in a secret hacienda in the interior, and he proceeds to establish a quarantine about "The Yankee Girl," so Jessie Gordon cannot possibly return and get the $60,000 which is on board. Jack Lawrence, a former sweetheart and now United States consul, executes an expert flank movement, however, by purchasing the yacht outright for his government, and when Seavey presumes to question his right to take possession he resorts to collar-and-elbow tactics and hurls the plotter bodily into the sea. Securing the $60,000 from the safe Lawrence makes a dash for shore in the launch, meeting Jessie who single-handed has rescued her father, and together they close the copper deal with President Castroba. The ensuing love scene is strictly Jessie Gordon's and Jack Lawrence's business.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY—Chapter 24—"The Mad Millionaire" (Two parts—Oct. 11).—Arthur Stanley, known as John Powell, the mad millionaire, has bought the diamond from the sky at the circus auction. He determines to give a wild fete that shall be memorable. At this fete, he rides horseback into his grand ballroom, attired as Sir Arthur Stanley, the cavalier ancestor, and recites the supernatural story of the falling of the diamond from the sky in a meteor, three centuries ago. Esther confronts him in his luxury and dissipation, as he is about to bestow the diamond from the sky upon the wanton Vivian. Realizing now that Esther is near him in the flesh and is not the chimera of a diseased brain, as the conspirators had convinced him, Arthur repudiates his wicked companions and appeals to Esther wildly for her love and forgiveness—and he proffers her the diamond from the sky. In this dramatic moment, Esther learns the awful truth—the man she loves is a drug weakling. She throws the diamond from her in disdain; it flies through the window somewhere in the night and Esther walks proudly away, leaving him sobbing in his weakness and degradation, surrounded by the evil companions who have dragged him down to this. Outside, in the dawn the diamond from the sky hangs on a rosebush.

THE HEART OF THE BLUE RIDGE.—(Oct. 18—Shubert)—The cast: Clara Kimball Young, Chester Barnett, Robert Cummings.

Plutina, a country girl, lives in the moonshine district, when a reward is offered by the Government for information leading to the arrest of the makers of unlicensed whiskey. She is in love with, and is beloved by Zeke, a young farmer, and is happy in the possession of a pet bear. Dan Hodges, who secretly operates an illicit still, falls in love with Plutina, but she repulses him. In revenge he kills Plutina's bear. Zeke gives information about the illicit still, but Dan and his followers escape into the mountains. When Zeke learns of the death of the bear, he swears to punish Dan. He pursues him and the men have a fight, Dan getting the worst of it. But he escapes further into the mountains.

The still is destroyed and Dan vows vengeance on Zeke. He reappears and tells Plutina that he must have her or he will burn her house down and kill her grandfather and sister. Plutina is now genuinely alarmed. Zeke is appointed overseer of a lumber area, and he and Plutina have every prospect of being happily married. Dan Hodges starts another still and swears to get Zeke. Plutina directs the officers to Dan's still and Zeke goes away. But Dan and his men again escape. Dan meets Plutina and tries to kiss her; she resists and he drags her with him, intending to take her to the mountains with him. Zeke, on his journey, learns of Plutina's plight and hastens back to rescue her. Meanwhile, Dan insists that he will marry Plutina, but she spurns him. Zeke organizes a dog hunt in order to rescue Plutina and arrives in time to confront Dan as he is striking Plutina. There is a fight between the two men on the edge of the cliff. Hodges plunges on to the rocks below and Zeke rescues Plutina from an awful death.

THE LURE OF WOMAN (Armstrong—Oct. 3).—Sleeping Wolf is an Indian who has been sent east to get an education at the expense of the government. He takes the name of John Found and becomes civilized. After leaving college, where he was popular, he went back to the western army post, near where his tribe lived, became interpreter, and had charge of all dealings with the Indians of that district.

At the Post there is a young officer, Captain Lane, who is in love with Katie O'Day, the daughter of Pat and Marie O'Day, wealthy ranch owners. His love is returned, and all goes well until a Mrs. Van Allen of New York, a widow, comes out to visit the wife of Colonel Williams, the Post commandant. The Colonel's wife is a matchmaker, and she wishes to marry Mrs. Van Allen to Captain Lane. Mrs. Van Allen takes to this idea, but in order to accomplish her end she realizes that she must get Katie O'Day out of the way. One day, when she knows that Katie is in the next room and can hear what she says, Mrs. Van Allen tells Mrs. Williams that Captain Lane has a wife in an insane asylum. This almost breaks Katie's heart, and she will not speak to Lane, who does not understand the change that has come over her.

Meanwhile, John Found, the Indian, has been a success as a go-between between his people and the whites. The Colonel has placed confidence in him and respects his ability. Found is attracted to Mrs. Van Allen, and she, because of Lane's indifference to her, encourages Found. He becomes so fascinated that he forgets all about Startled Fawn, an Indian girl, who loves him. One day he proposes to Mrs. Van Allen, and then he is brought to his senses when she says he has insulted her. She says that she would not marry a "filthy Indian." This enrages him, and he incites the Indians to revolt.

He divides the Indians into two batches. One he sends to attack the O'Day ranch. The other he hides in ambush near the Post. The O'Days are taken by surprise. Lane is at the O'Days and in a skirmish is wounded. Katie escapes from the rear of the house and starts for the Post for help. The Indians see her and fire after her. The firing is heard by a detachment of troopers who come to Katie's rescue. They shoot down the Indians. Meanwhile, Found has gone to the Post and informed the Colonel that the Indians had gotten beyond his control and had revolted. He names a place some distance away where he says there is a disturbance. He advises the Colonel to send his entire garrison there. The Colonel, not knowing Found's treachery, does as he says. As soon as the soldiers have left, Found pulls down the flag and tramples on it, which is the signal for his Indians to sack the Post. Found breaks into Mrs. Van Allen's room and drags her around by her hair in revenge. Mrs. Van Allen dies from fright.

Having rescued the O'Day party, the troopers return to the Post. A sharp fight occurs, but the troopers outnumber the Indians. Found fights stubbornly, but is wounded, and Startled Fawn persuades him to escape with her. Lane has during this time explained to Katie that what Mrs. Van Allen had said about him was false. Found, the renegade, escapes and is never captured; the Indians are subdued, and the story ends happily for Katie and Lane.

BOUGHT (Shubert—Nov. 1).—The cast: Frederick Lewis, Ethel Gray Terry.

Horace Frambers, an impecunious literary man receives the following offer: Helen Talbot, daughter of a rich financier, has trusted her lover not wisely but too well. She is about to become a mother. Her lover went down on the Titanic. If Frambers will marry Helen Talbot and save her name he will receive $10,000 and a position in Mr. Talbot's office.

Frambers marries Helen; the child dies. Mr. Talbot gradually trusts and likes Frambers; but Helen despises her "bought" husband and intrigues with other men. So Frambers resigns his position and pays her back her $10,000. He deserts her and tells her to get a divorce. Talbot's business is failing and Frambers helps him recover it. Then Frambers returns to his room to die, as he thinks, but when he recovers from his illness he finds Helen by his side. She loves him and they are made happy with a happiness that has not been "bought."

THE LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER (Blaney—Five Parts—Nov. 22).—A girl marries a man who is a drug fiend. Her rejected lover takes advantage of the fact to ruin the husband, persecute the wife and endeavor to obtain possession of the child, who is heiress to a large fortune. Husband and wife are shut up in an asylum, but they escape. The husband is cured of the morphine habit; the couple are reunited and they render their thanks at "The Little Church Around the Corner," where they were married. The villain is defeated and the child and her money are saved.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN (Lubin—Five Parts—Oct. 25).—The cast: Rosetta Brice, George Clarke, Richard Buhler, Francis Joyner.

Prince Sigismund has devoted his life to the study of socialistic principles as laid down in Payne's "Rights of Man." His daughter, Princess Lorha, is also a firm believer in these principles. Sigismund has collected an enormous treasure with which to finance a revolutionary movement of the Socialists. Dr. Carew, an American Red Cross surgeon, endeared himself to the family, and Sigismund, desirous of the safety of his daughter, arranges that she shall marry the doctor. The morning set for the wedding, the battle front moves up to the vicinity of the Prince's castle. Subsequently the ceremony is performed.

The newly married couple leave the chapel and as the Prince turns for a last word with the witnesses, a shell enters, explodes and kills all of the party with the exception of the Prince and a piece so badly wounds him in the throat that he cannot talk. He staggers to the salon, where Dr. Carew keeps him alive long enough for him to write the word "Orisval." Princess Lorha feels that there is no happiness for her until she has accomplished the work her father had her promise to carry out for him before he died, and she and Dr. Carew, following up the clew that the dying man had given, finds a set of plans to the dungeons in which the treasure is hidden and they leave the castle in search of it. They succeed in finding the way into the chamber, and after Lohra has gathered the treasure Dr. Carew, realizing his wife's position, enters into her plans.

During this action his Royal Highness, who is enamored of Princess Lohra, has brought his staff to Sigismund's castle, thinking of making it his headquarters. They find the dead Prince and on his person find a paper which shows them his revolutionary move against the government. His Royal Highness goes for a walk in the grounds and sees the horses with which Princess Lohra and the doctor expect to make their journey to the meeting place of the Revolutionary Committee. At the same moment Dr. Carew and the Princess leave the treasure chamber and on their way to the horses they find the body of a dead spy, who in dress and appearance greatly resembles the doctor.

Lohra is about to mount her horse when his Royal Highness tries to prevent her leaving. Carew hears her call and, rushing to her aid, overcomes the Prince. Lohra dashes away and Dr. Carew escapes. Guards hearing the Princess cry rush and fire at the retreating figure of Dr. Carew. Following him they find the body of the dead spy and believe they have killed the Princess' assailant. General Brunn and staff are attracted to the scene and the old general finding a button on the ground and later comparing it with an entirely different kind of button on the spy's uniform has his suspicions aroused.

In the meantime Carew, far away, removes the beard he has been wearing, and as far as possible changes his appearance. He returns to the scene of the fight, shows his American passport to Brunn and treats his Royal Highness. While this has been going on Princess Lohra has been riding towards her gold and passes through scene after scene of the horror and desolation of war as it exists to-day in Europe. His Royal Highness is removed to the house and Carew finds on him a case containing the picture of his wife, Princess Lohra. While he is examining it, his Royal Highness regains consciousness and becomes enraged at his having the picture and orders him placed under arrest.

Lohra reaches the meeting place of the Revolutionists, turns over to them the treasure and, word being brought in by a look-out that the troop of cavalry which was dispatched after her is in the vicinity, she quiets their fears by telling them it is an escort sent after her, leaves and rides away to be arrested by the soldiers. They bring her back to her home and in the garden she is met by General Brunn, who demands of her the name of the assailant of his Royal Highness. Upon her refusal to tell anything, he orders up a firing squad. As they have their rifles leveled, his Royal Highness, who has witnessed this action from the window, comes into the scene and, for his own purpose, takes Lohra from the soldiers and into the house, where he attempts to make love to her.

The Princess sends a message to the doctor, telling him to make his escape immediately, if possible, and she will meet him in some way at the American Embassy. A few minutes later Carew is brought into the room and, suddenly seizing a revolver from one of the guards, succeeds in escaping in the excitement. Lohra rushes to another part of the house, where she is followed by his Royal Highness. The Prince, in his mad endeavor to overcome Princess Lohra, brings on an epileptic fit to which he is subject and Lohra escapes by the window.

Carew, although slightly wounded, succeeds in getting to the treasure chamber and later reaches the Embassy shortly after his wife. In the Embassy they find happiness under the protection of the Stars and Stripes.

A BLACK SHEEP (Selig—Five Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Otis Harlan, Rita Gould, Grace Darmond, John Charles, James Bradbury, John D. Murphy, Fred Morley, Lou Kelso, Jack Rollins, Emma Glenwood, Virginia Ainsworth.

To the town of Tombstone, in which Goodrich Mudd is known as the "Blacksheep," comes a burlesque company headed by Lida, a captivating woman. Mudd, the sheriff and Underdog, who works a mining claim in Tombstone and who is the boon companion of Mudd, compete to win the charmer, and in order to raise money with which to entertain Lida, Mudd, whose daily occupation is that of lolling in a hammock, plays a game of cards with the sheriff. During the game the manager of the theatrical company also takes a hand, but loses considerably. The money the manager takes from the company's cash box which is fastened to the treasurer of the company, who is handcuffed to the bedstead. Mudd takes Lida to dinner, and when he is far under the influence of wine, the burlesque queen hoists the $19 worth of fried chicken and other delicacies in a basket to the girls in the room above who have not eaten a thing for several days. But Tombstone's omnipresent bad man is always on the job, and when he sees the basketfull of eats going up, he empties the contents into the cash box, which he had previously discovered and from which he had abstracted the balance of the company's receipts, lowers the box into its original place and "beats it."

The theatrical manager cannot pay the hotel bill, so the proprietor attaches the wardrobe of the players, leaving them nothing but their stage costumes. Subsequently a lawyer arrives from Chicago, who tells Mudd that he has been left $2,000,000 by his aunt who recently died, and that he may obtain the fortune if he complies with the provisions in the will which are: (1) he must live in the Mudd mansion in Chicago; (2) must acquire culture; (3), place a wreath on his grandfather's grave; (4) must get married to his cousin, Ada Steele, within 99 days; (5) if Ada refuses to marry him, he must marry someone else in 99 days; (6) to decline the terms the money will revert to his other cousin, Percy Vere.

Great is the consternation of all present at the reading of the will when Mudd refuses to abide by the terms, and it is only when the crowd threatens to kill him that he finally agrees. He goes to the Mudd mansion in Chicago and takes all his friends with him. The lawyer informs Percy and Ada of the terms of the will, and as these two young people are engaged to be married, Ada contrives to get the fortune by "stringing' Mudd along until the last day when she will flatly refuse to marry him. It will then be too late for Mudd to get a wife, and the millions will go to Percy. Then he and Ada will get married.

Percy and Ada go to the Mudd mansion, and Mudd tries to make love to Ada. She blows a whistle, which is the cue for Percy to come to her assistance; but he does not appear, for he has been captured by two female burglars who find upon him an incriminating letter from Ada Steele. The burglars offer to return the letter for $100,000. Some time later Ada and Percy are walking in Lincoln Park when they observe Mudd trying to put a wreath upon the spot in the lake where his grandfather met death by rocking a boat. He also recognizes the female burglars nearby, and tells them to kidnap Mudd until a certain time has passed when he (Percy) agrees to reward the burglars. They comply, and Mudd mysteriously disappears.

The time for Mudd's marriage is near at hand. Fearing that Percy may not live up to his word, the female burglars decide to watch him, and their suspicions are confirmed when they hear him say to Ada that the millions will soon be his and "The Spiders," whom the female burglars are called, can go hang. In revenge "The Spiders" give orders to release Mudd, who arrives at his mansion at 11.53. "The Spiders" are there, too, and they flaunt the letter found in Percy's pocket, revealing its import, and adding that Ada's absence proves that she has turned Mudd down. Mudd doesn't become alarmed, for he, at the last minute, marries Lida, who has always loved him.

CORT FILM CORP.

THE WHIRL OF LIFE (6 parts—Oct.).—In this production Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle make their debut in the legitimate of motion pictures. When the film begins to unwind Mrs. Castle is still Irene Foote. Her father and mother appear in the picture by proxy only. They are supposed to be scheming to marry Irene to a member of the Stock Exchange. One afternoon while at Rye Beach Miss Foote, who is a clever swimmer and diver, comes up from a deep plunge close beside Mr. Castle, who is also a salt water plunger. They introduce themselves. After that Irene turns a cold shoulder on Crosby, the Wall street man, and she is all in all to Vernon. Early in the film they depict the betrothal kiss. Then they go home to Yonkers to ask the consent of her father. But Irene's father cannot permit a union with anyone "whose head is in his heels." Vernon is driven from the door.

Then appears Irene's little pet dog as messenger in a clandestine courtship. He is an intelligent little fellow and carries notes between Vernon, who is hiding behind the hedge, and Irene, sitting on the veranda. In one of the most ardent missives he says he has an opportunity to go to Paris. Must he go alone? He must not, his lady love replies. She makes an appointment to meet him at The Little Church Around the Corner. They are next seen in an ill-furnished room in Paris. They are most dejected. A faithful colored servant, all the way from Yonkers, who has stuck to Irene through thick and thin, goes out and shoots crap with the Parisians, wins every time on a seven or eleven throw, and buys bread and meat galore for the starving household. Irene and Vernon spruce up and go to the Cafe Paris for a night of fun—"hang the expense."

At the request of a wealthy American they do a few dances and from that moment Paris is wild about them. Then back to America and fame. But not so fast! The villain is in the way. He is no other than Crosby, the rejected suitor. He now has become a theatrical producer. He learns that the Castles are to open Castles-by-the-Sea on the same night his big production is to be launched and all is lost unless the Castles are stopped.

Meanwhile Vernon and Irene are living at their country place at Manhasset, L. I., all unconscious of impending fate. You see them at play around the place, automobiling and such. Crosby sends a decoy telegram calling Vernon to New York. When he is away the villain and seven evil-looking bandmen kidnap Irene on the beach as she steps out of a canoe and is telling the villainess, who had been out with her, how lovely everything is. They gag her and tie her and carry her away in Vernon's car. But Vernon, who is speeding to the rescue, sees the trick. The kidnappers escape him, but only for a little time. They hide Irene away in a cheap roadhouse and treat her roughly. Crosby drinks hard and says there will be no Castles at the opening of Castles-by-the-Sea that night. But Vernon still pursues now with his faithful police dog. The two track the kidnappers down, and you see the dog scaling the wall, climbing in the window. Vernon climbs, too. He sees Irene being mauled, drops through a hole in the ceiling, lays out Crosby and releases Irene, and they escape in their car with the dog.

But the gas runs out and they have to resort to horses. From that they take to the water, for they must open Castles-by-the-Sea. The motor boat fails and they set out for Long Beach in a small boat. The next you see of them a big green roller is wafting them ashore, right in front of their place. Irene falls overboard, but Vernon is right there with the daring stuff and he goes over the side and drags her ashore. Irene and Vernon change their clothes from wet to ballroom attire and then they dance. But when it comes to dancing the Castles are the real noise by themselves. The picture ends here with "the Castles living happily ever after."

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE PRICE OF AMBITION (Oct. 25—Two Parts).—The cast: Fred Roland, Graham Velsey and Ethel Grandin.

Walter Scardon is a young stock broker who, while successful in business and making a comfortable living, is made discontented by his desire for great wealth and business standing. His wife, Ethel, is devoted to him, heart and soul. Walter meets a king of finance, Dudley Hale, and tries to interest him in a big deal which, if successful, will more than treble his own fortune and place him among the business men who count. But Dudley Hale has no great faith in Walter's ability and refuses to enter into the deal. They leave the club where they have been talking over the matter, and Walter is walking home, when suddenly Dudley clutches his arm, bidding him look at a woman who is passing in a taxi. Walter sees that the woman is his own wife, Ethel. He conceives the idea of using Dudley's decided interest in Ethel to his own advantage, and tells Dudley that the woman is his sister, and invites the financier to call that evening and meet her. Dudley agrees and Walter, leaving him, hurries home. He tells Ethel that she must use every effort to charm Dudley that evening and also that she must pretend to be his sister instead of his wife. Walter believes that if Dudley thinks her a single girl he will be more likely to love her and allow himself, through her influence, to be led into Walter's deal.

Ethel is horrified at the idea, but her love for her husband is so unselfish that she agrees to do as he wishes. That evening Dudley calls and Ethel is so charming that he begins to love her whole heartedly, much to Walter's delight. The two men also talk business and Dudley agrees to think over entering into his host's business scheme. The next day Walter brings Dudley home with him and Ethel is forced to carry on the deception again. This state of affairs lasts a few days and Dudley has almost agreed to join issues with Walter, when he discovers, through seeing her picture in a society journal, that Ethel is Walter's wife, and he reproaches Ethel for having so tricked him. She cannot defend herself without betraying her husband and so permits him to think that she alone is to blame. He leaves her and writes to Walter that the deal is off. When he commands her to write to Dudley and try to make peace with him she also realizes his selfishness and lack of honor in his nature and her love for him begins to die. Ethel refuses to write to Dudley, whereupon her husband is brutal to her. He decides that he must take the initiative himself and, accordingly, writes to Dudley a rather affectionate note asking him to call that evening and signs Ethel's name.

Dudley visits Ethel and seems very sure of his welcome—the respectfully tender love which he has before shown for her now gives place to passion and when she reproaches him for his presumption he shows her the note which he supposes to have come from her. Ethel denies all knowledge of it. Just as she is about to confess everything Walter, who has been listening to the entire conversation, enters and interrupts her, Dudley then whispers to her that a welcome will await her at his home at any time, then leaves husband and wife together. Now comes phone calls that Walter's option on the mine in which he has invested every cent is shortened. He must put up more money that very night or lose everything he owns. Walter now begs Ethel to obtain money from Dudley at any price. She refuses and will not listen to his commands; thereupon he changes his tactics and pleads with her to save him for the sake of her old love. She remembers how dearly she once cared for him and at last agrees to go to Dudley and ask him for the money. Dudley at first welcomes Ethel very passionately, but she has now determined on frankness at any cost and so tells him the whole truth. He realizes that he has misjudged her and gives her the money for Walter just because he loves her. Walter, who has followed Ethel to the house unknown to her, overhears her confession, but does not know that Dudley has given her the money. He breaks in and storms and makes himself general disagreeable and when he is shown the check his manner changes and he fawns upon Dudley. Walter now has gained his point, so tells his wife that she had better return home with him; but it is now Ethel's turn to voice her feelings. She tells Walter that he has killed her love for him and that her affections have been won by Dudley.

For one moment Dudley and Ethel gaze into each other's eyes, each reading the love in the other's soul—then they part—Ethel returning to her girlhood home where she means to wait until such time as she shall be free to marry the man she loves.

Easy Money for Theatres

Extra Profits You Are Not Now Getting

$360.45 the First Month from Butter-Kist Corn Popper

You have the ideal crowd to buy—you should be getting the profits. Scores of motion picture theatres are now reaping a year-'round harvest of spot-cash sales from BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn in addition to regular paid admissions.

Profits $25 to $60 weekly. One theatre took in $360.45 the first month. Smallest theatres selling $4 to $5 worth of BUTTER-KIST in the evenings alone. Remember that every dollar you take in is seventy cents profit.

BUTTER-KIST

Corn Popper

This famous money-maker requires only 26 in. x 32 in. of space. You have plenty of room for it in lobby, foyer or down near stage.

Runs itself and turns out 1 bag in 48 seconds—$3.75 per hour!

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

Everybody Wants It!

"Everybody's" asking for famous BUTTER-KIST—the big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling and clean—evenly buttered and piping hot—untouched by hands. The finest flavory, savory treat that ever tantalized a mortal's palate—with a coaxing fragrance that makes people hungry for BUTTER-KIST. Its delicious flavor brings people back to your theatre. Records show big increase in attendance.

Pay From Your Sales

A small payment down brings you the BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper with all privileges included. Then it pays for itself in short order. Let us show you.

"The Little Gold Mine" FREE

Handsome new book, "The Little Gold Mine," gives facts, figures, proof of profits and photographs. Sent FREE. Write for it at once—you lose $4 to $16 in sales every day you delay.

This is the absolutely silent ventilator that will make money for your Moving Picture Theatre.

It will keep the air sweet, clean and wholesome. It will carry off stale odors—do away with that close, stuffy atmosphere that keeps so many people from the Movies. It will make your Theatre attractive from a physical as well as a mental standpoint, and will bring you increased patronage and profit.

"GLOBE"

VENTILATORS

are absolutely noiseless—no moving parts to get out of order—trouble-proof, storm-proof—easy and inexpensive to install. Put one in and forget it—it will be on the job every minute 24 hours a day.

"GLOBES" have been in use for over 30 years wherever perfect ventilation is required.

Just send the coupon and we'll tell you how little it will cost to permanently improve the popularity of your theatre.

Photodrama From a New Angle!

The Photodrama
—Its Place Among the Fine Arts

By William Morgan Hannon, B.L.,LL.B.

This book gives a practical and theoretical view of the photodrama, enabling the reader to see this great art as a whole.

What Mr. Epes Winthrop Sargent, the great authority on the photoplay, says of Mr. Hannon's book:

"It is, I believe, the pioneer work in the second stage of the literature of photoplay. Most persons who have sought to write from this angle have been sadly handicapped by their intense ignorance of their subject. It has been a pleasure to read one who speaks with authority."

What the New York "Sun" says:

"A eulogy of the aesthetic qualities of moving pictures has been written by William Morgan Hannon, who is in the business, in 'The Photodrama—Its Place Among The Fine Arts.' The author has full command of the connoisseur's vocabulary."

What the Jacksonville Fla. "Times-Union" says:

"The writer has taken time to critically review the photoplay as a factor in the present day amusement life, and discusses its claims from an artistic standpoint. Briefly summarizing the essentials of a photodrama, the writer asserts there are efforts worthy of success and others that do not deserve more than the passing attention given. It is a very interesting treatise on the 'movies' in the present day acknowledged as the most stupendous, as well as astonishing method of entertainment and diversion of the day. The little book is exquisitely designed and printed on handmade paper with initial letters in colors."

"Grumpy"

says:

"America has so courteously received my 'Grumpy' and has been so flattering in its tributes to my ability in that part, that I was glad for the opportunity to appear in a motion picture play which would give the masses another, if not greater, 'Grumpy.'

"I am satisfied with 'The Antique Dealer.' I am satisfied with my work in it. I am content that motion picturedom shall judge me by the way I have played my part. I am satisfied with Mr. Harley Knoles' direction, and that he is one of the greatest directors today in motion pictures."

and others, is the second Premo release. The first was "The Master Hand," starring Nat C. Goodwin, a World Film release.

So marked was the success of "The Master Hand" that the Premo Film Corporation has made plans to produce between 8 and 15 features a year, starring eminent players in parts adapted to their abilities.

THE FALLACY OF "THE PENNY WISE AND DOLLAR FOOLISH" POLICY HAS BEEN REPEATEDLY EMPHASIZED IN THE EXPERIENCE OF MANY EXHIBITORS.

Perhaps you are one who has proven the truth that a manufacturer's say-so does not make facts. No doubt you have spent your hard-earned dollars in experimenting with some of the so-called screens.

Let past experience be a lesson to you!

Stop experimenting, investigate and install a Mirroroid, the screen of known and proven value. Send for large free samples now. Test, compare. Your own brains to be the judge.

☞BEAR THESE MIRROROID FACTS IN MIND!

FIRST—It's canvas, the only reliable backing for screens.

SECOND—It's coated under pressure by machinery, and not applied by hand or air brush, thus positively preventing cracking or peeling.

THIRD—It's the only screen made with a rough or matte finish, thereby guaranteeing perfect angle definition.

FOURTH—It's guaranteed to 5 years.

FIFTH—You are protected against infringement suits, by the Mirroroid patents issued June 9, 1908, and February 16, 1915.

SIXTH—Mirroroid will reduce your juice bills.

SEVENTH—The Mirroroid guarantee is backed by an incorporated company, who have been in business under the same management at the same location since organization 7 years ago.

EIGHTH—Over 9,000 satisfied Mirroroid users, and the number constantly increasing.

NINTH—You cannot afford to take chances with the future.

TENTH—Mirroroid is a positive profit getter for you.

Remember if you really want the best you will install a Mirroroid, the perfect screen.

Simply—One of Many

New York City, Sept. 25, 1915.

Harmo Electric Co., 126 W. 46th St., City

Gentlemen:—We willingly and cheerfully testify to the entire satisfaction and pleasure experienced by us in everything connected with the installation by you of the Model "D" Harmo Pipe Organ in our new 77th St. Theatre, Broadway.

The beautiful quality and tone of the instrument have been highly and favorably commented on by our patrons. The action, theme and sentiment of the photoplays have been immeasurably enhanced by the wonderful manner in which the organ music lends itself to their projection, and consequent increased appreciation.

Very truly yours,
Clyde H. Slease
John Stewart
Managers 77th St. Theatre, Broadway, New York City.

TO OUR PATRONS—

WE advise that arrangements have been made whereby this publication will be mailed on Wednesday, as against Friday heretofore. This change has been made in order that we might make the MOVING PICTURE WORLD a more valuable medium, and to comply with the request of our thousands of subscribers who use this paper exclusively in booking their shows, etc.

This change in publication date will make it possible for all readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD east of Denver, Colo., to secure a current issue before Saturday afternoon, and our Coast readers should get their copies with first hand and authoritative news no later than Monday.

Heretofore each issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has carried the date of one week in advance of the day on which it was actually printed. Under the new arrangement this will not be necessary, and the paper will carry the Saturday date of the week in which it is printed.

Assuring you of every cooperation for the benefit of all branches of the great moving picture art.
